concerns, of greatly reducing the cost of sewing machines. The National Sewing Machine Co. has a capacity of 1,000 sewing machines a day. They are not sold by agents, such as the Singer Sewing Machine Co. has all over the country, on pay-They are not sold by agents, such as the ments of a few cents a week or a dollar a month. There is in the city of Chicago a great mercantile concern dealing in all kinds of merchandise (Montgomery Ward & Co.), who sell only to the consumer at retail. In sewing machines they deal exclusively in those manufactured by the National Sewing Machine Co. at Belvidere, Ill. I have their catalogue, from which I find that they sell a very good sewing machine, warranted for five years, for $8.75. They sell another machine, called a "High-arm model," with drophead and a complete set of nickel-plated attachments, seven drawers, ball bearing, and warranted for 10 years, at $11.95. They have other models which are finer pieces of furniture, and possibly with some additional improvements, selling at $14.50, $15.85, $16.95, $17.40, $18.75, $19.95, $20.75, $22.95, and as fine a sewing machine as was ever made in the world, with all attachments, for $25.50, which is the highest price quoted. Gentlemen may talk about it being necessary to pay $40 or $60 or $75 for a sewing ma-That is not the case, as I can demonstrate to anyone interested. There is another great mercantile concern in the city of Chicago dealing in all kinds of merchandise and, among other things, sewing machines, and that is Sears, Roebuck & I do not understand that they handle any of the machines made in my town, but think they handle a machine made by an independent sewing-machine factory at Dayton, Ohio, and possibly others. They quote prices of these machinesat $8.45, guaranteed for five years; one at $9.85, guaranteed for 20 years; and others at $12.95, $14.20; $17.25; $18.75, and the highest at $23.70. These prices are retail prices taken from the catalogues of these merchants.

If placing sewing machines on the free list should, as I think it would, result in consolidating the business in the hands of the trust, it would not be long until the people would realize that the destruction of competition at home by driving out of business the independent factories would result only in increasing prices to the consumer rather than in lowering such Mr. Chairman, I was surprised the other day to hear a gentleman on this side of the House say that, in his opinion, there was no man or no industry in his district that would be injured by the passage of this bill. I think he was mistaken. and that his view is entirely too narrow. I remember of hearand that his view is entirely too harrow. I remember of hear-ing a few years ago a political speech by the greatest living American, Theodore Roosevelt [applause], upon the text that "We all go up together or we all go down together." And that is true. We are interdependent. Prosperity, when it comes, affects all in greater or less degree. Adversity, when it comes, strikes the high and the low and is felt in every industry and in every section of the country. If men in my district are turned out of employment, if they are no longer able to secure employment and remunerative wages, they can not buy the products produced in the district of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hubbard]. I wonder if he is prepared to say that no man and no industry in his district was injured by the last tariff act which the Democratic Party placed upon the statute books of this Nation. I had supposed that every industry and every section of the Nation was affected, and affected injuriously, by the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Act while it was the law of the land. Most of us remember those days of business depression—closed factories and idle men. Idle not from choice, but because there was no work to do and no prosperous industries to furnish employment and pay living wages. Some factories were able to run half time or to pay half wages, but even such were the exception to the general rule. Three millions or more of honest laboring men were out of employment, looking for work and unable to find it. Coxev's army was tramping down the grass all the way from the district of the gentleman from Iowa to the Capitol Grounds in Washington; and in the great cities all over the land men were living at free soup houses because of the universal depression in all lines of industry which then prevailed. I wonder if anyone in the district of the gentleman from Iowa was injured then! If I remember correctly, the farmers of my district and of his district were glad to get one-half the prices or less than one-half what they now get for the products of the soil.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FULLER. No; I decline to yield. If we could have time to discuss this matter, I should be glad to yield to the gentleman or to anyone on that side of the House. As my time is limited. I can not do so.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the industries of this country and all through the Middle West, everywhere, have been built up under the protective policy of the Republican Party. That policy is the same to-day that it has always been in the past. If the Republican Party is wrong now as to that policy, then it has always been wrong. If the Democratic Party is right now in its policy of free trade, revenue tariff, and destruction of American industries, then it has always been right. Men may change, but the policies of the two great parties upon this question have not changed and can not The Republican Party stands for the policy of protection to American industries and to American labor to-day as it has always stood. This policy of protection was the policy of Abraham Lincoln, of James G. Blaine, of William Mc-Kinley, and of all the great leaders of the Republican Party in the past. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I am not a standpatter nor a standstiller. do not advocate that there should be no change in tariff I believe in progress and reform. I believe that as conditions change tariff schedules sometimes become too high and sometimes too low and should from time to time be changed to meet existing conditions; but they should not be changed, and the business interests of the country unduly disturbed, except on accurate knowledge and scientific principles, so that a reasonable degree of protection should be maintained and no injury done to any American industry. I believe in America for Americans. I believe in giving the American manufacturer, the American business man, the American farmer, and the American wage earner a preference over every other country on earth. It is not claimed by the Democratic sponsors for this bill that it is a protective measure at all or that it is intended to afford any protection to any industry. as to these items proposed to be placed upon the free list, that is absolute, pure, unadulterated free trade, for the benefit of the foreigner only, and which, in my judgment, can not possibly benefit any American citizen or any American industry, unless it is the great trusts and combinations, which need no protection.

Mr. Chairman, I am firmly convinced that the attempt on the part of the Democratic majority in this House to pass this bill, which I believe to be in the interests of the foreigner and of the trusts and large combinations and against the interests of the people, is purely a political play, intended to fool the people and to catch votes. If all gentlemen would vote their honest convictions, it could never pass, and the industries of the country might rest secure. Under the pretense of striking at the trusts, at the "malefactors of great wealth," as they have been called, let us not strike down and destroy the smaller but no less important industries that under the Republican policy of protection have been built up in almost every town and hamlet in the land. The trusts, the "malefactors of great wealth," do not need protection. They can take care of them-The little factories that now flourish all over the land do need protection, and can not live and compete with the trusts and with foreign cheap labor without it. They furnish the mouths to be fed by the farmers and create the best home They are the salvation of the Nation against market on earth. the rapacity of the trusts. Do not strike them down, as you propose to do by this bill. I appeal to you, my Democratic brethren, and to you, my Progressive Republican friends on this side, think well before you act, look well before you leap. On the result of this tariff controversy in the American Congress depends our future welfare and prosperity and the welfare, the stability, and the greatness of our American Republic. The questions we vote on to-day are greater than the political future of any man or any party. They are fraught with far-reaching results to the prosperity and welfare of the American people. We have grown great and powerful and prosperous as a Nation by reason of our policy of protection to all American industries, and the toil of the laborer has been rewarded more than in any other land under the shining sun. Let us consider conditions rather than theories; let us cease to play politics for the votes of the unthinking, and as patriots who love our country and its institutions do fearlessly and intelligently our duties as the representatives of a great people, and if we do that we will defeat this bill and every attempt to turn us from the beaten path that has led us up until we have become the greatest Nation on earth.

We took the tariff off from hides and placed them on the free list, depriving the farmer and the stock raiser of that protection. It was loudly proclaimed that that would make cheaper shoes for the people. Has anyone bought shoes any cheaper since that was done? We reduced the tariff on lumber in the interest of the consumer. Has anyone noted the reduction in the price of lumber? The courts have dissolved the hydra-headed monster, the Oil Trust, and the price of oil has gone up. The Tobacco Trust has been strangled, and still our cigars cost the same. If you want to kill off the big man or the big industry of a community, fire at all the little ones with the excuse that you are only trying to put the big one out of business. The little industries you may destroy; the big ones will still The whole Democratic propaganda as to the tariff is futile; worse than that, it is an insane delusion; and if it should be successful—which God forbid—every man, woman, and child in all the land, save only the "malefactors of great wealth," whom they profess to aim at, would suffer irreparable I am no pessimist. I believe, with all my soul, in the future greatness of the Republic. Prosperity may be stayed by the Democratic Party, but we shall "come back." We shall, in this year 1912, elect a Republican Congress, a Republican President, and the industries of the people will be protected, and we shall march on as a truly progressive people to a new, a greater, and a lasting prosperity.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, it is an absolutely complete answer to the amendment and the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fuller] in reference to sewing machines to say that the American to-day beats the world in the manufacture of them. We make for export $9,000,000 worth of sewing machines per annum, and we imported in 1911 a miserable $52,000 worth. American sewing machines go not only to Europe, to Africa, but to the Orient as well. They are used in China, Japan, and Siam. And it is an unanswerable proposition that under the present circumstances in the trade the American is able to compete with labor and with cost of manufacture the world over upon this article.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to discuss sewing machines. As we have about reached the conclusion of the consideration of this bill, I desire to take a few moments in which to make a brief reference to two or three of the criticisms which have been made against the bill during the progress of the debate.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] presented earlier in the debate an amendment that had reference to this particular paragraph in the bill. He proposed that all patented articles which are included in this free list should carry the same rate of duty as the present law provides if imported from the plants of American manufacturers who took their plants abroad. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Connecticut when he gets stirred up about that proposition is engaged in the occupation, which is always self-terrifying, of seeing ghosts. Instead of relying, as he usually does, upon cold facts and figures, he gives rein to his imagination and then becomes himself frightened at the result. He would have us believe that the American manufacturer, the moment we take the duty off of typewriters and sewing machines and printing presses and goods of that kind, will tear down his plant, disorganize his business, throw away the millions of dollars he has invested in it, expatriate himself and his business, and go to Europe to engage in the manufacture of these articles in order that he may send them into the United States free of duty, while under present circumstances, manufacturing them in this country, he, of course, is not obliged to pay any duty on them whatever.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

No; I will not yield just now. If the fears Mr. PALMER. of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] in regard to this proposition meet with no more enthusiastic support on the part of the manufacturers of the country than his recent predictions of disaster have met with in his own district, I for one shall not have much fear of the result. Two or three weeks ago the gentleman from Connecticut made a speech in this House, in which he attacked the course of the Democratic Party during the extra session. He sent his speech broadcast throughout his It contained all of the charges against the Democratic Party which have been repeated and reiterated during this debate, and the gentleman from Connecticut, evidently in pride of his work-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HILL, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be allowed to finish his remarks, and that then I may be allowed to reply.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am bound to object to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would ask if it is the intention then to cut off debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intend to cut off debate very shortly. Mr. MANN. I shall not object to any debate in the House on any bill like this, even if the gentleman does apply the gag to us.

Mr. PALMER. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], in sending this speech, which he called "The Story of the Extra Session," to his constituents, asked a number of them to comment upon it, and I have before me now a sample of the replies which have been coming to the gentleman from Connecticut from his own people. It is a letter from a gentleman who resides in Stratford, Conn., and he says:

Mr. Hill, of the fourth district, has sent me "The Story of the xtra Session," asking me to read it and to comment upon it. In ply I sent him a recital of my experience last fall, which is as reply I sent him a recital of my experience last fall, which is as follows:

"My wife and I came into New York by steamer, having with us 7 yards of serge cloth, which was to be made into a dress for my wife. This cloth cost in London $11,90, and was declared, as required by law. On those 7 yards of cloth I was obliged to pay two duties—a duty on the weight and a duty on the value—44 cents a pound and 55 per cent ad valorem. These duties amounted to $9.24, making the cost of the $11,90 article $21.14.

"A tax like this is unjust and excessive and can not be defended on the plea of protection to an American industry, as anyone can understand."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

If this-

He says-is a sample of the provisions of the present tariff law, I am not surprised at the universal dissatisfaction which prevails in regard to it— [Applause on the Democratic side.]

and I hope the Democrats will succeed in changing this law with some thought for the interests of the consumers.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PALMER. No; I will not yield. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PALMER. Now, reference has been made by one of my colleagues to the fact that, although this is a revenue bill, we show a loss in revenue. I feel that that is a matter which deserves a little attention. I made the statement earlier in the debate that this bill would increase the revenues of the Government over the revenues produced by the same schedule in the present law. I have not yet given the figures, but I desire to say now that, according to the estimates of imports made by the experts in the Treasury Department, this bill if it becomes a law will raise $1,207,899 more than the same schedule in the present law raises. The reason why those figures are not the same as those contained in the report of the committee is this, that the revenues in the report, under the Payne law, are the book revenues, not the actual revenues. The revenues in 1911 under the Payne tariff were $18,300,737, but of this $2,531,496 went out in the way of drawbacks, leaving a net revenue of $15,769,241.

We have laid the rate on tin plate, which constitutes 94 per cent of the drawbacks under the iron and steel schedule in the present law, at such a rate that tin plate will come into the country not for reexport, but for domestic consumption, and therefore the duty which we shall raise on tin plate will be actual revenue which will go into the Treasury and stay in the Treasury, so that the estimates are that under the present law. the drawbacks will not amount to more than half a million which, being deducted from the estimated revenues dollars, under this schedule, will leave $16,977,140 as the actual net revenues under this present schedule.

Now, somebody else has said, Mr. Chairman, that we have not had public hearings upon this bill. We discovered that the greatest engine of delay against a revision of the tariff law was a public hearing. If we opened this proposition to manufacturers of the country to come here ad libitum, we could not have got through the schedule for months and months. As a matter of fact, it has been published throughout the country for many weeks that we have been engaged in the preparation of this schedule, and not only hundreds but thousands of persons interested in the schedule have communicated with the committee, have filed their letters and their briefs, or have been personally heard. The committee has exercised patience with all of them [applause on the Democratic side], has given every man a fair and full hearing, and has denied to no man the right to present his case in any way he saw fit, except by taking up the time of the committee and of this Congress by holding public hearings before the full Committee on Ways and Means.

As a result, Mr. Chairman, I declare that we have written a bill which is fair to the manufacturers, because it will not reduce their profits below an honest return upon the real capitalization of the manufacturing enterprises in this country. have written a bill which is fair to the consumer in the country, because under it, just as surely as a gun is iron, the price of products covered by this bill will be somewhat reduced, for the benefit of the man who must use them every day. And we have written a law which is fair to the Treasury of the United States, for it will go further toward raising the money necessary to operate the Government than the present law.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this bill will receive the approval of the country. It will, in my belief, receive the approval of the Senate, and if it shall not receive Executive approval, then the responsibility for denying to the people the benefits of this legislation will be upon the President and his party and not upon us. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I admire the President. I am not so rank a partisan but what I can see that he possesses patriotic instincts and impulses, and I believe that if left to his own judgment he would sign this bill when it reaches him. And I hope, for the sake of the American people, that when it does reach him he will not be again swerved from the path he would follow if he pursued his own judgment, by those advisers who desire to continue the favors to special privilege which this bill denies. on the Democratic side.] I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that after all has been said and done, after all the guns have been fired against the bill, nothing but general talk has resulted, and no man has put his finger anywhere upon any point in the bill where he can show that it will injure honest business enterprise or the interests of the American consumer. And if the President shall now fail to assist us in giving relief to the people from the burdens of an unjust tax, we have made up our record and we are ready to go to the jury for a verdict. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be limited to 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Who will have the 20 minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will be divided between the two

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me this side ought to have the 20 minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] has occupied the time-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to give 15 of the 20 minutes to that side of the House, if the Chair will recognize gentlemen on that side. I am even willing, if you will do it by unanimous consent, to close debate in 25 minutes, and to give 20 minutes to that side of the House. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in 25 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and 5 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in 25 minutes, 20 minutes time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and 5 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman from Alabama make that 30 minutes? There are two or three gentlemen who want to say just a few words on this subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We have already had a considerable amount of debate on this paragraph. If there had been as much on every other paragraph it would have taken a week.

Mr. PAYNE. When the matter of debate on this bill was talked of in the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman was anxious to limit the general debate—
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I tried to make an arrangement.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman was anxious to limit the general debate to one day. To that we said we could not agree. The gentleman did limit it to one day. At the same time he said that we should have all the five-minute debate we wanted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Within reason. Mr. PAYNE. Even if it took a week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I never said you could debate it for a week under the five-minute rule. I said you could have reasonable debate, and I have given reasonable debate on this.

Mr. MANN. This is not reasonable debate. Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman talked about six days.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. MANN. I object to any such limitation of debate on this important paragraph.

Then I move that debate on this para-Mr. UNDERWOOD. graph close in 20 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not wonder the gentleman is afraid to have debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that debate on this paragraph close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann), there were—ayes 111, noes 70.
Mr. MANN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Underwood, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] take my place.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. PALMER and Mr. MANN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 112 yeas and 86 nays.

So the motion prevailed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I can not sit quietly by and let go unchallenged the false pretenses under which this bill is being jammed through the House and through the committee without proper consideration anywhere, either in the Committee on Ways and Means or in this Committee of the Whole.

Why, the gentleman from Alabama in the few remarks he made in general debate said that 14 schedules in the present law had only 12 days of general debate in the House. He forgot to mention that we met then at 11 o'clock and continued until 6, and then took a recess until 8, and continued until 11 and 12 o'clock at night, debating each day twice as many hours as the five hours allowed on this bill. There were 130 hours of actual general debate upon that bill. He said it covered the whole tariff, and that there were 14 schedules, and that is true; but he suppresses the fact that one-half of those sched--half of 14-could easily be selected that would not have so much dynamite in them, so much interest to the industries concerned in them, as there is in this great schedule of the tariff involving so much of the business interests of the country and so intimately connected with the people of the country. It was a false pretense to offer to this country such an excuse for the beggarly debate of five hours on this bill.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] talks about hearings before the committee. The committee has not sat a single minute for hearing anybody upon this schedule or on any other. [Applause on the Republican side.] Does he think there is no Ways and Means Committee here except himself and the gentleman from Alabama and a few other people that happen to be for the time being in the majority in this House? Has the minority no rights? Do they represent no one? Have not they a right to be at every hearing that comes before the committee?

Oh, but they say they had petitions and letters from people throughout the country. Why, in God's name, did you not publish a single line of these letters or a single line of these petitions? [Applause on the Republican side.] Why bury them in the archives of the committee and keep it all to yourselves until you get in the very last hour of this very brief debate before you inform any of the minority members of the committee that you have such papers on file there? Why wait until you are driven to the wall? There are men here that might have voted for your bill who are protesting against the great injustice of your action here on this bill. Why do you do it? Why not publish the letters and petitions that you have? When we were considering the tariff bill we had a list of over 2,500 people engaged in business, both of importing and manufacturing, in the United States, to whom we sent a daily report of every hearing before that committee. We published thousands of volumes of the full hearings, which were eagerly sought and of which you can hardly find a volume now that has not been distributed to some party in the country who knows about schedules and is interested in them. What have you sent out? Why, you do not dare to publish a decent edition of the Tariff Board report on wool and woolens. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What are you afraid of? Are you afraid of the light of day? Do you think that you are going to fool the American people? Do you think you are fooling them by coming in here and cutting down duties without any regard to the industries that will be affected, without any regard to the wage earners whose wages you are going to cut down, and then by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, with that smile on his countenance, saying, "We are cutting these duties, but business interests need not be afraid, because there is nothing in any of these bills which we seek to enact that will harm any business interest in this country."

No; that is true. There is nothing in your bills that will do any harm. Why? Because you will never enact them into law. [Applause on the Republican side.] You would not bring this bill in here if one of you believed it would ever be the law of the land, in view of the next election. You would not dare to do it; and if you had the power, you would not dare to enact the legislation in this bill that you bring in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman extend his remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, that does not affect the arrangement that there is only 20 minutes of debate, which will leave 10 minutes more of debate after the gentleman has concluded?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, suppose it does not? Mr. MANN. We understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] said if the President is left alone he will sign this bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has watched the President of the United States with blinded eyelids, if he has the slightest belief that he will sign this bill. What does the President say, and what has he said? He says that he is in favor of levying a tariff according to the Chicago platform, a tariff that will make up the difference in cost abroad and at home, after that cost has been ascertained. Does he say that he is for a bill that will cut all protection out from every industry under this bill? Did he ever promise any such thing as Why, you are not frank enough always to admit it, and when you do you wind up your speeches by the bland assurance that your bill will injure no industry. The President has de-clared himself in favor of a Tariff Board. He appointed one, a bipartisan board, composed of gentlemen who understand their business, and who understand it so well that when their report on the wool schedule came in here it paralyzed you gentlemen on that side. [Applause on the Republican side.] You did not want to print it, and you did not dare suppress it, in toto. So you suppressed it by the beggarly printing of 500 copies, and you refuse to report a resolution to print any more. The country wants it. Oh, I was told the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that the Committee on Ways and Means had some copies.

Well, gentlemen had been there and had asked for enough copies to simply supply the demand that had come to them. Instead of getting 25 or 30 copies they got 5. They were members of the committee. The gentleman knows there have not been copies printed for general distribution. He knows that the woolgrowers of the country and the woolen manufacturersyes, the workingmen of the country-want to know what the report of this Tariff Board is. He knows that our constituents want it because they are watching you as they are watching me, and they want to know the basis upon which we bring in

Are you afraid? What are you afraid of? What is my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] afraid of? Oh, he says that he has been challenged by some manufacturers in his district and told that he is going to have a hard time of it. Well, that was not any news to him. He knows he will have a hard time of it when he comes up for reelection next fall. He knows he can not fool those people up there with any such rank nonsense about increasing the industries in this country by taking away the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. He knows that; but he has got to march along with the Democratic Party, like one brother who wanted to vote on this amendment in favor of leaving the duty on machine tools this morning, but told his constituents that he did not dare to vote that way because he would lose his standing in the Democratic Party. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He is like my friends from Colorado who offered amendments and saw them voted down, and, I suppose, are now working themselves up to the point where they are going to take this bill blindly. The people will not be blind when these gentlemen go before them next fall. They will hear from the people at that time. Go on, gentlemen, close your doors, keep out the minority of the committee, report to your caucus, swallow the words of your boss, lie down and let him walk over you, pass any sort of a bill that he seeks to bring in, and do not allow any amendments to it, although you see as plainly as you saw when those other bills were before the House that the committee had made the grossest kind of mistakes. For instance, let us take your free-alcohol bill when you cut out the revenue on alcohol. Oh, I could stand here for an hour and enumerate those mistakes. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] enumerated them in his speech.

Why are you in such haste in putting this bill through the House? Are you afraid of the "back talk" that is coming from the people all over the country because of their honest criticism and condemnation of this bill? Come, now, be honest and own up that it was argued at the caucus that this bill applause on Republican side.] [Cries of "Regular order!"] must be hurried through the House before the members of your party heard from their constituents, else the caucus rule might be broken.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] said a few minutes ago that we were exporting 10 per cent or more of our machine-tool products, while the amount of the imports was small. Well, we are exporting 10 per cent of the machine-tool products in this country, and the imports are not large; but if you had made a thorough inquiry you would have found out, from those who know, the further fact that 90 per cent of the machine tools exported were "specials," not made in foreign countries. Other exports were of standard tools, which were better, and better made than those produced in the country to which they were exported, and the American tools were bought there at a higher price because of the excellence of their make and design.

If this committee, in their secret conclaves, had examined further, they would have found that we reduced the tariff on these tools from 45 to 30 per cent, a reduction of 331 per cent, three years ago; that since that time there had been a larger importation of standard machine tools into this country, and that the trade was growing. If the gentleman had ascertained these facts, it would have absolutely destroyed the argument he has been making here in favor of putting machine tools on the free list.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] has called up here one communication from one constituent of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], and another gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted to call up a letter from a constituent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania which would have made hot reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the gentleman from New York have an additional five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we are operating under unanimous-consent agreement—

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. We are not operating under any unanimous-consent agreement at all. The gentleman, as usual, is wrong.

Mr. PALMER. We are operating under an order of the committee that the debate close in 10 minutes from now.

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order is demanded. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment is to strike sewing machines from the free list. The effect of the adoption of the amendment would be to make them subject to a duty of 25 per cent. Under the present law they are dutiable at 30 per cent. If there be any article affected by the tariff, Mr. Chairman, that should now be placed on the free list it is sewing machines. They are required in every household in the United States. They are not luxuries, they are needed and useful articles. By reason of the exactions and the unjustifiable prices maintained by the company which practically monopolizes the manufacture of sewing machines the poor of this country have been subjected to an extortion that is appalling. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Standard sewing machines sell in this country from $40 up to $60 and $75. The same sewing machines are exported-

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not yield—for sale in other countries, and the export price is less than $8. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Moody's Manual contains some information about the manufacturers of sewing machines about whom there is so much solicitude on the other side of the House. Under the same old plea that the employees of the manufacturing establishments will suffer if the duty be lowered we are begged to make no reduction in the tariff on sewing machines.

In Moody's Manual for 1909, the well-known publication containing information about various corporations, appears the Singer Manufacturing Co.: Incorporated originally in January, 1864, in New York, with a capital stock of $500,000, to take over the business of I. N. Singer & Co. The present company was chartered in New Jersey on February '20, 1873, under special act, for the purpose of manufacturing sewing machines, etc. Plants are located at Elizabethport and Netcong, N. J.; Kilbowie, near Glasgow, Scotland; St. John, Quebec, etc. In November, 1904, the Singer Sewing Machine Co. was organized to act as distributing agents for the products of the company. In 1906 the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co. was absorbed. The company handles over 80 per cent of the world's output of sewing machines. It owns its own iron mines and timber land.

Capital stock: Originally $1,000,000; increased in 1887 to $10,000,000, and again in December, 1900, by a stock dividend of 200 per cent, to $30,000,000; par, $100. Transfer office, Elizabeth, N. J. Cash dividends have been paid (quarterly, January) in recent years as follows: 1898, 30 per cent; 1899, 100 per cent; 1900, 20 per cent; 1901, 7 per cent; 1902, 9½ per cent; 1903, 12 per cent; 1904, 31 per cent; 1905, 13 per cent; 1906, 8 per cent; 1907, 11 per cent; 1908, 12 per cent; January, 1909, 5 per cent.

Annual meeting, third Wednesday in September.
Offices, Elizabeth, N. J., and 149 Broadway, New York.

This brief statement discloses a condition justly demanding redress. This corporation is capitalized at $30,000,000, of which at least $20,000,000 apparently is water. It has paid as high as 100 per cent in dividends. Its earnings have been enormous and have been partly covered by its inflated capitalization.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the struggling infant in the industrial world that the gentleman from Illinois proposes under the specious plea of helping its employees to give the benefit of a protective tariff to the extent of 25 per cent. These enormous profits have been taken from the very poor of the country, poor seamstresses, poor housewives, and those who are engaged in the greatest of the country the sweatshops of the country, and who eke out a pitiable exist-ence in long and piteous toil. They have been at the mercy of this one dominating concern, and they have been compelled to contribute to the enormous profits of this corporation, which controls 80 per cent of the world's output of sewing machines. The solicitude of gentlemen on that side of the House that this industry be not affected, that it be not injured in its legitimate business, is typical. It illustrates the Republican viewpoint. This enterprise should be permitted to continue to extort from those little able to contribute unconscionable profits. This is the application with vigor of the doctrine that the manufacturers' profits should be protected, regardless of the effect upon the consumer, or whether the consuming public can justly be subjected to the burdens imposed.

This one item, Mr. Chairman, illustrates vividly the policy of the Republican Party. It is to protect the illegitimate profits of the manufacturer at the expense of the consumers, no matter what their condition may be. [Applause on the Democratic I congratulate the Committee on Ways and Means upon its action in declining to give those interested in this industry an opportunity longer to fool the people by submitting ingen-iously prepared statements that merely muddle instead of giving light. No hearings were required, no information could be given, no facts could be furnished that would not have imperatively demanded that sewing machines be placed upon the free list so that the throttling hand of this trust might be loosened from its grip upon the country and relief from its exactions afforded to the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KINDRED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recog-

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, as a commentary upon the whole steel situation, and as a sad commentary upon the deplorable industrial and labor conditions existing in the steel mills in this country, and in view of the copious crocodile tears shed by certain gentlemen on that side of the aisle in alleged sympathy for the workingman of this country, I desire to have printed in the RECORD, because I do not desire to take up the time of the House in reading it, the recent report of the Department of Commerce and Labor dwelling upon the outrageous labor conditions in the steel industries in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print the article referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDRED. The following is the article referred to as indicating the kind of "square deal" labor is getting under the Republican Payne-Aldrich protective tariff law, and also as plainly showing that the most highly protected special interests in the United States, such as the steel and woolen and many other monopolistic industries exacting millions of profits from the American people, under the existing tariff law, outrageously underpay and maltreat laboring men.

SLAVES OF STEEL—UNITED STATES REPORT ATTACKS LABOR SYSTEMS IN BIG MILLS—SKILLED ARTISANS OUSTED—WORKMEN "WHO CAN HARDLY SPEAK ENGLISH TOIL, EAT, AND SLEEP"—DOCUMENT, WHICH WILL BE SENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR TO THE SENATE, SAYS THOUSANDS WORK 18 HOURS A DAY AND 7 DAYS A WEEK—MANY ON DUTY 24 HOURS—PAY OF MAJORITY 14 CENTS AN

Following a sweeping investigation covering almost every great steel manufacturing plant in the United States, the Department of Commerce and Labor, in a report now ready for the Senate, accuses practically every corporation of maintaining a system of labor almost as cruel and unnecessary as the galley slavery of ancient times.

Making the direct statement that steel corporations have instituted a policy of eliminating skilled artisans and putting in their places the lowest form of unskilled workmen, who are paid 14 cents per hour, the report states that the men are at times forced to remain on duty without relief as long as 24 hours at a stretch, and that in some plants 18-hour shifts are the rule rather than the exception.

One-fifth of the 173,000 employees, the report says, of all blast furnaces, steel works, and rolling mills work 84 hours, or 12 hours a day for 7 days per week. Many of them go to their homes "only to eat and sleep." In May, 1910, the period covered by the investigation, it was found that 50,000 furnace and steel mill employees worked regularly 7 days a week, and that 34,000 worked 84 hours or more a week.

HOURS OF OTHER WORKERS SHORTENED.

"Added significance attaches to the conditions of labor here described," says the report, "when we consider that the general tendency for years past has been toward a shorter working day. Years ago the 10-hour day became almost a standard. Since that time further reductions have brought the working day to 9, and in many cases to 8 hours, and this reduction has been accompanied by a part holiday on Saturday.

"It is therefore in striking contrast to this general tendency in other industries to find in a great basic industry, such as that part of the iron and steel industry covered in this report, that approximately only 14 per cent of the 173,000 employees worked less than 60 hours per week, and almost 43 per cent worked 72 hours or over per week.

INCREASE IN UNSKILLED MEN.

"Another striking characteristic of the labor conditions in the iron and steel industry is the large proportion of unskilled workmen in the labor force. Not far from one-half of the 91,463 employees in the productive iron and steel occupations included within this investigation were of the class of unskilled workmen.

"In the blast-furnace department more than two-thirds of the 24,722 employees in productive occupations were unskilled laborers, a large proportion of whom do not yet speak or understand English."

The investigation was authorized by a Senate resolution, following the revelations that proceeded from the great strike at the Bethlehem Sieel Co.'s plant two years ago. Attention is directed to the fact that while there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation of the blast furnaces, no such necessity exists in other departments, where the 7-day work has also been the rule. In some cases the hardships of a 12-hour day and a 7-day week are added to by a change from day to night work, and vice versa, at the end of the week, one crew of men having to work a shift of 24 hours to make the change.

ENFORCED A REST ON SUNDAY.

ENFORCED A REST ON SUNDAY.

It is also pointed out that at the end of the investigation of the Bethlehem works in 1910 the president of the steel corporation directed the rigid enforcement of a resolution adopted three years previour cutting out a large part of Sunday work except in the blast furnace department.

"Since the beginning of the present investigation," says the report, "this matter of abolishing seven-day work for the employees in the blast furnaces, as well as for other employees of the industry, has received the attention of the Iron and Steel Institute, and a plan has been proposed which gives each employee a day of rest each week, and does away with the 18 hours or 24 hours of consecutive work."

This plan, it is stated, has been successfully operated by several plants throughout the country.

The report shows that of the 172,706 employees, 73,529 had a working week of 72 hours or more. Over one-fourth of all the employees had a regular working week of more than 72 hours. Over 35,000 had a working week of 84 or more hours, while only 14.39 per cent had a working week of less than 60 hours.

SEE TENDENCY TO LOWER WAGES.

"Nothing has been done by the manufacturers," continues the report, "nor have any proposals been made to lessen the proportion of men working 72 hours or more per week, or at least 12 hours a day for six days a week. The proportion, as shown in this investigation—43 per cent—remains unchanged, being unaffected by the plan to give the men who are working $4 hours per week one day of rest in seven.

"Large as is the proportion that unskilled labor forms of the total labor force in the iron and steel industry, steel experts have noted the fact that the tendency of recent years has been steadily toward the reduction of the number of highly skilled men employed and the establishment of the general wage on the basis of the common or unskilled labor.

"Of the total of 172,706 employees, 13.868 earned less than 14 cents per hour, 20,527 earned 14 and under 16 cents, and 51,417 earned 16 and under 18 cents. Those earning 18 and under 25 cents per hour numbered 46,132, while 40,762 earned 25 cents and over.

"A few very highly skilled employees received $1.25 per hour, and those receiving 50 cents and over per hour numbered 4,403."

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, it has just been stated by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] that no honest industry would be affected by this bill. In this connection I would like to read a letter from an honest man regarding what I have always considered was an honest industry

The letter is from the Hazard Manufacturing Co., of Wilkes-

Barre, Pa., and is as follows:

The letter is from the Hazard Manufacturing Co., of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and is as follows:

Hon. C. C. Bowman,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The ad valorem rate on wire rods, which we import from England and Sweden, under the new bill is 10 per cent, which makes us pay about the same rate of duty as before, i. e., 3 cents per pound specific. So we have no objection to the proposed duty on wire rods, we have no objection to 20 per cent ad valorem duty on wire, because we do not import same, importing the rods instead and finishing same in our own wire mill. Some of our competitors do import wire and they will be benefited by this 20 per cent ad valorem rate as against the specific rates in the present law, which amount of the specific rates in the present law, which amount of the specific rates in the present law, which amount of the specific rates and valorem. So much for wire, the pay bill, pay only 20 per cent ad valorem. So much for wire a pay bill, pay only 20 per cent ad valorem, and an addition a specific duty of 1 cent pay only 20 per cent ad valorem, and in addition a specific duty of 1 cent pay only 20 per cent ad valorem, and in addition a specific duty of 1 cent pay only 20 per cent ad valorem and in addition a specific duty of 1 cent pay only 20 per cent of the total cost of production. A duty of 20 per cent ad valorem does not begin to represent the difference in the cost of the finished product of equal grade in this country as against England, Germany, and Sweden. If a revision downward of the specific duty on wire is to be given up, it seems to me a reduction from 35 per cent advalorem would have been a fairly radical reduction in the wire, and there should have been a fairly radical reduction for manufactures of wire as under the old bill, i. e., 1 cent per pound, or if the ad valorem duty was to be retained the manufactures of wire should have carried 30 per cent ad valorem rate.

I am inclosing herewith copy of letter I wrote to Mr. Pathær of wire in subject, which is HAZARD MANUFACTURING Co., JOHN C. BRIDGMAN, General Manager.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOWMAN. I also wish to insert in the Record a copy of a letter addressed to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], as follows:

JANUARY 16, 1912,

Hon. A. M. Palmer,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: May I appeal to you as a Congressman from a near-by district and interested in industries of our State to fairly analyze the farmers' free-list bill, which, in lines 23, 24, and 25, clearly confuses wire rods, wire, and wire strands, used by the farmers for fencing, with wire rods, wire strands, and wire rope, used in an old and important industry, i. e., wire-rope manufacture. I don't think there is any objection to having rods, wire, and strands used for fencing in a free list, because such rods, wire, and strands are made of the cheapest Bessemer and open-hearth material, and I don't think the manufacturers of same require protection on account of the low cost of Bessemer and open-hearth rods in this country as against the cost of the same material in England and Germany. The labor component of such they should be limited in cost to I beents per poun the free limit. Wire rods are almost never used for fencing, because they are too large and stiff to handle. But wire rods, wile strand, and wire rope, the first costing more than I beents per pound, constitute an entirely different product and industry. Farmers use from one one-hundredth to one-liftleth of I per cent of the total wire rope used in this country. Wire rope is mainly manufactured for holsting purposes, either in tractors in the construction of buildings. Wire strand represents the first step in the manufacture of wire rope. While too stiff for holsting purposes, it is largely used for guying purposes by telephone, telegraph, electric light, and street rallway companies. Wire rope represents in the finished product a labor cost of not less than 60 per cent and as high as 50 per cent. Wire strand represents a labor cost of not less than 60 per cent and as high as 50 per cent, wire strand and wire rope. Moreover, the manufacturers must go into the markets of the world for the best obtainable wire rods for the manufacture of wire rope, and our own company very largely uses subjected, and human life is generally involved in the use of this product. Wire rope is practically worthess for strength and reliability when made of ordinary Bessemer or open-heart stell rountry ones and their manufacture should be given a medicate their product of the most exacting use to which two a rope are made. The three-tenths cent duty or the rod represents about 10 per cent and their manufacture which

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, this company is one of the most important in the country engaged in this line of manufacture, employing a large number of workmen at good wages. Even though this bill does not become a law the circumstances connected with its preparation and consideration by this body has caused great fear upon the part of the industries affected, There are troubles enough connected with the conduct of business at this time without this addition to the burden.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if no other Member desires to offer amendments to this paragraph I desire to offer a new paragraph.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

After line 14, page 22, insert the following:

"That the act entitled 'An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes,' approved July 26, 1911, and all other acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this bill. I think it is apparent that it relates to the repealing of an entirely different bill, and has nothing to do with the iron and steel schedule. Under the former rulings of the Chair it seems to me it is out of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to say a word on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, although the reciprocity act with Canada has not yet taken effect-

A MEMBER. It can not take effect.

Mr. STEENERSON. Part of it has taken effect, and the remainder of it may take effect whenever Canada passes a law reciprocal in compliance with its terms. That act prescribes different duties from the present bill. For instance, on motor vehicles it prescribes 30 per cent, whereas this bill proposes 40 per cent ad valorem. So if 40 per cent is a revenue duty, we ought to have it on imports from that country, and that act is in conflict with this. We can not very well have two acts imposing different rates on the same article.

Then there is the matter of cutlery. The reciprocity act provides for 27½ per cent, and this provides for 35 per cent, so that there is a lower duty. There are other articles on the free list here that are dutiable there, or dutiable there which are on the free list here, so that there is an absolute conflict.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am discussing it, showing that this bill can not be complete without a section repealing these conflicting laws. It ought not to be left to inference. This amendment perfects the bill. The question is whether it is germane to this bill, and not to the paragraph. This bill can not be a perfect bill without repealing the potential law which is in part in conflict with this law. Therefore, to perfect this bill will require this amendment, and therefore the amendment is germane to the bill.

If this amendment is inserted there will be no difficulty in administering it equally throughout the world; and certainly you can not have a perfect law without having it operate equally throughout the world. It must be germane. I want to say, too, that if you pass this amendment you will get more votes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This bill provides for rates of duty to be collected the day after it takes effect. Some of the articles enumerated in this bill being some of the articles enumerated in the Canadian reciprocity act, would not this bill constitute in part a repeal of the Canadian reciprocity act?

Mr. STEENERSON. Where the duties are identical?

Where the duties are not identical. Mr. MANN.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not think so, because the reciprocity act takes effect in consideration of something that Canada gives us, and therefore it is taken out of the operation of

Mr. MANN. This being enacted into law subsequent to the date of the Canadian reciprocity law, and containing no exception in its terms, either in this law or in the Payne tariff law, to which this is an amendment, would it not, in fact, repeal to that extent the Canadian reciprocity law, therefore making absolutely in order the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota declaring in express language that which is now implied?

Mr. STEENERSON. It would remove all doubt on the question; and therefore it perfects the bill, and therefore is germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule, as the Chair understands it. requires that all amendments must be germane to the subject matter of the bill where it is of a general character. In the mind of the Chair the proposition embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is not germane to the subject matter of the bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes had it

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. Steenerson and Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 98 ayes and 47 noes.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

Amend, page 22, after line 14, by inserting as a new paragraph the following:

"74. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not apply to articles imported from any country, dependency, province, colony, or other subdivision of government which imposes any import tax or duty or restrictive regulation upon the importation into such country from the United States of any meats of any kind whatever, whether fresh or pre-erved in any form, or of flour, live cattle, or cottonseed oil, or which prohibits or restricts in any way the exportation of news-print paper, wood pulp, or pulp wood."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the last paragraph read in the bill proposes to admit cash registers, typesetting machines, machine tools, printing presses, sewing machines, typewriters, tar and oil spreading machines free of duty.

The amendment that I propose will, if adopted, keep the duty on goods coming from countries which do not admit the agricultural products which are set out in the amendment. have heretofore offered amendments to the paragraph itself designed to obtain an enlarged market for our live cattle, for our preserved and fresh meats, for our cottonseed oil, and various other agricultural commodities, and upon every one of these amendments we have had a vote by tellers. On each vote every Republican voting voted in favor of the amendment to extend the markets of our agricultural products, and every Democrat voting voted against extending the markets for our agricultural products. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Upon what reasoning can it be said that we should throw our markets open to the world on these classes of commodities without requiring any exchange in our favor? I am in favor, when we open our markets to manufactures abroad, of obtaining some advantage in favor of our own people in those markets abroad. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I offered an amendment a moment ago that this provision in the bill should not admit free of duty tools or other articles named coming from a country which did not admit, free of duty, similar articles coming from our country to that country. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] a few moments ago stated that we were shipping machine tools abroad and paying a duty in foreign countries on those machine tools, and he has proposed in the bill that we admit their machine tools here free of duty. Every Democrat voted against the proposition that we should obtain from the foreign countries the same advantage of freedom from duty on our machine tools going abroad which the gentleman proposed to give to the manufacturers of those tools coming from abroad here, thus violating every principle of international relationship, proposing to open the markets of America to all foreign countries and obtain no additional market for this country. This bill and this paragraph to which I have offered an amendment will not open a single new industry in the United States. It will not gain one advantage to any manufacturer or producer of any commodity in the United States, but gives it all to foreign manufacturers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the present amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois be concluded in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that. This amendment ought to be discussed more at length.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, then I shall object if the gentleman is not willing to agree to my proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to cut off debate. The gentleman has the power to do so, and he ruthlessly exercises it

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not ruthlessly exercised it. I have offered the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman wants to give me five minutes and to cut off everybody else. I am unwilling to take that privilege and cut off debate on such an important proposition.

has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, section 73 of the present bill puts cash registers on the free list. That is one of the items to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just referred. This is a monopoly, as the record shows. I read from the Moody Manual Service the following history of the condition and growth of this industry:

and growth of this industry:

National Cash Register Co. (The): Incorporated in 1906 in Ohio as successor to National Cash Register Co., organized in 1899 under the laws of New Jersey. The business of the company is the manufacture of cash registers and kindred devices, and the application of its mechanisms to conform to special requirements in the systems of department stores and express, telegraph, and other companies who handle cash and are not retailers. The plant of the company is located at Dayton, Ohio, occupying 140 acres of land, and consists of 14 buildings, having 34 acres of floor space. It employs about 5,100 people at the factory and half as many more salesmen in this and other countries. At the present time there are, in use over 675,000 National registers. The company has now an output of about 9,000 machines per month, one-third of which are exported to foreign countries. Value of annual output, $18,000,000.

Capital stock: Authorized and outstanding, $9,000,000 common and $1,000,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred; par, $100. No bonds. The common stock was increased from $4,000,000 to $9,000,000 in September, 1906, and the $5,000,000 increase was distributed to the common shareholders as a stock dividend. The common stock is entitled to all profits after the payment of 7 per cent on the preferred. William Pflum (at Dayton, Ohio) acts as transfer agent and registrar. Dividends on preferred are paid January and July 15, and on common at discretion of directors, 2 per cent being paid in 1906, 1 per cent in 1907, and 4½ per cent in 1908.

In the Payne bill the Republican Party, for the purpose of protecting labor, the laboring man, levied a duty of 30 per cent on cash registers, of which this company has a monopoly. On the 1st day of April, 1909, four months before the date of the approval of the Payne bill, the National Cash Register Co. published its catalogue of prices in this country and in Great Britain, and I now wish to call attention to them to see whether the Republican Party did right when it levied a duty of 30 per cent in favor of the owner of this monopoly in the United States to see whether it was legislating in favor of the laboring man or in favor of a giant monopoly. This catalogue was published by the National Cash Register Co. and sent broadcast throughout Great Britain on April 1, 1909, and I desire to call attention to the difference in price between the sale of the same machines in the Kingdom of Great Britain and in the United States.

The only difference between the machines used in Great Britain and in this country is in the keys to correspond with the difference in the name and value of the circulating money. More work is required on those in use there than here because of the more numerous denominations of their money, and hence it requires more work to manufacture those used there. quote from the catalogue published by the National Cash Register Co. for use there, but not for this country. The catalogue has photographs of the different numbered machines, so there can be no doubt but what they are the same, and here is the difference in price, as follows:

These are the prices for the foreigner and the prices for the American citizen, yet when the Payne bill was passed a duty of 30 per cent as a protection was given this monopoly when, at the time, it was making this discrimination in prices between our own people and the people of foreign countries. What excuse can anyone give for such legislation? On what hypothesis could it be justified? Will anyone have the courage to attempt it? This bill places cash registers on the free list, and very properly so. Would anyone undertake to claim a duty protecting this manufacture is in behalf of labor? Certainly not, when these machines are sold by the manufacturer at less than half to the foreigner than they are sold to our people.

These prices are taken from the National Cash Register's catalogue, as used in Great Britain, and are used as an advertisement showing inducements why purchasers should buy at once. It was not intended for use in this country, but it found once. It was not intended for use in this country, but it found its way here, and from it we reproduce its prices. This ought to be convincing proof to the most ardent standpatter that protection is not for labor but for profit to the manufacturer and to furnish him a safe and secure method to plunder the consumers of this country. It is indefensible, and the people will not longer tolerate its injustice.

This great company, located at Dayton, Ohio, depends upon the American citizen to defend its property in time of danger, support it with patronage, and lend aid to the safe and pros perous conduct of its business; yet depending upon our people for all these, it extorts from them double the price for one of its machines that it requires a foreigner to pay. For this it can furnish no excuse

Does it need protection when it can make its machines at Dayton, Ohio, pay the freight on them to foreign countries, and sell them for one-half what it sells them to our people at home?

If so, upon what basis does it predicate its claim? Does it need it to pay its laborers' wages? If so, how can it reconcile its conduct in the difference of price? How can its laborers produce machines for foreign trade for one-half the price it requires of home consumers, as they have been doing, if a high duty is needed to enable it to operate? Is not the wage as high to make the machine for foreigners as it is for home consumers? If not, in what respect is the difference? Will some protectionist explain why? A patient public, wronged by the injustice done, requires a satisfactory explanation; it is entitled to it. What difference, if any, exists? They are the same machines, made from the same material, at the same time, and by the same men.

Mr. Chairman, there is none; and the unjust system should be tolerated no longer, and it should be wiped out, and installed in its place a system which will do justice to capital, labor, and consumer all alike and eliminate this species of special privi-[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close general debate on the pending amendment and paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to close all debate on the pending amendment and—

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] Mr. MANN. wants five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing, Mr. Chairman, to ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes and the gentleman from Illinois should control the time

Mr. MANN. I am not willing to accede unanimous consent to the proposition to close the debate on such an important proposition on which many Members desire to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman

I think it is discourteous to refuse the ex-Mr. MANN. Speaker of the House an opportunity to speak-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to close debate on the pending amendment.

Mr. MANN. It shows the tactics being followed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to close debate on the pending amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The Committee divided; and there were-ayes 84, noes 54.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. Underwood and Mr. Austin) reported that there were-ayes 107, noes 72.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending amendment. The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 81.
Mr. MANN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands tellers. Not a sufficient number—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I asked for tellers and the Chair did not ask gentlemen to rise who were in favor of taking a vote by tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who are in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. Evidently a sufficient number, and tellers are ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. Austin and Mr. ADAIR) reported that there were-ayes 52, noes 102. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 22, after line 14, by inserting as a new paragraph the following:

"74. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not apply to articles imported from any country, dependency, province, colony, or other subdivision of government which imposes any import tax or duty or restrictive regulation upon the importation into such country from the United States of any meats of any kind whatever, whether fresh or preserved in any form, or upon flour, live cattle, or cottonseed oil."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is one of a series of amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He offered one amendment to the provisions of this bill which provided that countries which discriminated against our trade should not have the benefit of free trade on the one hand and low duties on the other in our markets, which markets are one-third of the markets of the civilized world. Vote it down! Vote it down! Was the cry. followed by the vote of the Democratic majority. Now, if this law goes upon the statute books it would open free of duty our markets to all the world as to many articles, although on similar articles the world does not give us their markets. If this bill is enacted it would open our markets free of duty to the British products, because they have practically free trade upon all these articles. It would let in Germany and France and Austria-Hungary, and every other great producing nation on earth, while they pile upon our agricultural and manufactured products mountain-high duties. And yet, under caucus rule, you Democrats propose to give to them our markets free, although they shut out our products. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And, finally, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], as a concluding argument, to which I referred a little while ago, read that letter about the man from Connecticut returning with his wife from Europe and having to pay $9 on a dress pattern; and therefore anathema maranatha! I would go further if it were not for profanity. [Laughter.] And he thought on that account the whole tariff system ought to be wiped out.

For one I can stand and vote for this amendment and all similar amendments, for the reason that I am not willing that our cattle, our hogs, and our cottonseed oil, and all the products of our labor, on farms and in factories, shall be shut out of those countries other than England, and which would come in free under this bill as a mere gift. I am willing you should go to the country upon that proposition. [Applause on the Republican

[Mr. Cannon] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the gentleman from Alabama will not consent that a telegram held by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Focht] be read?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be courteous to that side of the House, but I am going to put this bill through.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Un-DERWOOD] asks that all debate upon this paragraph close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes of the time to be granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened with much interest to the remarks of the gentlemen on the other side of the House in advocating the passage of this bill, and yet from my standpoint, although they may be for tariff for revenue only, even from that standpoint this bill is indefensible, because, as I say again, you give them a free market or low duties without exacting similar privileges for us. And, mind you, we manufacture and produce in this country one-third as much as is produced in all

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], eloquent in gesture and in voice, like myself, having a birthright in the Friends' meeting, I do not believe ever got his special pleading in defense of this bill from the old Quaker stock.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the significant fact that he has left the Friends' meeting and I have stayed by them.

Mr. CANNON. And yet you will not find 1 per cent of our brother Friends agreeing with you touching economic policies.

I want to ask this plain, simple question: When the imports increase and articles that we now make will not be required in whole or in part, how can it fail to affect our home production?

Upon that bare statement, if this legislation is ever enacted, I denying and you asserting, we will encounter the real thing. Talk is cheap. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it. I sometimes wish, from the mere political standpoint, that you could enact this legislation. I measure my words when I say "from the mere political standpoint," although there would come trooping disaster upon men who live in the sweat of their faces, affecting their power of consumption and their power of production. And yet from the standpoint of my duty as a Representative in Congress I can not play politics. I stand and by my vote and by my voice will oppose this and all similar legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] put one very pertinent proposition to this House, and that was that in placing these articles contained in section 73 on the free list we were putting them there without compensation to our foreign trade; we being excluded, he says, from their markets on these propositions, or being taxed on those articles in their markets; he holding that we should maintain a tax on them in our market. Why? For the benefit of the American manufacturer, in order that he may trade in those articles.

We put them on the free list for the benefit of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In this schedule, as has been stated before, are sewing machines-sewing machines which the uncontested testimony shows are being sold to the poor people of this country and to the rich and poor alike from $23 to $45 a machine, and yet are being laid down, freight paid, in the Orient for $8.75. And yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] would ask this Congress, in the name of the manufacturers of the United States, to retain a prohibitive tax on sewing machines and other like articles in order that we might trade for terms in foreign markets for the benefit of men who have already made millions out of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We are not proposing to maintain a prohibitive tax on these articles, a tax that enables monopolies to stand behind a tariff wall and gouge out of the hard-earned salaries of American laborers the profits that those monopolies have made in the last 20 and 40 years under the prohibitive tariff that the gentlemen on that side of the House have maintained on the statute books. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois may contend that we ought to barter and trade in articles of this kind, but I say to him when we barter and trade in the real necessities of the American people, we are bartering and trading in the life blood of poverty.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

We are not ashamed to go to the American people and say that when an article is manufactured in this country so cheaply and so successfully that it can compete in all the markets of the world we are willing to place it on the free list for the benefit of our own people, and not maintain a prohibitive tariff in the interest of dollars—all of which have not been honestly [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have been out and I do not know what the situation is. What is it?

Mr. MANN. They have gagged us, and we can not talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired. The debate has closed upon the pending amendment.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. It is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has closed upon the pending amendment, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 107.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Austin and Mr. REILLY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 65, noes 108.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 22 by inserting after line 14, as a new paragraph, the

Amend page 22 by inserting after line 14, as a new paragraph, the following:

"74. The goods, wares, articles, and merchandise mentioned in the last preceding paragraph, when manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor, shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. MANN. I should like to be heard on the point of order. Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Chair has already ruled on that Mr. MANN. point of order on Saturday.

Mr. MANN. The Chair has not ruled on this point of order at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Exactly the same amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois briefly on the point of order.

The gentleman is mistaken as to what question Mr. MANN. the Chair ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois briefly.

Mr. MANN. The law now provides for an import duty upon Research 78 Paragraph 73 prothe articles mentioned in paragraph 73. Paragraph 73 proposes to admit those articles free of duty. My amendment proposes that the articles named in the paragraph shall not be admitted at all if made in whole or in part by convict labor. The bill proposing to remove from the dutiable list articles now upon the dutiable list and admit them free of duty, it certainly is germane to say that those articles shall not be admitted at all when made by convict labor. The Payne law, passed by a Republican Congress, now provides that these articles shall not be admitted at all when made by convict labor. Will it be claimed that under the rules of the House you can provide, under the guise of admitting them free of duty, that they shall be admitted when made by convict labor, and that an amendment prohibiting their importation when made by convict labor is obnoxious to the rule? If those be the rules of a Democratic House, let me advise the country to take the rules of a Republican House, which permitted the introduction into the bill of this precise proposition to keep out convict-made goods. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That on and after the day following the passage of this act all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

Several Members rose. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill with amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the bill as amended do

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order—— Mr. MANN. It is in order to offer amendments to the section.

Mr. HILL. That was the point of order I was going to make.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I insist on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, and with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MANN. I ask recognition to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. MANN. That is the regular order. I ask for recognition to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order that I have a right to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. GARNER. Not unless the gentleman gets the floor. It is a question of recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], who is in control

Mr. MANN. But I make the point of order that that motion is not in order as long as any gentleman asks recognition to offer an amendment to the paragraph or the section.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly in the power of the committee to do what it pleases.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is not. The rules provide about this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. MANN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is—

Mr. CANNON. I desire to be heard on the appeal.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order is dilatory.
Mr. MANN. That is not the case at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is dilatory.

Mr. CANNON. The appeal is not dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has overruled the point of order and the gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that the appeal is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. The appeal is not dilatory. If the Chair wants to have his ruling sustained in that way, it is within the power of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am informed and believe that there are amendments in the hands of two or three Members that are not offered as dilatory amendments, but are offered in good faith, for the consideration of this great Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FOCHT. I was on my feet, Mr. Chairman, asking for recognition to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama on the ground that the appeal is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we could not understand the ruling of the Chair owing to the confusion in the House. Does the Chair hold that the gentlemen desiring to offer amendments on the last section of the bill are not entitled to recognition for that purpose prior to recognizing a Member to move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably?

The CHAIRMAN. That was not the question. The gentleman from Alabama made a motion that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill pass, [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MANN. That is the most outrageous ruling ever made by the Chair, and a violation of law and precedent.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that a motion to adjourn in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. And the Chair is perfectly correct for the first time in the last 10 minutes. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the committee do now rise. [Cries of "Division!" and "Tellers!"]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PALMER and Mr. AUSTIN.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were 111 ayes and 87 noes.

So the motion that the committee rise prevailed.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Floyn of Arkansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, and had directed him to report the bill back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage of the bill. Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 195, nays 116. answered "present" 8, not voting 72, as follows:

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes (H. Rept. 279), which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I shall endeavor to call up this bill to-morrow or as soon thereafter as possible.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter with accompanying resolutions of the Young Men's Business Exchange of Knox-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and accompanying resolutions are as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1912.

Hon. R. W. Austin, M. C.,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have your letter with reference to the action of this organization on the proposed free importation of iron ores, and beg to assure you of the sincere and hearty appreciation of the people of this section of the country on your position opposing such legislation.

The resolution passed by the unanimous vote of the members of this exchange at a recent meeting is set out in full below. Remember that this organization is composed of over 600 progressive and prosperous Knoxville business men, as many of whom are Democrats as are Republicans. The resolution itself was introduced and seconded with hearty speeches by Democratic members.

Here it is:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Young Business Men's Exchange that we condemn the proposed schedules of that committee of Congress which has recently reported on a traiff schedule for iron ore and manufactured steel and iron products; be it further

"Resolved, That we favor a reduction in the present tariffs on manufactured steel and iron; but be it

"Resolved, That we, as citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., desirous of seeing the latent resources of the Appalachian region developed in their entirety, feel that if Congress accepts or adopts the report of that committee permitting free iron ores to be imported into the United States that an irreparable injury will be done this section of the country and that the opportunities for the development of this region will be totally lost; and be it further

"Resolved. That the secretary of this exchange is hereby instructed and directed to at once communicate to the 10 Representatives in Congress and the 2 Senators from the State of Tennessee, urging upon them the importance and necessity of voting down any such tariff legislation as is herein condemned."

The above is a true copy of the resolution as passed by the unanimous vote of the exchange.

Very truly, yours,

KARL ED STEINMETZ, Secretary.

KARL ED STEINMETZ, Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I would like a similar privilege The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the metal schedule may have the privilege for five legislative days of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke on the metal schedule have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. For the information of the House, would that limit the time allowed in which to extend remarks where gentlemen already have obtained leave?

The SPEAKER. It would not, in the judgment of the Chair. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Insular Affairs to report, with a favorable recommendation, on Insular Amairs to report, with a layorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 17756) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes" (H. Rept. 280), which has been referred to that committee. I also submit, Mr. Speaker, the independent views of two members of the committee, Mr. Morse of Wisconsin and Mr. Davis of Minnesota, and ask that they be printed with the report.

Mr. MANN. Is this a privileged bill?

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask that the minority of the committee may be given five legislative days in which to file their minority views.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that this is a privileged bill.

It goes into the basket.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not really know what it is. Mr. JONES. It is not a privileged bill. I am simply making a report from the Committee on Insular Affairs and asking that the minority be given five legislative days in which to file their minority views.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The report will be made through the basket. The request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] is-

That the views of Mr. Morse of Wisconsin and Mr. JONES. Mr. Davis of Minnesota may be printed along with the report that I have filed. There is a minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the minority report (H. Rept. 280, pt. 2), be printed along with the report of the majority-Mr. MANN. And that t

The SPEAKER. Five legislative days in which to print their views. Is there objection?

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following certificate of election:

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

THE STATE OF KANSAS.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Charles H. Sessions, secretary of state for the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the State canvassing board, from the legal returns of the special election held on the 9th day of January, 1912, now on file and recorded in this office, after due examination thereof, as provided by law, did determine and declare that George A. Neeley was duly elected to the office of Representative of the seventh congressional district of the State of Kansas for the term ending March 4, A. D. 1913.

Witness my hand and seal.

CHAS. H. SESSION Secretary of

Done at the city of Topeka this 22d day of January, 1912. Mr. NEELEY appeared before the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask that to-morrow be set aside for the consideration of bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that to-morrow be set aside for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, so that the House may have the information, whether it is likely that it will occupy the whole afternoon to-morrow?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not say, Mr. Speaker. I contemplate calling up two bills on which there should be little. or no discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WHITE EARTH INDIAN RESERVATION, MINN.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steen-ERSON] rises to a question of privilege and asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it, Mr. Speaker? If the gentleman has a question of privilege, he does not need unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that is so under the rules, but the Chair can not inform the gentleman whether it is a question of privilege or whether the gentleman has any.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, unless the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] is immediate and relates to him personally, I hope the gentleman will let it go over until to-morrow. Of course I do not want to object to a matter of personal privilege of that kind if it is immediate.

Mr. STEENERSON. I supposed, Mr. Speaker, that unanimous consent was granted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand, Mr. Speaker, that it was granted. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the special matter concerning which he desires recognition? Mr. STEENERSON. It relates to certain newspaper publications reflecting on me and other Members of Congress

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reflecting on the gentleman personally?

Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I will not object. But will the gentleman require 30 minutes?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is the time I need, and I understood it was granted by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] is entirely correct, that if the gentleman has a question of privilege nobody has any right to object to his addressing the House on that subject; but he asked for 30 minutes, and that was a limitation on his time, and the Chair saw no objection to putting the request.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call attention to certain charges made by representatives of the Department of Justice before the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, now in session at Minneapolis, Minn. I read an extract from lest Friday's Minneapolis Journal as follows: extract from last Friday's Minneapolis Journal, as follows:

ATTORNEY DECLARES LAW INTRODUCED BY PAGE MORRIS ENABLED EVASION OF STATE LAW.

Presenting the report of Government inspectors as a climax, Government attorneys at the White Earth Indian hearing to-day, at the Federal building, introduced evidence which they assert shows that laws passed by Congress at the instigation of Minnesota Members have been followed by fraud and have opened the reservation to the lumber followed by fraud and have opened the reservation to the lumber companies.

Aside from the introduction of the Linnen report, the sensational feature of the day's testimony was the statement of Judge M. C. Burch, of the Department of Justice, to-day that an act introduced in Congress by Representative Page Morris, now a Federal judge, had permitted the lumber companies of the State to "evade" the State law prohibiting them from holding more than 5,000 acres of laxd. Judge Morris presided at the recent trial of Gus Beaulieu on a charge of defrauding White Earth Indians. Judge Morris dismissed the case after the State had presented its evidence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Burgess). Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Texas? Mr. STEENERSON. I do.

Mr. STEENERSON. 1 do.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to know what the gentleman is reading from? Is it a newspaper article?
Mr. STEENERSON. It is a newspaper article.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Published in what State?

Mr. STEENERSON. From the Minneapolis Journal, published in Minnesota.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In the gentleman's own State?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Relative to the White Earth Indian matter?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.
President Taft in his recent speech in New York rebukes his rivals and the progressives generally for attacking and undermining the confidence of the people in the judiciary, while at the very same time his Assistant Attorney General throws out these wicked and baseless charges and insinuations against a Federal judge who decided against his contention.

The above is only a small extract from the charges which have been presented and printed in the hearings and published in the newspapers, but their general tenor is that all legislation by Congress since 1889 has been framed in the interest of lumber companies and land dealers in order to enable them to despoil the Indian of his property, and that the numerous frauds and wrongs against the Indians was due to the faulty character of these laws. They are too voluminous to repeat here, but so far as they reflect on Congress, the judiciary, or myself as a Member of Congress, I denounce them as absolutely false and untrue, and made for ulterior purposes, and to shield the administration from blame for wrongs against the Indians, and to prevent legislation that will put a stop to the intolerable conditions on White Earth Reservation, to which I shall allude. This effort to interfere with, influence, and control the course of legislation in Congress by an executive department comes very close to, if it does not amount to, a breach of the privileges of this House.

Ordinarily congressional investigations are begun on the initiative of the Senate or the House, and not, as is the case here, by a department of the executive branch of the Government. and is carried on for the purpose of laying the foundation for legislation, although they also sometimes are made to serve a political or partisan cause. The department has been for three years in possession of all the matter, whether fact or fancy, which they are now presenting to the committee, but instead of using it in prosecutions of culprits they published it in newspapers and magazines and retained the accused official in the service until recently, when his term expired. They are blaming the law for all the maladministration found. If we are to get our suggestions for remedial legislation from them, I fear we will fail, for neither the Department of Justice nor anyone else will ever be able to devise a law that will secure honest efficient administration from dishonest and incompetent officials. But it may be that the other reason, the political one, was the motive for this inquiry. Possibly the department officials thought it would be a shrewd move against the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who has been opposing them politically. If so, one can also see that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham], the chairman of the committee, was at least equally shrewd, for while the administration was opening the rotten entrails of its Indian Service to the public view, incidentally, political advantage would ensue to the party in opposition to the administration. I fear, therefore, that the investigation will result in failure in that direction also.

In order that we may understand the bearing of these charges and of this course of conduct it will be necessary to review the legislative and administrative history that gave rise to these difficulties.

The trouble on White Earth grew out of the passage by Congress, in June, 1906, of the so-called Clapp amendment, removing all restrictions upon alienation and taxation for allotments of mixed-blood Indians, which act reads as follows:

That all restrictions as to sale, encumbrance, or taxation for allotments within the White Earth Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, now or hereafter held by adult mixed-blood Indians are hereby removed, and the trust deeds heretofore or hereafter executed by the department for such allotments are hereby declared to pass the title in fee simple, or such mixed bloods, upon application, shall be entitled to receive a patent in fee simple for such allotments; and, as to full bloods, said restrictions shall be removed when the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that said adult full-blood Indians are competent to handle their own affairs, and in such case the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to each Indian allottee a patent in fee simple upon application.

and the neglect and refusal of the Interior Department to take steps to guard the interests of its wards in the execution and administration of this law. Obviously, the first duty of the Interior Department was to make out a roll or list of those embraced within the enfranchised class and of those full-bloods whom it deemed competent "to handle their own affairs" within the meaning of the said law; but this they utterly neglected and refused to do until 1909, when the press reports of alleged frauds and impositions by white land speculators upon the Indians awoke them from their slumbers. But the harm had already been done. To shift the blame for the trouble the Interior Department, in cooperation with the Department of Justice, conceived the plan of blaming everything to the viciousness of the law, which it has been sought to nullify and discredit ever since. This law, although framed in exact accord with the announced policy of the Interior Department to the effect that all Indians who had been educated in the schools and brought up in the ways of civilization should, when arriving at the age of majority, be freed from Government tutelage and put on their own responsibility and made to work out their own salvation the same as white people, unfortunately, was not self-executing and to be a success had to be administered with diligence, fidelity, and in a spirit of fairness wholly wanting in the Indian service at the time. There being no records of those who were adult mixed bloods and authorized to sell and convey land, a great many of the Indians who were anxious to obtain ready money and willing to dispose of their lands, which in most cases were wild and unimproved and of no use or value to them, claimed to be mixed blood and were ready to make oath to that effect and to furnish two corroborating affidavits to the truth of the claim, in order to sell and get whatever price might be offered.

It should be borne in mind that all Indians, men, women, and children, had been allotted land in severalty, some 80 acres and some 160 acres each, so that a family consisting of husband and wife and eight children might have 1,600 acres, most unused. Three-fourths of the land was on allotments suitable for agriculture, and about one-fourth was valuable Most of the adult Indians sold their allotments, pine timber. and at fairly good prices for wild land, ranging from $5 to $10 per acre for agricultural land and from $25 to $235 per acre for timber. More than $5,000,000 was, during the last six years, paid to individual Indians for conveyances of land, which in every instance he made under the sworn representation that he was a mixed blood and qualified to convey under said law. Before 1906 many allottees died and their lands descended to heirs, and more than half of the allotments were to minors and conceded full bloods whose restrictions remained and who could not convey, so that more than half of the land still remains inalienable and exempt from taxation, and much of it unused and absolutely wild, and will continue so as long as the present policy shall prevail.

In 1906 the White Earth Indians numbered about 5,000, and at least three-fourths of them were of mixed blood. Hundreds of them had been successful as farmers, merchants, teachers, and professional men and women, and some had achieved wealth and affluence. They had long been recognized as the most progressive and farthest advanced in civilization of any in the United States, and if there was any place where the policy of giving the Indian control of his own and letting him shift for himself could be tried with prospect of success it was here. As might have been expected, when the Government agents in charge not only ignored the Clapp law and made no attempt to classify the Indians as therein contemplated, but ignored and neglected to enforce the law against the introduction of liquor on the reservation, speculators and land buyers came in, and imposition and debauchery of the poorest and most backward Indians followed. Finally, when the neglect to enforce the law and maintain order on the reservation became a public scandal, the Interior Department, in the summer of 1909, called upon the Department of Justice to aid in straightening out these troubles and recover property illegally conveyed. There were but comparatively, few cases of fraud and imposition or sales by minors, so that in the great majority of cases it was found that the validity of the sale of the allotment turned upon the degree of blood of the grantor on the conveyance. If he was a full blood, it was void, and the title of the United States would be clouded by the transfer; if he was a mixed blood, it was valid. At this stage it of course occurred to many Indians who had sold their lands fairly and squarely, and received and kept the price paid, that if their sales were void they could get their land back again and eventually, through the Government agents, sell it over again. All that was necessary to be done was to claim that he, the Indian grantor, was a full blood instead of a mixed. To enable suits in equity to be brought to recover the lands alleged to be wrongfully conveyed, lists or rolls of mixed bloods and full bloods were hastily prepared by the representatives of these two departments, and more than 1,200 suits, involving as many 80-acre tracts, were brought. There are probably 3,000 other 80-acre tracts which have been purchased from other allottees who claimed to be mixed bloods, but the bringing of these Government suits has clouded the title as to all, and no one knows whose turn comes next.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By what authority of law were these suits brought and these rolls changed from full-blood rolls to part white?

Mr. STEENERSON. Absolutely no authority except by implication in the Clapp law requiring them to grant the privilege to those who were deemed competent and were full bloods.

A natural result of this situation was the taking of sides on the question of who was full blood and who was not, and the people soon divided into two hostile factions. The Government agents in their zeal would line up as many as possible on the full-blood side, and these included, of course, the more ignorant and backward, who were easily controlled and managed, while, on the other hand, the more enlightened mixed bloods took the view that to bring more white people in and settle the wild lands and develop the country would be a good thing for all, and they therefore sided with the purchasers and were disposed to aid all honest purchasers. Bad blood soon developed between the Government agents and these rebellious mixed bloods. One of the leading families among these is the Beaulieu family, the leader of which, Gus H. Beaulieu, a former deputy marshal and real estate dealer, also publisher of a weekly newspaper, the Tomahawk, at White Earth, in which he assailed the Government most severely. The full bloods, naturally enough, never grew tired of telling their new-found friends, the Government agents, of their numerous grievances against the Government, the mixed bloods, and the whites. If there is anything in the world of which the Indian has full supply it is of grievances, and so these people advanced the idea that the Beaulieus, Fairbanks, and a few other families really did not belong to the The espousing of the cause of this faction would serve the purpose of the men in charge of Government litigation, for it would demonstrate that whoever opposed the Government would be punished by expulsion and confiscation of his allotted property and annuities, and so we find that the Department of Justice makes a suggestion to the Interior Department based upon these unsupported stories, and upon this flimsy pretext the Department of the Interior issued nearly 100 orders to show cause why they should not strike from the rolls mixed bloods belonging to the hostile faction.

And it is credibly reported they are about to serve 200 more such notices. Called upon for a copy of the affidavit or charge upon which this drastic proceeding, cutting off without warning all these people from their annuities and clouding their titles to land for an indefinite time, the Secretary of the Interior wrote me the letter, a copy of which is annexed, in which it appears that the fairy tales, uncorroborated, with a verbal suggestion of the Department of Justice, is the only basis for the depriving of these people of property valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars. With this horrible example before them, will any Indian on the White Earth Reservation dare to claim that he is a mixed blood, unless the Government officers say he is? We doubt it. This is the policy of intimidation and persecution now carried on by the Department of Justice at White Earth. part execution of this policy the Government secured the indictment of Gus H. Beaulieu, Rev. A. C. Beaulieu, and John Leecy, three of the most influential men in the opposition faction, on the charge of conspiracy to defraud the United States out of land by inducing full-blood Indians to apply for patents on the claim that they were mixed bloods. After three weeks consumed in hearing the Government's side and nearly a hundred witnesses, the court promptly directed a verdict of acquittal.

The representatives of these two executive departments also undertook to guard the rights of these Indians in legislative matters pending before Congress. When early last year it appeared from complaints of the people on the reservation that the litigation begun would be endless, that in most cases it was difficult to tell the degree of blood or the genealogy of the Indians, and that the effect was to cloud all titles, prevent settlers coming on the lands and developing the country, these people submitted a draft of a bill, which, in brief, created a commission to make a census and a roll of all Indians on White Earth Reservation, one roll of mixed bloods and one of full This bill I introduced, and it was duly referred to the House Committee on Indian Affairs (H. R. 31923, 61st Cong.). The Departments of Justice and Interior requested hearings and objected to the proposed commission, on the ground that it was unnecessary. They stated that the cases begun could and would be speedily disposed of, and that fee-simple patents would be issued at once in all cases where no suit was brought, so that titles would be cleared up at an early date. On the strength of these representations I withdrew support from the bill, and it was dropped. These promises, however, were never kept, and on May 12, 1911, I introduced the bill (H. R. 9334) for the relief of innocent purchasers of land on White Earth Reservation. This provides that where an adult Indian grantor, under pretense that he was a mixed blood, has sold to an innocent purchaser his land at a fair price, which he has received and retained, the court may confirm the sale, and where the price is inadequate may confirm it on terms of payment of the full value, and gives similar authority to the Interior Department as to cases out of court. The object of these measures was to settle speedily, upon equitable and just terms, this costly and interminable litigation, which has fallen like a blight upon that part of the country.

There are 32 townships in the White Earth Reservation, one-half of which have been organized as the county of Mahnomen and the other half is part of Becker County. There are approximately 8,500 80-acre tracts, of which 4,000 have been conveyed by alleged mixed bloods and are taxable and 4,500 are allotments to deceased Indians, minors, and fullbloods and are allotments to deceased Indians, minors, and fundious and are not taxable. The twelve hundred suits involve as many 80-acre tracts, and the pendency of the suits suspends taxation, and the threat to keep on bringing more suits, together with the refusal to issue fee-simple patents, puts a cloud on all the land, whether in suit or not. Although many of the sales were originally made to speculators, several hundred settlers have come in and bought from the speculators or from the Indians directly, and villages and school districts have been organized and roads and bridges built to some extent, and the taxes for these improvements, falling on less than half of the land, are -running as high as $50 per 80 acres-more than the land in its wild state would rent for. The lands sold by the Indians were wild and unimproved. The coming in their midst, upon alternate tracts, of white settlers who will cultivate them and make roads and organize schools will be of more benefit to the Indians than to have the lands remain idle. The object lesson of the white farmer tilling successfully his farm will be a valuable demonstration to the Indians. crease two or three fold the undisposed-of bull blood, minors', and deceased Indians' allotments, which are free from taxation, and constitute more than half of the area.

If you keep on with this litigation, it will stop all development and injure the Indians and white alike. It took one month to try the Government's side of the Beaulieu case where the issue was substantially the same as it will be in each of the equity cases, and it is a fair conclusion to draw, therefore, that it will take 1,200 months or 100 years to try the equity cases begun during the last two years involving White Earth lands. It costs the Government about $35,000 per year to maintain the force that has charge of this litigation. Is it any wonder that these men are opposed to any bill to do away with their jobs? I call especial attention to the course of Mr. M. C. Burch, Special Assistant Attorney General in charge of White Earth He was not satisfied with opposing before the appropriate committee of the House the proposed legislation to speedily settle the difficulties growing out of the situation created by the White Earth litigation, but he inaugurated a campaign to create prejudice and hostility in the minds of Members of Congress and the public; to discredit everyone who disagrees with him in this matter by repeating and publishing stories of fraud and imposition upon the Indians, and also insinuating that all legislation for the last 50 years relating to these Indians was framed in the interest of lumber companies. He opposed investigation by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and instigated an investigation of his own by the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. In this behalf he went and interviewed Members of Congress, including members of the House Committee on Rules, and represented that the Department of Justice desired this particular investigation by a committee without jurisdiction of the subject of Indian legislation, and consequently unlikely to recommend relief for the depressing conditions at White Earth, which everyone familiar with that section knows is injurious and is costing the Government vast sums for no good purpose, except to keep Mr. Burch and his staff in office for the rest of their natural lives.

In pursuance of this policy to actively discredit all past legislation relative to White Earth, as well as to prevent relief, Mr. Burch has gone before the committee and made what he has chosen to call an "opening statement of facts expected to be proved." At his request this is printed in the hearings, and is issued in pamphlet form, and caused to be extensively published in the press. It is a most astonishing and remarkable production. It is based on tales of Indian grievances generations old—stories of disappointed bidders at land sales, discharged employees and officials, and pipe dreams of sensation mongers who revel in stories of Indian spoliation of every kind. In addition to this, it also contains original statements and insinuations, presumably made on his own account, charging that the Nelson Act of 1889, the Morris Act of 1902, the Steenerson Act of 1904, and all other acts of Congress were all made in the interests of lumber companies, and for the purpose of despoiling the Indian out of his property. As such statements constitute a reflection by the representative of the executive branch of the Government upon the coordinate legislative branch, questioning its integrity and honesty, it constitutes a grave matter that ought to receive careful consideration. This document, beside reflecting upon Members of Congress and discrediting all legislation touching this matter for a generation back, constitutes a still more severe charge against the executive branch, for the only logical conclusion to be drawn from it is that the Indian has been despoiled of his property by the corrupt and criminal management of Indian affairs by the Interior Department and its agents for the last or more, and down to and including the administrations of McKinley. Roosevelt, and Taft. It is a remarkable thing to find a representative of two executive departments, without being accused by anyone, instituting an investigation before a congressional committee and filing charges of the most serious character against the administration of his own department, which he is supposed to defend! It is not a case of an official being accused and demanding an investigation, but of self-accusation and demand for investigation. former case the object of the investigation is to establish the innocence of the accused, but here the accuser is the accused, and he admits guilt. Is it the purpose of the Department of Justice to investigate the official conduct of the officials of the Interior Department under former administrations and have Mr. Burch act for both the accuser and the accused? The real object would appear to be to create hostile sentiment toward any legislative relief in Congress that might put a stop to the White Earth trouble and end it. Upon no other theory can the action of this department in accusing itself be understood or explained,

The charge that the additional-allotment act of 1904-Steenerson Act-and the act of the same year providing for cutting timber on allotments were in the interest of lumber companies is sufficiently met by the fact that not one foot of land and not one stick of timber could be sold under those laws without the approval and consent of the Secretary of the Interior; neither could this be done under any other law until the passage of the Clapp amendment in 1906.

The records show that this proposition for additional allotments, which is now assailed by the attorneys for the Interior Department as designed in the interest of lumber companies, was first introduced in Congress and embodied in a Senate bill by Senator Nelson in 1897 (S. 412, 55th Cong.), and passed the Senate on his motion (Congressional Record, 55th Cong., p. 5694, S. Rept. No. 998). It was twice introduced by Congressman Eddy, and four times favorably recommended by the same department that now condemns it. When this bill for additional allotments, which had been pending in Congress for seven years, finally passed during my first term, the Indians were so pleased without my knowledge, they convened a council on May 9, 1904, and unanimously elected me a member of the tribe, and, as I was told, caused the proceedings to be certified to the Secretary of the Interior by the United States Indian agent for approval or disapproval, and I was requested to be present at the annual festival in June, when the ceremony of promulgation would take place. I went there to accept the honor just as officials, Representatives, and even Presidents have accepted membership in social, fraternal, and labor organizations, such as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the United Order of Red Men, and the Masons, and so forth.

In response to the chief's speech, presenting the pipe of peace, in which he declared that I was the first white man who had kept word with his people, and that they had unanimously made me a member and wished me to have the best allotment on the reservation, and I could even have his own, I replied that, while I appreciated the honor, I would decline not only to accept his land, but that I would decline to accept any land or benefits whatever. Later it was pointed out to me that the Indian custom of gift making at festivals was held in great reverence and sanctity, and that custom required the gift, whatever it was, to be accepted, and that to refuse to accept it amounted to a serious discourtesy. It was further pointed out that, under Indian usage and custom, when such gift was accepted, the giver or givers expected a gift in return of about equal value. ("Gift making grows into an act of worship. Indians always carry with them presents to be given away according to their position; those visited respond by another gift." Spencer's Sociology, sec. 367-7.) So here was a dilemma; if I refused, the Indians would be insulted, and if I accepted, they would expect me to give them something of equivalent value in return, on pain of forfeiting their friendship. As a way out of the difficulty the plan suggested itself of accepting the allotment (in the event of my enrollment) in trust, and using the proceeds to establish for the tribe a free hospital or similar benevolence. In part execution of this plan the application for allotment was sent to me by the secretary of the Indian council all filled out, and it was returned to him to be filed or used only in the event of my name being placed on the rolls, which it never was, and consequently the application amounts to nothing, and I never knew or heard of its being filed uptil recently.

That the people of White Earth did not understand that this proceeding indicated any evil design on my part against their property is sufficiently evidenced by the fact that I was not only unanimously reelected in 1904, but in the three campaigns since that time I have always received their united support. It was my only desire to establish and maintain friendship and mutual regard with these people who had confided in me and honored me.

After intimating that the Nelson Act of 1889 and subsequent acts were in the interest of the spoliation of the Indians by lumber companies, the statement also assails the Morris Act (1902) as containing a "joker" in the interest of the lumbermen, whereby the timber was to be sold apart from the land, and this was for the purpose of evading the recently enacted law of Minnesota forbidding a corporation from owning more than 5,000 acres of land. (See Burch statement, p. 246, White Earth hearings.) Anyone familiar with legislative and administrative history of Indian matters in Minnesota knows that the original Nelson Act-ratified by treaty with the Indiansprovided for the classification of the ceded land into agricultural and pine, the former to be subject to homestead and the latter to be sold at auction upon stumpage estimates at not less than $3 per 1,000 feet, and that in the administration of this law the difficulty met with was the estimates, and that after three attempts at getting correct estimates Secretary Ethan Hitchcock, during the McKinley administration, suspended operations entirely and refused to sell any more timber until a law could be framed providing for disposing of the timber separate from the land and for a bank scale, which system had been found to work well elsewhere. Hitchcock, therefore, caused to be prepared the draft of the Morris Act, and it was passed substantially as submitted and approved by President Roosevelt. Under this act more than $5,000,000 has been realized from pine sales, and no fair-minded and well-informed person would say that it has not been a most successful law.

In spite of the clause in the constitution of Minnesota, and which has been required to be inserted in the constitution of every State admitted into the Union, that the State "shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil in that State," Mr. Burch thinks that the Morris Act, in providing for the sale of the timber separate from the land, was designed by those two wicked enemies and despoilers of the Indians. President Roosevelt and Secretary Hitchcock, to evade the law of Minnesota against corporate holding of real estate. Could senile dementia or even lunacy invent a more grotesque and foolish theory than that? But this is not the most remarkable part of the statement. He alludes at length to the trouble with the Pillager Band at Leech Lake in 1898 and takes the side of the Indians who ambushed and killed Maj. Wilkinson and 6 men of the Third United States Infantry and wounded 14 others who were sent out at the request of the Department of Justice to aid the United States marshal in executing criminal warrants for the arrest of Indians accused of introducing liquor on the reservation. He repeats the Indian stories that the United States marshals had instituted proceedings for introducing liquor on the reservation for the purpose of earning fees, and that the Indians, when discharged from prison on expiration of sentence, were not supplied with transportation back to the reservation. I wonder what the officers and men of the Army will think of this defense of the murderers of their brave officers and men who went out to aid this very department to execute its process and establish the supremacy of the law? What a valuable lesson in respect for law and order this defense of lawlessness and eulogy of murderers must afford to the Indians. Coming from the highest law officers in the land, it will, no doubt, make a lasting impression.

The whole affair relates to Leech Lake Reservation and has nothing to do with White Earth, but it must have been thrown in for its tragic element to heighten the dramatic effect of the statement. The statement describes at length the liquor evil on the reservation resulting in the "Saturnalia," and alludes to the sensational report of Moorhead and Linnen in 1909 on this subject, and he seems to take great satisfaction in being able to promise to prove these damaging statements to be true. But damaging to whom? Can this evil be laid to the fault of the law? No. The law absolutely prohibited the introduction of liquor on the reservation, as well as the sale of it, under the severest penalty. This was the law by act of Congress, which it is and was the duty of both the Indian officials and the Department of Justice to enforce. The Interior Department had a force of Indian police on the reservation which, without warrant or proceeding in court, could have and it was its duty to summarily seize and confiscate and destroy every drop of liquor on the reservation. If this was not enough, they could, as in 1898, call on the Department of Justice and the United States Army to enforce the law. It is to be regretted that a change of policy seems to have come since the battle with the Pillagers at Bear Island in 1898. Before that the whole force of the Government, both civil and military, was employed to enforce the law against the introduction of liquor on Indian reservations, but now the very agents whose duty it is to enforce the law gloat over its flagrant violations and their own criminal neglect to enforce it.

Mr. Burch shows in this whole statement great hostility to lumber men and lumber companies, and one would naturally con-clude that this would influence his official actions; but no; he appears to have been most complacent and accommodating to the very lumber company—Nichols-Chisolm, of Minneapoliswhom he so repeatedly condemns. He opposes, for instance, even to the extent of persistent lobbying, in the name of the Department of Justice all proposed legislation to settle the title to agricultural land involved in the litigation. His policy is to tie it up and hold from settlement or development; but not so with the pine. If Mr. Burch had been consistent, he would have stopped the Nichols-Chisolm Lumber Co. in 1909 from cutting any logs on the lands involved in the suits; but instead, I am informed, he has allowed them to extend their logging railroad and to cut 40,000,000 feet of pine every year since from the reservation. They will cut 40,000,000 feet this year, and continue to do so until the hundreds of millions of feet of pine still standing is all gone. It is true that bond has been given to protect ing is all gone. It is true that bond has been given to protect the Government, but not the individual Indian who owns the land and who has to wait for his money till the lawsuits of the Government are determined. This lumber company holds back hundreds of thousands of dollars of the purchase money due the Indian allottees, and thereby saves interest to the extent of thousands of dollars every year; and still their lumbering business goes on with the approval and consent of Mr. Burch! timber in the case of timberland is the most valuable part thereof, and permitting its removal and manufacture is a disposal of the soil, and a consistent policy would not permit this and oppose the confirmation of the sale and development of farm land upon equitable terms. It thus appears that the hostility to the lumber companies is only in words and not in deeds.

As already stated, White Earth seemed to be a favorable place for trying out the policy of allowing the Indian to control his own and to shift for himself, in harmony with which the Clapp law was framed, and subsequent events, in spite of all that has been said shows that, if not an entire success, it would have been so if the Executive and administrative officers had done their part with diligence and fidelity. In proof of this let us compare the results of the business operations of the United States, acting as guardian of these Indians, and that of the individual Indians under the Clapp law. According to the Burch statement there were originally 36 townships in the White Earth Reservation, and four of these were disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior in 1900 under the act of February 26, 1896, which gave him full power to appraise the pine timber, and to sell it at auction for not less than the appraised The pine brought $1.60 per thousand feet, and the land $1.25 per acre. This result was due to fraudulent estimates and combinations of bidders at the sale, and which sale the Secretary refused to set aside even after his attention was secretary refused to set aside even after his attention was called to the matter by his own inspectors. (See Burch statement, pages 234 to 245, White Earth hearings.) Under the Clapp law exactly similar agricultural and pine land was sold by individual Indians themselves, and realized on the average $7.50 per acre for agricultural land, and $8 per thousand feet for the timber on the latter. The Indians got six times as much for the farm lands, and five times as much for the pine as did his guardian; the land being similar both as to location and quality and value. But that is not the whole difference. The Secretary of the Interior reports that the receipts from the operation of the laws for the disposal of the property of the Chippewas of Minne-sota amount to $9,000,000 and of this not quite $4,000,000 remains to their credit, so that approximately $5,000,000 out of $9,000,000 have gone for administration. Out of the income of the millions of dollars in the Chippewa fund each of these Indians has heretofore received between $6 and $7, an amount sufficient to enable him to buy a two-cent postage stamp each day in the year. Well might these wards of the Government exclaim "O monstrous! but one-half pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!" It is only too true that there is poverty, and even want, among some of the The system of isolation under Government guardianship, upon a reservation where the aboriginal tribal organizations and customs, inimical to all progress, remain, must be the cause. Forty-five years of trial here as elsewhere has proven this policy, however humanitarian in its purpose, a complete failure. I am firmly convinced that if in 1867, when the reservation was established, every alternate quarter section had been given free to white settlers, and the money spent on the agency officials given to common school districts for maintenance of mixed schools, it would have solved the Indian problem on White Earth years ago. It is fair to conclude that if the property disposed of by individual Indians under the Clapp law, amounting to about $5,000,000, had been administered by the Department of the Interior less than 50 cents on the dollar would have reached either the Indian or the Indian fund. While it is admitted, and an undisputable fact that the individual Indians sold their property for five or six times more than has been realized for exactly similar property disposed of by the Government as guardian, yet it is urged against the wisdom of the Clapp law that the money received was foolishly spent and squandered. This objection has some basis although not by any means as much as the sensation-hunting investigators and muckrackers try to make out. A great many Indians not only sold their property well, but handled the money received as well as ordinary white people. Nine-tenths of the scandals resulted from the introduction of liquor on the reservation for which the Government, and not the law is responsible. This effort to excuse incompetent and corrupt administration of Indian affairs by laying the blame on the law is the main feature of the Burch statement. He charges that the Indians have been despoiled of millions of dollars by reason of unwise and bad laws, and yet, every law under which the Indian property was sold by the Government prior to the Clapp Act of 1906, was submitted to and was approved by the Interior Department before it was enacted by Congress, and gave the department ample and complete authority and discretion. The propensity to throw the blame for evil deeds upon others so strongly exhibited here is not a recent development in human nature, for, when caught eating the forbidden fruit, Adam tried to shoulder the blame upon Eve. But Adam had at least some justification for the claim, which in this instance is absolutely and utterly groundless.

On the general policy of giving the adult Indians control over their property I cite the last report of the Board of Indian Commissioners, among the members of which are such well-known names as Prof. Andrew Draper and Cardinal Gibbons. I quote names as Prof. Andrew Draper and Cardinal Gibbons. I quote from pages 6 and 7, as follows:

Since 1899 this board has consistently urged the breaking up of tribal funds, and we still believe it is the next important step in the solution of the Indian problem. Every Indian entitled to share in these funds should be recognized by name upon the books of the Treasury and have his share either credited to him by name, in case he is incompetent to manage it, or paid to him if he is competent and legally entitled to receive it. The division of the tribal funds is guite as logical an advance step as was the division of tribal lands, for, like tribal lands, they prevent the Indian from acquiring that sense of personal responsibility necessary to good citizenship and they are peculiarily susceptible of exploitation by unscrupulous lawyers or claim agents.

Congress should by law fix an early date when all tribal funds should be paid or credited to the individual members of the tribes, and provide that no Indian child born after that date can have any share therein except by regular inheritance.

Such a division of tribal funds would involve another great need—that of an accurate roll of Indians at every agency. It is time that the Government, if for no higher motive than accurate accounting and sound business methods, should have a carefully prepared tribal roll of every Indian tribe. It is believed that in the preparation of such rolls it would be desirable to secure through the Bureau of American Ethnology the services of some trained ethnologists whose study of Indian customs and Indian relationships would give a solid basis of scientific accuracy to the work. That such rolls are needed is evident from examples like the history of the last few years at the White Earth Indian Reservation, and the mass of litigation already accumulated with reference to the inheritance of Indian allotted lands. We recommend early legislation providing for the preparation of accurate tribal rolls of all Indians and fixing a date for the

I appeal to every Member of Congress and to the Chief Executive to give these matters careful consideration, with a view to a change of the present policy as to these Indians, and to cooperate in devising and enacting such legislation as to speedily remedy these serious and intolerable conditions upon terms that will be just and fair to all.

In this connection I desire to insert the following documents, which, with above argument, have been submitted to the Attorney General:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 24, 1912.

Department of the Interior,
Washington, January 24, 1912.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson,
House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 26, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, requesting information relative to a notice and order recently issued by the superintendent in charge of White Earth Indians in Minnesota to Mrs. Jennie M. Ledebore and her daughter, Alice Wilhelmina Ledebore, requiring them to show cause why their names should not be stricken from the lists of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, why their allotments should not be canceled, and why they should not be required to return to the said Indians the annuities and other benefits, or the value thereof, which they have already received.

The orders you mention were issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and approved by this department, such action having been taken in accordance with the suggestion of the Attorney General, made to this department under date of November 14, 1911. You will therefore see that these orders did not emanate from the superintendent in charge of the White Earth Indians, but that he and those under him were merely the instrumentality for service of such orders.

This action was taken upon representation and repeated applications made by numbers of Indians who claimed to belong to the Minnesota Chippewas, these complaints being made to a special agent of the Indian Service and to officials of the Department of Justice who have been at work upon and in the vicinity of the White Earth Reservation. Such complaints have been of long standing and off repeated, and have been the source of much division and jealousy among the Indians inhabiting or connected with the reservations of Minnesota, and have practically all been to one effect, namely, that injustice has been done the Indians of Minnesota because, without real membership in any of their tribes, persons, among whom are Mrs. Ledebore and her daughter, have been irregularly placed upon the annuity and allotment rolls of the Minnesota Indians.

These complaints, in the course of their duties, were laid before this department by the officials to whom they were made, and proceedings have been instituted to have the direct issue brought forward and duly passed upon by this department, so that this vexing and trouble-breeding subject may be authoritatively put at rest and this bone of contention finally buried.

No complaint of a peculiar character has been made against Mrs. Ledebore and her daughter, and you are informed that she is simply one of a class whose rights must be investigated and passed upon the same as the others. It is not intended that the notice to show cause issued to these people should operate nor have the effect to deprive them of any rights or benefits to which they may be decided to be legally entitled after this investigation, and you are assured that each person notified, as in these cases, will be given every proper opportunity to be heard and to protect his or her interests.

It will be sufficient at this time for Mrs. Ledebore to file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs an admission or denial of the allegations contained in the notice served on her. On or after February 1, 1912, the day named in the notice on or before which answer thereto is required to be made in writing, such further methods of procedure will be adopted in the matter of making investigations and taking testimony thereunde

CARMI A. THOMPSON,
Assistant Secretary.

MAHNOMEN, MINN., January 11, 1912.

Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Hon. George W. Wickersham,

Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Sie: We, the undersigned, citizens and taxpayers of Mahnomen County, in pursuance of our right to peaceably assemble and petition the Government for a redress of our grievances, do respectfully protest against the manner in which the representatives of the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior have heretofore and are now conducting the matters in relation to land titles on the White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota.

The representatives of the departments above mentioned have commenced over 1,150 separate actions and are about to file about 200 cases more against present owners of these lands, many of whom are not seed to the covernment having these matters in charge have shown themselves utterly incompetent or grossly negligent in the performance of their duties. In the commencement of these actions the agents of the Government having these matters in charge have shown themselves utterly incompetent or grossly negligent in the performance of their duties. In this:

1. We charge that they have filed a multiplicity of suits when a few actions would have determined the blood status of every Indian family upon the White Earth Reservation. A careful investigation of the ancestry of the allottees on the reservation can trace their descent from that selected and tried 50 to 75 cases out of the large number now filed the blood status of every Indian on the White Earth Reservation would have been determined, and saved the Government large expense as well as the defendants, for in many cases the expense will be more than the value of the land.

2. Many actions have been commenced on tracts of land on which the United States had issued fee-simple patent to the original allottee. (A partial list of such cases is shown in schedule 1 hereto attached.) And yet Afr. M. C. Burch, special assistant to the Artoney General. Department, shown in Document No. 2, on page 56, says that "just a few suits were brought on fee-simple titles, not over four fore no matter how the adult mixed blood has come to be the holder or owner of the allotment or part of an allotment, whether by selection—that is, as the original allottee or by inheritance from a full blood or by inheritance from a mixed blood or by inheritance from a minor mixed blood or by inheritance from a minor mixed blood or by inheritance as that, all restrictions as to alienation of such allotment, or any part of it, held be any adult mixed blood. The trust patent is declared to convey to him or vest in him—(pass) to him—if he is an adult, or as soon as he becomes an adult, the fee-simple title, and he has the right to sell it without restriction. That is the way I construe the so-called Clapp amendment."

No appeal has been taken by the Government from this decision; yet in the face of it your department has failed to dismiss any of this class of cases, but have filed numerous similar cases since the foregoing decision was rendered. (A list of these cases can be had if desired.)

6. In a little over 100 cases the only contention made by your de-desired.)

6. In a little over 100 cases the only contention made by your department is that the allottees were minors at the time they sold and conveyed their land. It is now a matter of record that many of these allottees have ratified their transactions upon reaching their majority, and new deeds have been executed by them conveying the land to the original purchasers. Under these circumstances we claim that where the minor has given a new conveyance the suits should be promptly dismissed, but your representatives refuse to dismiss these cases, claiming that the act of June 25, 1910, repealed the Clapp amendment. We deny this contention, and we do not believe that your representatives are sincere in their contention, as they are now arguing for a repeal of the Clapp Act.

deny this contention, and we do not believe that your representatives are sincere in their contention, as they are now arguing for a repeal of the Clapp Act.

It is to be noted that in all the cases instituted by the Government affecting the titles to land on the White Earth Reservation no case has been brought alleging fraud in connection with any transaction. In the case of The United States v. Gus H. Beaulieu et al., charging the defendants with a conspiracy against the United States, which case was tried in the November (1911) term at Fergus Falls, Minn., and resulting in a directed verdict for the defendants, the Hon. Page Morris, in his charge to the jury, said, in part:

"We are not trying these defendants for having overreached ignorant Indians, and if we were I am very free to say that the testimony as it now stands I hardly think would bear out any such conclusion. I do not remember any testimony here which indicates any overreaching of these ignorant Indians by any of these defendants or by their employer. On the contrary, in one case here the man himself admitted he didn't know himself what the pine was worth; that he would have been willing to take a small sum for it, whereas he got $14,000 for it. It doesn't seem to me, as far as this proof goes, that it indicates any overreaching of these unfortunate Indians by these defendants. They seem to have gotten fair prices for their pine."

We charge that these cases are brought in bad faith, for it was agreed and understood between counsel on both sides that no actions would be commenced until the question as to the blood of the Indian be determined upon a hearing by the interesting parties. It is now generally conceded, even by the attorneys for the Government, that not one case in ten has any merit, and your agents have, therefore, done this community a great injustice and caused it enormous financial loss.

EVIL RESULTS OF THIS LITIGATION ON THE COUNTRY IN GENERAL

this community a great injustice and caused it enormous financial loss.

EVIL RESULTS OF THIS LITIGATION ON THE COUNTRY IN GENERAL.

Since the Government has started these suits, now nearly two years ago, the confidence in this country has been totally destroyed, and in addition it has thrown a cloud upon the titles to all the land on the reservation whether directly involved in the litigation or not. Many farmers have invested their all in a home in this reservation and now find their titles threatened, and many of them are put to enormous expense in defending their homes. And even if successful in defending their suit the expense in many cases will amount to the value of the property. The sale of lands has practically cased and the settlement of the country retarded. The general business conditions are bad, and good first-morgage loans on White Earth lands are not marketable.

The White Earth Reservation comprises 32 townships. Mahnomen County, which lies wholly within the reservation, has 16 townships, 11 of these are now organized. There are 16 newly organized school districts, with 16 new schoolhouses, according to the report of the superintendent of schools, and two-fifths of the entire enrollment are pupils of Indian blood. This county levied taxes in 1910 amounting to about $50,000 and less than $30,000 was collected for the reason that the defendants in these actions refused to pay taxes while the title to their property was in litigation. As a result of this state of affairs the finances of the county are in a deplorable condition, and many of the schools will have to close for want of funds unless these conditions are remedied soon. General improvements of the county have been delayed and the county needs many new roads and several bridges, but has no money with which to make the improvements.

We have the honor to request:

1. That the Government promptly dismiss all suits on land where the deed of conveyance was approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

4. That all cases coming within the purview submitted.

The Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 5255):

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5255) to provide allotments to Indians on White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment,

This is a bill similar in terms with House bill 9666, which the committee has had under full consideration. It provides for increased allotment of land to the Chippewa Indians on the White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota, from 80 acres, already allotted, to 160 acres, and at the same time makes allotments to some Indians who have never before had them. In case there is not sufficient land to give each allottee 160 acres, the allottees will receive a pro rata allotment of this land. The Interior Department was called upon to report on H. R. 9666, and reported thereon favorably with some amendments, which are incorporated in this bill (S. 5255), which is favorably reported, as

Department of the Interior,

Washington, March 28, 1904.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by your reference of H. R. 9666, "A bill to provide allotments to Indians on White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota." The commissioner's report of the 25th instant on this bill (copy herewith) shows that previous correspondence has been had in the matter of allotting these Indians additional lands, and that, as provision is made in H. R. 9666 for pro rata allotments in case there is not enough land on the reservation to give each Indian an allotment of 160 acres, there appears to be no objection to the passage of the bill.

In the views of the commissioner I concur.

Very respectfully,

To the Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, March 25, 1904.

Department of the Interior,
Office of Indian Affairs,
March 25, 1904.

Sir: The office has the honor to acknowledge receipt, by department reference of the 16th instant, for report, of a communication from Hon. James S. Sherman, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, inclosing H. R. 9666, "A bill to provide allotments to Indians on White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota."

The bill provides that the President of the United States shall be authorized to allot to each Chippewa Indian now legally residing upon the White Earth Reservation under treaty with or laws of the United States, in accordance with express promises made to them by the Chippewa Commission, and to those Indians who may remove to the said reservation who are entitled to take allotments under article 7 of the treaty of April 18, 1867, 160 acres of land, said allotments to be made in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 388).

The bill also provides that where any allotment of less than 160 acres has heretofore been made to the allottee, he shall be allowed to take an additional allotment, which, together with the land already allotted, shall not exceed 160 acres; also that if there is not sufficient land within the diminished White Earth Reservation subject to allotment to give each Indian entitled thereto the amount of land provided by the bill, then the lands shall be prorated among the allottees.

Reporting upon the bill, the office has the honor to state that it has heretofore made several reports upon similar bills having practically the same effect was made to the department under date of December 17, 1896, to which attention is respectfully invited. The Cfice also, on February 12, 1900, submitted a report upon a bill having practically the same effect was made to the department under date of December 17, 1896, to which attention is respectfully invited. The Cfice also, on February 12, 1900, submitted a report upon II. R. 997, the general scope and effect of w

SENATE.

Tuesday, January 30, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. PAYNTER. I present the credentials of Hon. OLLIE M. James, duly elected by the Legislature of the State of Kentucky a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1913. I ask that the credentials may be read and filed.

The Secretary read the credentials, as follows: To the President of the Senate of the United States:

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 9th day of January, 1912, Ollie M. James was duly chosen by the Legislature of the State of Kentucky a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1913.

This is to further certify that Ollie M. James was duly declared elected, as the law provides, a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky, to represent said State in the Senate of the United States, at a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, on the 10th day of January, 1912, for a term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1913.

And as the legislature met and organized on Tuesday, January 2.

And as the legislature met and organized on Tuesday, January 2, 1912, a doubt existed as to the time the election of a Senator should

This is to certify that on the 16th day of January, 1912, OLLIE M. JAMES was (again) duly chosen by the Legislature of the State of Kentucky a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1913.

This is to further certify that OLLIE M. JAMES was duly declared elected, as the law provides, a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky, to represent said State in the Senate of the United States, at a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, on the 17th day of January, 1912, for a term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1913.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, James B. McCreary, and our seal hereto affixed at Frankfort, Ky., this the 25th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1912.

JAMES B. McCREARY, Governor of Kentucky.

By the governor.

C. T. CRECELINS, Secretary of State.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I heard correctly, the certificate stated that Mr. James was again elected. I do not know but that that is all right, but it struck me as being rather peculiar and unusual.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will take pleasure in explaining it to the Senator. Our legislature meets the first Tuesday in January. There has been a question, not a serious one, but sufficient to cause the legislature for twenty-odd years to elect on the Tues-day following the assembling of the legislature and also on the second Tuesday following the assembling, so as to make it absolutely certain that the election takes place at the time prescribed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt as to the validity of the election of Mr. James, and yet the statement that he was again elected struck me as being peculiar.

Mr. PAYNTER. I am compelled to approve the form of certificate, because I prepared one when I was elected, and I think the same form has been followed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the credentials will be placed on the files of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of Johnson Post No. 368, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montpelier, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called dollar-a-day pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions protesting against the intended abolition of the RevenueCutter Service.

Whereas the recommendations of the Commission on Economy and in one year, besides the lives of many travelers and seafaring people; in one year, besides the lives of many travelers and seafaring people; and

Whereas the Revenue-Cutter Service as now operated gives efficiency and confidence to the shipping interests dealing along our coasts and adds dignity and prestige to our country; and

Whereas the Commission on Economy and Efficiency hope to make a saving of $1,000,000 a year by the abolition of the Revenue-Cutter Service (which amount is insignificant when compared with the value of property and life saved by one cutter during an equal period): Be it Resolved, That the chamber of commerce of the city of Southport, N. C., through its committee, protests against such action and requests the Sixty-second Congress to vote down any recommendation or bill introduced with the intent or purpose of abolishing or interfering with the operation or maintenance of the Revenue-Cutter Service; be it further

Resolved, That the chamber of commerce of the city of Southport,

Whereas it is common knowledge that the system of agriculture in vogue in the United States does not meet the requirements of the times and is not calculated to build up a permanent agriculture, restore and maintain the fertility of the soil, which is the Nation's greatest asset; maintain the fertility of the soil, which is the Nation's greatest asset; and

Whereas the States and the Federal Government have expended large sums in accumulating vast funds of knowledge that should be applied in practice upon our farms and that experience shows that the most direct and effective way of doing so is by the method of extension work known as field demonstration; and

Whereas the National Soil Fertility League and the executive committee of the American Colleges of Agriculture and Experiment Stations have prepared a bill looking to the cooperation of the Federal Government and the several States to make increased appropriations to the agricultural colleges to enable them to undertake and carry forward the work of field demonstration until ultimately a trained and practical man will be placed in every agricultural county to work with the farmers and help them to adapt and apply the new methods to their farms: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' Convention assembled at Fargo, N. Dak., January 17, 1912, hereby indorse unqualifiedly said proposed bill, and we urge our Senators and Members of Congress to do their utmost to secure its passage.

Resolved further, That copies of these resolutions shall be sent to our delegation in Congress, and a copy to Mr. O. W. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will remain on the Vice President's table until they are laid before the Senate, which will not be until after the special order has been disposed of.

PROPOSED CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. Under the rule heretofore adopted by the Senate, Senate bill 252 is now before the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume, Mr. President, that if I followed the line of least resistance, I should vote for the bill that is now before the Senate. A great many good people of the country acting conscientiously have come to the conclusion that this bill ought to become a law, and they have not failed to tell the representatives of the people of their wishes in that regard. Last evening, under a special-delivery stamp, I received a letter from a most estimable lady in Washington, who is at the head of a civic federation, the officers of which are among the fore-most people, men and women, of this country, urging the passage of this bill; and yet, Mr. President, this is not a onesided question by any manner of means. There are most excel-Ient people who see in this bill an attempt to legislate in the wrong direction, and who are opposed to it. I have been interested to observe that the American Humane Association, an organization that has perhaps done more for the children of the country than any other organization that ever existed in the United States, is very strongly opposed to the proposed legislation; and Mr. Elbridge T. Gerry, known to Senators generally, who founded that great organization, is very outspoken in his opposition to it, as is also Mr. John D. Lindsay, the president of that association. Dr. William O. Stillman, of Albany, N. Y., president of the American Humane Association, declares his opposition to this bill in these words:

While I am heartily and sincerely in favor of all proper legislation for the protection of childhood and its proper supervision and study, I do not approve of the attempt to centralize all efforts in this direction in a department of the Federal Government.

In the first place it would discourage individual initiative in the different States, and in the diversity of study and interest lies the greatest opportunity for progress.

In the second place, Federal Government has little or no power in the direction of enacting laws for the protection of childhood, and a Federal bureau for that purpose would practically be an academic institution.

Federal bureau for that purpose would practically be an academic institution.

In the third place the tendency at the present time is, I am convinced, to make existing bureaus of this description too theoretical and not sufficiently practical. What is needed for the proper protection of childhood is not theorists and dreamers, but practical workers like those found in Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. This is a self-evident truth.

In the fourth place, I believe that there is a tendency toward too much paternalism in these matters in this country and too little disposition to give homes a chance to manage their own affairs. There is too frequently an invasion and defiance of personal rights and a manifest conviction that the theorists and dreamers are the only ones who have a right to have opinions on home management.

In the fifth place, I am strongly inclined to believe that the creation of a Federal child bureau would result in placing the study of child profection in an official way almost wholly in the hands of the library student and the statistician.

In conclusion, I would call your attention to the fact that the scheme for a Federal children's bureau was unanimously condemned at the thirty-fifth annual meeting of the American Humane Association, which was held in San Francisco during October last.

Mr. President, in opening the discussion the junior Senator

Mr. President, in opening the discussion the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] used an argument that we very frequently hear, which was that Congress seems to be quite willing to appropriate money to take care of the cattle and the horses and the sheep and the hogs of the Nation, while it is very loath to make an appropriation for the women and the children of the country. Mr. President, that argument has been worn threadbare; we have read it in the newspapers; we have heard it over and over again here and from the rostrum; but there is not much in it. The truth is that dumb animals need protection because they can not protect themselves, and the further fact is that unless we did protect the animals who furnish food to the human family the mothers and the children of the country would suffer serious consequences.

But, Mr. President, we are not parsimonious in the matter of appropriations for the preservation of the public health in the United States; indeed, we are very liberally making appropriations. I asked my secretary to go through the laws which had been passed during the last session of Congress, and he reports to me that we appropriated for purposes of health in the United States $10,443,708. So we have not been parsimonious, but, on the contrary, we have been most liberal in our appropriations for the protection of the health of the American people. That enormous sum is supplemented by appropriations by every State and city in the country, which swell the amount to very great proportions.

Now, Mr. President, the bill which is before us is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That there shall be established in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the Children's Bureau. Sec. 2. That the said bureau shall be under the direction of a chief, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000. The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children. The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

Sec. 3. That there shall be in said bureau, until otherwise provided for by law, an assistant chief, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall receive an annual compensation of $2,400; I private secretary to the chief of the bureau, who shall receive an annual compensation of $1,500; I statistical expert, at $2,000; 2 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; I clerk of class 2; I clerk of class 1; I clerk, at $1,000; 1 copyist, at $900; 1 special agent, at $1,200; and I messenger, at $1,440.

SEC. 4 That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to furnish sufficient quarters for the work of this bureau at an annual rental not to exceed $2,000.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. President, a few years ago-five years ago to a day-the following bill became a law:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and report on the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of weman and child workers in the United States wherever employed, with special reference to their age, hours of labor, term of employment, health, illiteracy, sanitary and other conditions surrounding their occupation, and the means employed for the protection of their health, person, and morals.

SEC. 2. And for the purposes of this act the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to utilize in so far as they be adequate the forces of the Bureau of Labor and Bureau of Census.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved, January 29, 1907.

We even went to the extent Mr. President in that in

We even went to the extent, Mr. President, in that law of placing in the hands of the National Government, through clerks and agents that were sent out over the country, the power to go into the homes and the communities of the several States and inquire into the morals of the people-a most extraordinary power, it seems to me. No appropriation was made in that bill, and I call attention to that fact for the reason that it is said, "Oh, there is only $29,000 appropriated in this bill; it is a mere bagatelle; it does not amount to anything"; but, Mr. President, by going to the Revised Statutes, I find that very shortly after the passage of that bill an appropriation of $150,000 was made to carry out the purposes of that simple little bill that we passed while sitting in our seats and paying little attention to it. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] said we appropriated $300,000, but I think, unless there was a subsequent appropriation, the amount appropriated was $150,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was $300,000. After that it cost $89,000 to print the report; and instead of there being 19 volumes, as I stated on a former occasion, there are 45 volumes, about 20-odd volumes yet to be printed. I went to the document room and asked how many volumes had been distributed, and I think I was told 5 out of the entire number printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I also went to the document room; I knew nothing about this until the Senator from North Carolina called attention to it; and I got 12 volumes. This [exhibiting] is volume 1, one of the larger volumes of the series. Some of them are much smaller, and I was told there was quite a proposed to follow. I have been also to the series of them are much smaller, and I was told there was quite a proposed to follow. there was quite a number to follow. I have been looking this one volume over—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire thinks that the appropriation was too large?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire does not think the appropriation was too large for the work that was done, but he thinks that the work that was done was absolutely of no account. Who on earth is going to read 18 volumes on this or any other subject in this busy age of ours?

Mr. BORAH. The point I desired to suggest was, that the fault was likely the result of the inaccuracy of action upon the part of Congress rather than due to the cause for which the money was appropriated. If Congress had appropriated $50,000 or $25,000 the work which was necessary to have been done would have been done, and the unnecessary work would not have been done; but the cause itself is not to be condemned because Congress does not properly exercise its judgment in taking care of the situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, every uplifter who to-day is demanding that we shall pass this bill demanded that we If we had should appropriate this large amount of money. not appropriated it, it would have been said that we were unresponsive to the benevolent and Christian demands of the people of the country. The money was appropriated; the money was spent in the investigation by clerks and by so-called special agents; and the result is that we have got this mass of printed matter, which will go into the scrap heap in a very short time because nobody is going to take the time to read it.

They inquired into the morals of the people. The Senator from North Carolina says that they found in his State that boys were chewing tobacco. I believe they did not find that sin prevalent in the New England States, although I presume there are some people who indulge in that bad habit even in New England.

Mr. OVERMAN. They reported that they found people who had no stoves, who were cooking in the fireplace, and who were not eating anything but corn bread and fried meat. presume the Senator has that condition in New Hampshire or has had it in the days gone by.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the way my mother used to cook, will say to the Senator, and she was the mother of 12 good healthy children, 9 of whom are living.

Mr. OVERMAN. And that is the way my mother cooked. I do not see what the Federal Government has got to say as to whether my mother cooks her corn bread in a skillet or on a

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, in considering this question, I have tried to look at it reasonably and thoroughly. I have no prejudices or prepossessions. If I have any pre-possessions, they are in favor of doing anything that might be asked for the benefit of the women and children of the United States; but in looking over this matter I have not been able to find that there are such grave abuses as some gentlemen imagine exists. I find that in the mill villages, North and South, there are night schools liberally supported by the mill owners, and in most States there is a compulsory education law, which takes care to a very large extent of the employment of children in our factories. There are doubtless some abuses and there are violations of the law, as there are violations of every other law that is on the statute books. I find that one expert made this report as to the moral conditions of the mill operatives:

this report as to the moral conditions of the mill operatives:

In nearly all of the smaller mill villages, in all the States alike, the operatives as a body are sober and well behaved. There is usually good order and but little drinking, and there is seldom need for a civil officer to make an arrest. In the country mills, especially, this is true. In practically all country mill villages the moral standard is high. In those villages the people live so closely together that their actions are known to all their neighbors, and immorality can not be concealed, and will not be so readily tolerated as in larger communities. Persons who may be guilty of immoral practices are forced to move, either by the mill officials or by general sentiment among the operatives themselves.

In the cities where there are several mills the moral standard of the operatives in a majority of the mills is high. The standard depends largely upon the attitude of the mill managers and the character of the overseers. Many mill officials hold themselves responsible for the conduct of their eperatives, and will not permit anyone known to be immoral to occupy the houses which belong to the mill company.

Mr. President that is a great tribute to the mill company.

Mr. President, that is a great tribute to the mill operatives, and if any good comes out of this report that paragraph ought to be placed at the head of any finding that may be reached.

They did find that in some of the mill towns the boys chewed tobacco, smoked, and did some other things that would likely be better for their health and their morals if they refrained from doing; but, Mr. President, we need not go beyond the confines of the District of Columbia to find that those same practices are prevalent in the higher levels of society and even indulged in by women. There is nothing in this report, however, that goes to show that the "turkey trot" has been in vogue in the mill towns of New England or of the South. So that when we come to the question of morals in the mill towns we can safely confine ourselves to the facts rather than to arraign a community or a great industry because of some things such as these agents discovered to exist.

Mr. President, let us look at this bill and see what it proposes to do. What are they going to investigate that has not been investigated? They are going to inquire-

Upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality.

Mr. President, I have a bulletin that came to me three days ago from the Census Office which deals with this very question, and why do we want to duplicate it? It gives the general death rate, causes of death, death of infants from each cause by days for the first week of life, by weeks for the first month, and by months for the first two years. That work has already been done by the Census Office, and yet in this bill we propose to establish a new bureau for the purpose of inquiring into that same question of infant mortality.

"The birth rate." Why, Mr. President, I apprehend that every State in the Union has a board of health. I apprehend that every city in this country has carefully collated vital statistics that answer that question; and just what good is going to come out of the Government of the United States inquiring in the several States as to the birth rate and publishing it in a bulletin is beyond my comprehension.

"Orphanage, juvenile courts." Mr. President, we have a juvenile court in the District of Columbia—I think one of the best in the country-and I venture the suggestion, for the benefit of the good people who are promoting this legislation, that a $900 clerk in that court will answer every question that can be propounded to him from every city in every State of the American Union, and give the inquirers all the information that they possibly could desire to procure concerning the operation of juvenile courts. Why should the Government go into this question and spend the people's money for the purpose of ascertaining matters concerning juvenile courts that can be obtained in other ways?

"Desertion." What good will it do to find out how many men have deserted their wives or wives deserted their husbands or children who have deserted their homes or the homes deserted the children? I can not for the life of me imagine what good it is going to do. We know that evil exists to some extent, as all kinds of evil exists, but what good statistics would do on the subject I can not comprehend.

"Dangerous occupations." Everybody knows what they are. Nobody is in the dark concerning occupations which are dangerous, and we recognize them in our statutes by paying compensation to people who are injured in such occupations.

I do not know the kind of accidents they are to investigate, whether it is a broken collar bone or something else that comes naturally to the child who climbs a tree or scrambles over fences or whether there is some other class of accidents that we are going to investigate. For the purpose of what? Of teaching the children to be more careful and not to take chances? It would be an absolutely fruitless undertaking for us to do that. "And diseases of children." Who is going to investigate the diseases of children under this bill? Is it to be done by the six or seven clerks, possibly eight clerks, at salaries ranging from $900 to $1,600, who are to go into the cities of the several States for the purpose of inquiring about the diseases of children?

I believe there are between two and three hundred different cutaneous diseases recognized by the medical profession. I would not want a twelve-hundred-dollar clerk to enter my home and pass upon a disease and give it a name-very likely an incorrect name—and bring disrepute upon my family, nor would I want him to do it in the poorest family in the country. There are to-day men in the United States suffering under a cloud of misery because of false statements, because of false diagnoses made by physicians, but are we going to turn our children over to clerks and have reports that in a certain community in North Carolina or in New Hampshire or in any other State they found children suffering from some form of cutaneous disease that was rather suspicious? So far as I am concerned, I do not propose to give any clerk that authority or that

Then we are going to inquire into their employment. That is all now known. The appropriation of three or four hundred thousand dollars made to carry out the provisions of a former bill, the result of which is printed and to be printed in 20 volumes, more or less, deals with that subject. If they have not embodied it in this record of 20 or more volumes, surely If they have no further literature is needed on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. GALLINGER. Then we are to inquire into the moral condition of the women and children; something more that the Government has nothing to do with. It is a family affair.

Mr. OVERMAN. Here is one of the papers sent out:

What kind of a man is the father of the family, morally, socially, and religiously?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Mr. OVERMAN. That comes from the department. Now, what right do you think the department has to inquire into the social and religious standing of mothers and daughters?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we have more right to inquire into the morals of the people who investigate the matter than we have to inquire as to those of the parties themselves

Mr. President, I happen to come from a State that has already done a great deal in this direction, and I am one of those who believe—I may be wrong; I am just an ordinary layman; that is all; I speak not with authority from the standpoint of a lawyer; I leave that to the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Idaho, and other distinguished lawyers in this body—that the Constitution of the United States puts certain responsibilities and burdens and obligations upon the States which the States alone should fulfill, and that whenever the General Government goes into the States for the purpose of inquiring into those matters and publishing to the world the result of its investigations concerning matters that belong to the State the Government of the United States is overreaching its authority and power under the Constitution.

The State of New Hampshire has a method of keeping its vital statistics which is not only correct as to the State, but correct as to every city and every town in the State. It has a perfect system of vital statistics, and it does not want the United States to tell it anything about the matter. We have a commissioner of labor who personally visits the factories of the State and sees that the law in relation to the employment of women and children is enforced, and he makes his report, and if it is necessary to enact any further legislation in that regard we will do it, and we do not want any help from the General Government.

We have a hoard of health in New Hampshire, not only in the State, but in every city and in every town, which looks to every question of sanitation and the protection and happiness of the people so far as health matters are concerned. State institutions, such as an industrial school, a tuberculosis sanitorium, a home for feeble-minded children, and various other institutions which look after the welfare of the children

Mr. President, in reference to the care and attention we give our children in the matter of their education, the system is a marvel to the world. I read somewhere a little time ago that of all the money expended for education in all the countries of the world the United States contributed 40 per cent. This may not be absolutely correct, but that statement has been made and stands uncontradicted as to what has been done in the interest of education.

Further than that, I was particularly gratified, in looking over some of these documents, to find that the States of the South are forging ahead in this matter of education and are doing a great work for the children of that section of the coun-We in New England are doing the best we can. There is a different population there from that which was there 50 years ago. People from every nation on the face of the earth are there, to whom we are giving the benefits of education and of beneficial and benevolent laws. We have night schools in our We are giving them the benefits of our public schools, our academies, our seminaries, high schools, and colleges, and are doing everything we can to make them useful and valuable citizens in their several communities.

It is interesting to glance at the matter of education in the District of Columbia. We are spending $4,000,000 a year for education in this District. This enormous amount of money is spent for education in a single city. We are somewhat criticized because of the magnitude of that appropriation, but we appropriate it for the reason that we want to give a chance for education to every poor child in the District of Columbia—every black child as well as every white child. Hence we make these great appropriations, and I presume they are fulfilling the function for which they were designed.

In the McKinley Manual Training High School in this city there are taught English, German, French. MECHANICAL DRAWING.

The first-year student is taught the use of instruments, first in straight-line work, then the use of compasses for arcs of circles, by tracing a carefully prepared blue print. These blue prints are made by the students themselves. The student is then given a few simple sheets in oblique projections, followed by a number of sheets of simple orthographic projections, the correct relation of the views being shown by blackboard sketches. He also receives instructions in making sections, simple assembly, and more complex isometric projection.

All sheets have a small amount of lettering, so that the student has practice all through his course in this very essential detail.

The second-year student is given one special practice sheet in lettering. Following this the theory of orthographic projection is taught and the difference between first and third angle projection demonstrated. Several sheets are given showing the application of the theory, including revolved views. More than half of the year is devoted to simple machine design and shading for Patent Office drawings.

The third year is devoted exclusively to problems in intersections and developments of surfaces and solids.

For the fourth year the student is permitted to elect the particular branch he will follow—machine drawing, structural drawing, electrical machine drawing, Patent Office drawing, architectural drawing, topographic drawing.

The machine drawing consists of detail and assembly drawings either from sketches or working drawings at different scales.

The structural drawing consists of roof, truss, and bridge plans, including bill of material.

The electrical machine design is similar to the machine design, except that electrical apparatus is used. Patent Office drawing consists of exercises in shading, copying good examples of drawings accompanying copies of United States patents, and later a number of sheets from models.

In architectural drawing a preliminary study of shades and shadows is made, followed by sheets showing detail proportions of the Tuscan, Doric, and Ionic columns, rendered. At least one sheet showing intercolumnation and one temple based on one of the three orders named. Each sheet is carefully rendered and the shadows shown.

In topographic drawing the student first enlarges a simple section from a topographic map from the Geological Survey, followed usually by several sheets in lettering and a simple course in plotting from notes.

In addition we have physicians and dentists to look after the children in the schools, as many other cities have, and the employment of school nurses is now being warmly advocated, and indeed nurses are employed in some of the large cities.

Some Senators may say that the matter of education has nothing to do with the subject under discussion, but I submit it as an illustration of the tremendous interest there is in this country of ours to take care of the children of our homes and our families. It is not only in the District of Columbia, but extends to every village and every city in the United States. The children are not only taught how to read and how to write, they are not only taught history and arithmetic and geometry and trigonometry, but they are taught the practical things which the boys can utilize to earn a living, and of which the girls can advantage themselves to make of themselves good daughters, good wives, and good mothers.

Mr. President, I do not think I ought to take more of the time of the Senate. I have never been a great believer in the multiplication of bureaus and commissions. The truth is that to-day we are pretty much governed by bureaus and commissions in all our national affairs, and it seems to me that it is time to call a halt, and it is a good point to call a halt on this bill.

The facts I have presented show that the States are alive in this matter. The States are doing this work. In view of the fact that this $300,000 commission, organized for the purpose of investigating questions similar to those that are included in this bill, has not succeeded in collecting sufficient information to satisfy some people, it is not at all probable we are going to get that information by making an appropriation of $29,000 and employing a few clerks. If we pass this bill, the same thing will happen that happened in 1897 when we did not make any appropriation at the time the bill was passed, it being left to one of the departments to do the work, but the appropriation speedily followed. If we pass this bill, it will not be many weeks before the good men and the good women who are promoting this legislation will be petitioning Congress to make an adequate appropriation to enable this bureau to carry on its work, and instead of $29,000, it will be possibly a half a million dollars in the near future.

The creation of bureaus and commissions in this country is developing into an industry. This bill follows along that line. True it is in a sense an infant industry that is proposed, but notwithstanding that I am opposed to it. It proposes work that ought to be done in the home, the school, the church, and the State without calling upon the General Government to engage in this kind of investigation. We do not need to have the General Government throw its protecting arms about us in every little matter that affects the welfare of the people of our several communities and our several States. We will paralyze the initiative and the work of the States if the General Government is going to do everything that the people of this country think ought to be done to promote their welfare and their happiness.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, if I had consulted my own predilection I, perhaps, would have accepted the line of least resistance and responded to the people who have written me about this bill requesting me to support it, but with my views I can not see the propriety or the necessity of passing this legislation. No one exceeds me in the interest I feel in the human family. My profession taught me lessons I never will forget, lessons drawn from the suffering and sorrow that invade communities in this country, but I have also been taught that the community and the State had responsibility for their citizens and ought to provide for them and that it should not be devolved upon the National Government,

The Economy Board-I believe that is what it is called, although I believe it has another title, which I have forgottenhas recently called attention to the fact that enormous sums are being wasted by duplication of work in the departments, and while that board has made some ridiculous recommendations, such as the abolition of the Revenue-Cutter Service, it has made some very wise suggestions in the direction of getting rid of duplication. And yet in this very bill we propose to duplicate work that has already been done or is being done to-day, and to appropriate the money of the people for the purpose of giving places to a few clerks and three or four higher officials.

I suppose the chief of this bureau has been selected. I do not know who he is. I presume he is a good man; but I prefer that he shall earn his living in some other direction than spending the money of my constituents in promoting work such as is contemplated in this bill, which, in my judgment, Mr.

President, is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. President, while the Senator from Texas [Mr. BALLEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] were despondent when they addressed the Senate two or three days ago as to the fate of this bill, saying it would doubtless pass, and I do not know but that I ought to join with them in their lamentations

Mr. HEYBURN. I have changed my mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho says he has changed his mind. That is hopeful. I say I do not know but that I ought to join in their lamentations and say that I, too, expect the bill to pass; yet I have a lingering feeling that the Senate of the United States, in this year when we are trying to practice some economies, mostly Democratic, will see the futility of making an appropriation along the lines contemplated by the bill that is under consideration.

Mr. RAYNER. I am in favor of the bill, but I did not intend until this morning to make any remarks upon it at all. I would not submit my views if it were not for a little dialogue that was carried on during a debate upon the measure between the Senator from Texas [Mr. Ballex] and the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon]. I will read a few words of that colloquy, which I hope will justify my observations.

Mr. Bailey. But under what provision of the Constitution is this measure proposed?

Mr. DIXON. The general-welfare clause.

Mr. Bailey. I knew it would come to this. This bill really undertakes to excuse itself on that ground because it is entitled "A bill to collect statistics for the 'welfare' of the children."

Mr. Dixon. I had not intended to raise any constitutional question in what I had to say, but as long as the Senator from Texas has raised the constitutional feature of the matter I will say that we certainly have the power under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, which has accommodated itself to thousands of enactments by Congress. The opening clause of the Constitution certainly covers the bill under consideration.

President, I can not stand that. I propose to vote for the bill, but if I could not put it under any other clause of the Constitution except the general-welfare clause and the preamble of the Constitution itself I would not vote for it, no matter how beneficient and excellent a measure it may turn out to be.

I thought, Mr. President, that we had settled this question long ago in the Senate upon the general-welfare clause, that there is no general-welfare clause in the Constitution of the United States. I challenge contradiction upon that point. I say if this bill is put under that clause, then there is no constitutional warrant for it at all; and I would not vote for it for a moment if I did not think that it came under another clause of the Constitution which affords a justification for its

All the authorities and all the text writers agree without one discordant voice that there is no substantive general-welfare clause in the Constitution of the United States, and the Senator from Texas is perfectly right upon that proposition. taken an oath here to support the Constitution of the United States. How can we support the Constitution of the United States if we vote for a bill that comes under an alleged generalwelfare provision if there is not any general-welfare clause at all? It must be put, Senators, upon some other ground, and I am very frank to say that if I did not believe that it classified itself under some other distinct ground, under no circumstances could I vote for it. I intend to vote for it, but not on the ground that it has been placed on here in the Senate.

I thought we had ended that proposition two or three sessions ago when we entered into a kind of an agreement here that there was no general-welfare clause of the Constitution of the The text writers with unanimity admit that United States. there is no such substantive provision as the general-welfare clause. Here is what Hamilton says in his celebrated report upon manufactures in 1791, which was the first interpretation of this clause:

Common defense and general welfares are not to be construed as a stinct grant of power, but are qualifications of the objects of the taxing power.

Judge Story, upon page 661 of his first volume upon the Constitution, uses this strong language with reference to this clause:

tution, uses this strong language with reference to this clause:

* * Do the words "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," constitute a distinctly substantial power; and the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," constitute another distinct and substantial power? Or are the latter words connected with the former so as to constitute a qualification upon them? This has been a topic of political controversy, and has furnished abundant materials for popular declamation and alarm. If the former be the true interpretation, then it is obvious that under color of the generality of the words to "provide for the common defense and general welfare" the Government of the United States is, in reality, a government of general and unlimited powers, notwithstanding the subsequent enumerations of specific powers; if the latter be the true construction, then the power of taxation only is given by the clause, and it is limited to objects of a national character, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare."

* * The reading, therefore, which will be maintained in these commentaries is that which makes the latter words a qualification of the former; and this will be best illustrated by supplying the words which are necessarily to be understood in this interpretation. It will then stand thus: "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

A school of commentators arose after the adoption of the Constitution who had taken a recess for a hundred years until the Senator from Montana rang the bell and assembled them again in convention, who claimed that this was a distinct clause; that we could not only lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts, but that we could provide for the common defense and general welfare as a separate proposition. When Story comments upon that provision, he says that it means that we can lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare.

I want to quote a few lines now from Pomeroy. These are all gentlemen who belong to a different school of constitutional construction from what I do, but I am willing to take their interpretation. I will read what Pomeroy says upon the subject. It is a very plain and explicit statement. Pomeroy Congress has power "to lay and collect taxes, etc., to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Do these two clauses contain two separate and distinct powers, or is the latter a limitation upon the other? In other words, does the Constitution, by this language, confer upon the Legislature a general faculty of taxation, and also another general capacity to pay public debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare; or does it confer a limited power of taxation by restricting the purposes for which taxes may be laid and confining them to the payment of debts and provisions for the common defense and general welfare? * * * If the construction should be adopted which regards the second clause as an independent grant of power, it would, in effect, be making our General Government unlimited. Providing for the common defense and general welfare includes everything which any government could possibly do; and a grant of power in these broad terms would be the same as making Congress omnipotent, equal in the extent of its functions to the British Parliament.

Now, I will read one decision and I will ask leave of the Senate to print a few other decisions upon the matter. is a decision in the western district of Missouri, by Judge Rogers, whom I knew to be a very able man:

Rogers, whom I knew to be a very able man:

The "general-welfare" clause "contains no grant of power whatsoever, but it is a mere expression of the ends and purposes to be effected by the preceding power of taxation." I content myself with the fact that the former construction has never been sustained by any court, and the reverse has been held so often as not to require citations to support it; while the latter construction rests upon the theory that the "general-welfare" clause contains no power of itself to enact any legislation, but, on the contrary, the words "and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," according to the most liberal constructionist, is a limitation on the taxing power of the United States, and that only.

No case has been cited tracing the power to enact any statute to the general-welfare clause above quoted, and I do not believe any can be. The learned counsel, in this connection, has cited various acts of Congress of a nature quite similar to the one in question, but no number of statutes or infractions of the Constitution, however numerous, can be permitted to import a power into the Constitution which does not exist, or to furnish a construction not warranted. * * *

Mr. President, what is the use of talking about the general-

Mr. President, what is the use of talking about the general-welfare clause of the Constitution? The Senator from Montana, with great respect and deference to him, has gone so far as to say that we are authorized to pass this law under the preamble of the Constitution; that Congress can pass laws under the preamble of the Constitution.

I quote in this connection what Story says in reference to the preamble of the Constitution. The preamble reads as follows:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Here is what Story says upon that:

Here is what Story says upon that:

And here we must guard ourselves against an error which is too often allowed to creep into the discussions upon this subject. The preamble never can be resorted to to enlarge the powers confided to the General Government or any of its departments. It can not confer any power per se; it can never amount, by implication, to an enlargement of any power expressly given. It can never be the legitimate source of any implied power, when otherwise withdrawn from the Constitution. Its true office is to expound the nature and extent and application of the powers actually conferred by the Constitution, and not substantively to create them. For example, the preamble declares one object to be, "to provide for the common defense." No one can doubt that this does not enlarge the powers of Congress to pass any measures which they may deem useful for the common defense.

I read from Madison in The Federalist:

I read from Madison in The Federalist:

Some, who have not denied the necessity of the power of taxation, have grounded a very flerce attack against the Constitution on the language in which it is defined. It has been urged and echoed that the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," amounts to an unlimited commission to exercise every power which may be alleged to be necessary for the common defense or general welfare. No stronger proof could be given of the distress under which these writers labor for objections than their stooping to such a misconstruction.

Had no other enumeration or definition of the powers of the Congress been found in the Constitution than the general-welfare expressions just cited, the authors of the objection might have had some color for it. * *

But what color can the objection have when a specification of the objects alluded to by these general terms immediately follows? * * *

For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power? Nothing is more natural and common than first to use a general phrase, and then to explain and qualify it by a recital of particulars. But the idea of an enumeration of particulars which neither explain nor qualify the general meaning, and can have no other effect than to confound and mislead, is an absurdity which, as we are reduced to the dilemma of charging either on the authors of the objection or on the authors of the Constitution, we must take the liberty of supposing had not its origin with the latter.

Now, let us see what Jefferson said upon the subject:

Now, let us see what Jefferson said upon the subject:

Now, let us see what Jefferson said upon the subject:

To lay taxes to provide for the general welfare of the United States, is to lay taxes for the purpose of providing for the general welfare. For the laying of taxes is the power, and the general welfare the purpose, for which the power is to be exercised. The Congress are not to lay taxes ad libitum for any purpose they please; but only to pay the debts, or provide for the welfare of the Union. In like manner, they are not to do anything they please to provide for the general welfare, but only to lay taxes for that purpose. To consider the latter phrase not as describing the purpose of the first, but as giving a distinct and independent power to do any act they please which might be for the good of the Union, would render all the preceding and subsequent enumerations of power completely useless. It would reduce the whole instrument to a single phrase, that of instituting a Congress with power to do whatever would be for the good of the United States; and, as they would be the sole judges of the good or evil, it would also be a power to do whatever evil they pleased. * *

There is another school of constructionists, liberal constructionists, who claim, as Hamilton did, that the power to lay taxes must be coupled with the power to tax for the general welfare. In other words, that when we come to lay taxes, or when we come to appropriate for the purposes of this bill, while we have not any power to pass the bill, we have the power to tax and appropriate money for the purposes indicated in the bill. It might seem very strange, but a school of interpreters, who stand very high upon constitutional construction, have contended for this point. Story discusses it for 50 pages in his volume on the Constitution, admitting that we have not the power under the general-welfare clause to do anything; nevertheless, under the taxing clause we have the right to tax and appropriate for the purposes that we have not any power or jurisdiction to accomplish. The ground will be taken in this debate before it closes, I think, from what I have heard when gentlemen arise to place this bill where it must be placed, under some clause of the Constitution, contrary to the contention of the Senator from Montana, that there is no general-welfare clause of the Constitution; but they will contend for the proposition that Story contended for, vainly, I think, that while you can not pass a bill in the interest of the general welfare you can tax for the general welfare.

In other words, the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations can levy a tax and appropriate money for the purposes of this bill, but we have not any right to pass the Story says it is a dilemma and that he will extricate himself from the dilemma. With great deference to his profound learning, I do not think he has extricated himself from the dilemma. I read a few lies from what I think the greatest work on constitutional law, written by as great a lawyer as there ever was in the country, to show what he calls the absurdity of that position. I will submit to the Senate what Mr. Tucker

Before reading from Tucker I want to say that Hamilton and Madison agree that there is no general-welfare clause, but when they come to the taxing power Hamilton contended you could tax for the general welfare, and Madison contended you could only tax for the general welfare as far as it was governed and circumscribed by the enumerated and delegated powers of the Constitution. Now, Mr. Tucker says:

It would really seem absurd to impute to the framers of the Constitution a purpose to comprehend objects far beyond the powers it conferred upon the Government.

In other words, Congress can not make and control a railroad; but it may raise and appropriate money for the benefit of a corporation that is to regulate and control it. Such a construction of the Constitution is anomalous. It gives an unlimited power of raising money, to be expended at the discretion of Congress, upon any and all schemes which Congress might deem for the "common defense and general welfare," although such schemes Congress is not empowered to project or to carry into execution by any power delegated to it.

Mr. President, I made up my mind long ago, that when contemplated enactments were under consideration the first thing I would do would be to ask myself the question, Does this come under the Constitution of the United States? I care not what the measure may be, I care not what benefit it may confer upon the country, if I am not satisfied in my own mind, giving the Constitution not a narrow but a fair construction, if I can not find some clause of the Constitution under which the measure comes, then I am bound to vote against it, or I violate my oath as a Senator of the United States.

I place this provision under the only clause of the Constitution that it ought to be placed under. Perhaps other Senators may find other clauses and other provisions, but I have placed it under the only provision that I think it can arrange itself under, and that is under the census, or, rather, the enumera-tion, Article I, section 2, subsection 3. If we can not place it under that clause, then I should like some Senator to rise and tell me under what clause it does belong.

I have the same idea about this in my head that I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] has, because I can always tell what he is thinking about from the way he looks. If we were now to pass a census act, the very first census act, I think he and I would agree that enumeration means enumeration, and it does not mean anything else. But I am met with the proposition that it has for a hundred years received an entirely different and more enlarged construction.

I agree with the Senator from Texas that the fact that law after law has been passed that is unconstitutional affords no justification for passing another law that is unconstitutional. In other words, it is contended when you want to support an unconstitutional law all that is necessary to do is to cite some other laws that are unconstitutional in support of the proposition you are contending for.

But, Mr. President, this census act has stood for a hundred years and over. It has been referred to in statute after statute, providing not only for the taking of the census, but referring to facts and statistics that have been gathered by the census. It has been referred to without being interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States over and over again.

Here is the Census Committee, of which my distinguished friend the Senator from Texas is the ranking member, that has never brought in a single protest against the work the census

In all these hundred years not one objection has is doing. been made to the work the Census Bureau is engaged in, and it is engaged in exactly the same sort of work that this bill contemplates.

I therefore take it, when a statute has stood for a hundred years without objection, when committee after committee of both Houses of Congress have approved of it, when the work has gone on from year to year without protest, when statute after statute has referred to the work that is being done under it, when the Supreme Court in any number of decisions has referred to the provisions of the census and the acts that are being done under it, we might presume that when the question goes before the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court will hold it is too late to open the question.

I have a decision on the subject for whatever it may be worth-it took me about three days to find it, and I will give it to the Senate-I want to say that this decision was rendered by a very able judge, who is now one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the State of New York. He was then district judge—Judge Thomas, the district judge for the southern district of New York. The point was made, What right had the Census Bureau to do the work that it is doing; that the Census Bureau under the Constitution had only a right to enumerate, to make an actual enumeration of inhabitants; that is all, the Constitution says. Here is what Judge Thomas says, too:

Respecting the suggestion that the power of Congress is limited to a census of the population, it should be noticed that at stated periods Congress is directed to make an apportionment, and to take a census to furnish the necessary information therefor, and that certain representation and taxation shall be related to that census. This does not prehibit the gathering of other statistics, if "necessary and proper."

Mr. BAILEY. "Necessary and proper" for what? Mr. RAYNER. "Necessary and proper." I am g I am going on to

"Necessary and proper" for the intelligent exercise of other powers enumerated in the Constitution, and in such case there should be no objection to acquiring this information through the same machinery by which the population is enumerated, especially as such course would favor economy as well as the convenience of the Government and the citizens.

For the National Government to know something, if not everything, beyond the fact that the population of each State reaches a certain limit, is apparent, when it is considered what is the dependence of this population upon the intelligent action of the General Government. Sanitation, immigration, naturalization—for these and similar purposes the Government needs each item of in-formation demanded by the census act, and such information, when ob-tained, requires the most careful study, to the end that the fulfillment of the governmental function may be wise and useful.

This is the case in One hundred and sixth Federal Reporter. Mr. President, if it does not come under that provision, then it does not come under any provision. I therefore think this is census work. The language of this bill is:

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters per-taining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality,

And so forth.

I think the Census Bureau could constitutionally do this work. In other words, if the Census Bureau were to undertake to do this work, then I think it would be in the exercise of a constitutional function. I understand-I was not present, but I think the report so shows-that the Director of the Census came before the committee, and he was asked why the Census Bureau could not do this work. The answer of the director was that he did not have the facilities for doing it.

I am not arguing, however, upon the policy of this bill at all; there is much to be said upon both sides of it; but I am arguing simply a proposition of law, that if it does not come under this clause it does not come under anything, and that if the work that is contemplated by this bill were to be done by the Census Bureau-that is to say, if we should order the Census Bureau to do this work—it would be constitutional. the Census Bureau can do this work, and if the work that the Census Bureau does under a bill of this sort is constitutional, then we can by an independent measure institute a separate bureau to do it. I think that one proposition follows from the other with irresistible logic. If the Census Bureau were to undertake to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children, and so on, it would come under this decision. It would come under it and be a constitutional performance of the duties of the Census Office. Then we have a perfect right to accomplish the same purpose as a matter of law by this bill. I am not now speaking of it as a matter of policy, because it might have been better policy to have put it under the Census Bureau; but, as matter of law, it strikes me as an absolutely demonstrable proposition that we have a right to pass an independent bill for the organization of an independent bureau if the Census Bureau would have the constitutional power to do the work.

There is only one word that I want to say to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn]. I always love to hear the senior Senator from Idaho discuss any proposition, because he has the courage of his convictions and says whatever he thinks on any subject without reference to results or consequences. As a matter of policy I would not vote for this bill if what the Senator from Idaho says about it is true. Here is what the Senator says:

This measure is not new. It is something after the character of the arrangement of the Greeks before our era, when the State was the nursery of the children; and they carried it to very great extremes. Finally, one crank, following in the footsteps of another, conceived the idea that the children should be so mixed and so reared that it would be impossible for any particular person to claim any particular child or any particular child or any particular child to recognize any particular person as its parent.

If that were so, I would not vote for the bill. I want the Senator from Idaho to take this innocent bill and demonstrate to me that after it passes no man on this floor will be able to recognize his children and that children will not be able to recognize their fathers, because I really do not want to vote for any such horrible conception of a bill as that. I know that the Senator is a scholar and knows all about ancient and mod-ern history. The fact he states is absolutely true about the Greeks at the time of Lycurgus, although I think Lycurgus was somewhat of a traditional character; but the Greeks did do the very thing the Senator says they did. If this innocent little bill, framed by the chairman of our committee, the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], the colleague of Senator HEYBURN, the senior Senator, has such a horrible object as this in contemplation, that after its passage, or shortly after its passage, nobody will be able to recognize his children and the children will never be able to recognize their father, I will not vote for it; and I would like the senior Senator from Idaho to explain to the Senate of the United States how it accomplishes this object, and I await the explanation before I irrevocably determine how to cast my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not believe that I will devote much time to explaining that question. I was merely comparing times and conditions. I rise for the purpose of speaking for a class of people that seems to have been left out of the consideration of this question—that is, the children of the rich. No one seems to have considered that this law will have any application to the children of the rich and that no inquiry would be directed to their condition. I suppose that is because of the telegram, referred to, I think, by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], that was sent out during the investigation of a former commission something on this order. That was the telegram sent to each of the agents in the field, "Go for the poor centers"—was that it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I saw one telegram sent to one agent: Visit none but the bad factories; do not visit the good."

Mr. HEYBURN. They did not want the agents to visit the homes where the children of those who were touring to Reno were to be found. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that the telegram read: "Visit none but the homes of the poor"?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I did not say that. I said it spoke of factories—of cotton mills—"visit none but the poor mills, the bad mills."

Mr. BORAH. I know something of that telegram, and I do not believe that the word "none" was in it. I think the Senator is in error as to that proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, what was the telegram? I may not quote it exactly.

Mr. BORAH. The agent in the field asked for directions with reference to making a certain investigation, and he was advised, first, to make certain investigations in certain mills where children were employed, and the object of it was, Mr.

Mr. OVERMAN. What was the language of the telegram?

I have not seen it for three years.

Mr. BORAH. I have not seen it for some time, but I know the substance of the telegram was to have the investigation made in certain mills first, and for the sole purpose that those mills, being advised that the investigation was going on, would have concealed conditions which it was the business of the department to uncover.

Mr. OVERMAN. The telegram I saw did not have over 10 words in it. That would make over a hundred words.

Mr. HEYBURN. A night message.
Mr. OVERMAN. That was a night message, I reckon. The telegram I saw said "visit the bad mills." I do not know whether or not the word "none" was used in it. I do not quote it exactly, but I quote the substance of that telegram.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has the telegram now practically correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Because it was the bad mills the conditions in which it was desired to learn before the bad mills could cover up the conditions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did they not visit the good mills?
Mr. BORAH. They did visit the good mills.
Mr. OVERMAN. The telegram said "visit the bad mills," and my recollection is that it was "none but the bad mills," but I know it said "visit the bad mills."

Mr. BORAH. The Senator would have the agent avoid visiting the bad mills, would he?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I want him to visit all the mills.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what he did do. Mr. OVERMAN. I doubt that.

Mr. BORAH. He visited all the mills, but he visited the bad mills first

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; that is what he did, or what she did.
Mr. BORAH. Well, if it was a woman, she would do it better than he would. [Laughter in the galleries.]
Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt that is so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Occupants of the gallery will refrain from demonstrations.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was not speaking in a spirit of levity, although, unfortunately, it might be so considered. When one refers to the children of the rich in considering the wisdom of this legislation, it is a more solemn question, if possible, than that which deals with the children of the poor. Do you think that the standard of morality of the working people of this country is below that of those who do not work? If you do, you are greatly mistaken. Would it be tolerated that these agents should go into the home of a man who lived in a costly mansion and was surrounded by fashionable life for the purpose of inquiring into the conditions surrounding his children as to whether or not a high standard of personal and social morality was maintained by the parents, as to whether the child was surrounded with the atmosphere and the association of temperance and frugality and those virtues that are essential in the formation of the mind of a child? What kind of a reception would one of these representatives provided for in this bill get in such a house? How much information would he receive if he arrived there before the hour when such a household is around for duty? Do you think that those people would recognize the necessity of any inquiry on the part of the Government as to the moral condition of their children? How would they receive the proposition to investigate the habits of the children of such parents, who were in the expensive schools of the country, as to their temperance or their frugality or their customs of life? You would bring such a storm down upon those who were responsible for such an attempt as would stir the country from end to end and reach this Chamber.

Is it not as important to inquire as to the habits of those children as it is to inquire as to the habits of the millions of children belonging to what we are often pleased to term "the middle class" or "the humbler walks of life"? The church membership of this country, made up of honest, God-fearing mothers and fathers, is comprised largely of the parents of these poor children about which we are showing so much

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. Ninety per cent of the membership of the churches of this country is comprised of the parents of the working classes. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that my colleague says that the bill discriminates in the investigation to be made?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not. I am discriminating. Mr. BORAH. Oh! That has been my impression from the beginning

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator's impression was correct. Has that phase of this legislation been considered? If it has been, does anyone suppose that the law would be so administered as to deal equally with the children of all classes? Would it inquire whether or not the habits of the parent of wealth were such as to exercise a proper influence over the mind of the child of wealth, or do they propose to inquire whether or not the moral character and habits of the rich parent are such as to constitute a worthy example to the children of those parents?

Do they propose to follow the child of the rich into the schools, into the colleges, into whatever institution the child is sent to obtain an education, to ascertain whether or not the morals of that child need public supervision or public exposure?

In the volume referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] we find criticisms upon the personal character of the parents of the poor. Do you propose that there shall be published, in like volumes, criticisms upon the personal character and habits of the parents of the rich children? No: this matter has been discussed in newspapers and in speech and in letter always from the standpoint that it was the children of the poor that needed the care and supervision of the Federal Government, and that the money was to be appropriated for the advancement and the uplift only of the children of the poor. When we are legislating here all are of equal wealth and equal concern. We do not legislate for classes. wealth and equal concern. We do not legislate for classes. Do you think the morals of the people of wealth in this country are superior to the morals of the people who labor for their living and who constitute, probably, 90 per cent or more of the population?

If this bill becomes a law I trust that some strong men endowed with the power of administering government will see to it that its first application is to those who are seeking to place this brand of suspicion upon the poor. Wealth does not breed morality. It more often tempts away from the path of morality. Some are moral because they are poor. Mighty few are moral because they are rich. I am only endeavoring to point out some of the things that seem to be overlooked in considering this measure.

My colleague suggests that there is nothing in this bill that would prevent it. That phase of this measure has not been touched upon in the newspaper consideration of it, nor by any correspondent, nor by any man in or out of the Senate who has spoken on it. The bill, it is assumed, is to deal only with the slums or with the poor. There may go into the household of the humblest of those who are pressing for this legislation; there may go into the household of the poor man, who is defenseless against this inquisition, a man stamped with authority, or who thinks he is, and he may ask the resident questions as to his habits, as to his wife's habits, as to the habits of the adult members of the family, as to whether they play cards or drink or gamble or dance, and then you have made a record by which the child is to be judged and the parent or guardian is to be judged. You have indulged in an inquisi-torial proceeding, which, except for the purpose of discovering crime or enforcing the law against it, we ought never to permit under the laws of this country.

But you have not contemplated that this agent might go a little further up on the hill and enter the home of culture and wealth and refinement, real or presumed, and say: "Do you parents of this child drink? Do you observe the rules of conservative decency? Are you living such upright lives as to be an example of morality to this child?" You have not contemplated that, and yet it is within the provisions of this law, and, I assert, would never be within the execution of it. There is not a word, so far as my attention has been called to the report of the former committee, that even refers to any except

I want to emphasize again what I said with reference to the comparative social and moral status of the parents of the poor and the parents of the rich. I reassert that the great bulk of the Christian population in this country who go to their churches and take their families with them are from the poor. The Christian religion, except for that class, would be a social parade on Easter day.

Mr. President, we must not lose sight of these questions in the consideration of such a measure. No man here or elsewhere would go further than I would to uplift the standard of morality among the children of this country, but I am not going to accept any nostrum that is labeled as a cure-all for poverty and its consequences without knowing of what that nostrum is composed, without knowing what its effect will be, and without knowing something as to who shall administer it-by whom the law shall be executed.

I want to know something more than we have been told, more than has been suggested even in regard to the working of such a measure. The self-constituted guardian, whether it be embodied in the highest legislative body in the country, or in the courts, or in the executive departments of the Government, is a dangerous element. Who is seeking this position? Probably a thousand, looking forward to the time when they may settle comfortably and snugly into the office created by such a measure. Of course, this little coterie of clerks can not execute such a law. They could not execute it in the District of Columbia, much less throughout this country. They would not attempt to execute it except as against the class that is most helpless in their hands-those who toil for a living and do the best they can.

Mr. President, we are not alone—those who have spoken and those who will vote against this measure. The people who have studied this question, and have spent a lifetime of voluntary effort to cure these evils, not men under salaries or officers of a bureau, but men who because of the fact that their accumulations enabled them to do so, have devoted their time to such humanitarian measures, are opposed to this bill. They have no interest in it. J. D. Lindsay, president of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, who is nobody's hired man, but who has a heart as big and true as ever beat in a human breast, out of his love for his fellow kind and in his devotion to this element of the people, condemns this measure and gives his reasons for it. I will ask that it be inserted in the Record in this connection. I have here the reasons Mr. Lindsay gives for opposing this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why not read it?
Mr. HEYBURN. I will read it if Senators desire to hear it; and any who have given attention to this matter know who this man is:

this man is:

John D. Lindsay, president of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, is equally emphatic in his opposition to the bill. He pointed out yesterday that such a bureau as it proposes to establish is unnecessary, inasmuch as the Census already deals adequately with the statistics on infant mortality and the birth rate, while the Bureau of Labor investigates all subjects connected with the working people, whether adult or children, and the Bureau of Education is gathering statistics as to legislation affecting children in the several States.

The Federal Government has nothing to do directly or indirectly—

He said-

He said—

with State legislation on the subject of child welfare. That is a matter which concerns the States themselves and is one of the sovereign powers which, by the Constitution of the United States, each State has expressly reserved to itself. Moreover, the National Government could not get the desired information and data more effectively than the respective States. It may be true that persistent recurrent inquiries from the Federal children's bureau might induce State officials not only to keep better records but also to answer questions of the Federal investigation, but it would be childish to argue that this is a justification for invalid legislation.

Mr. Lindsay quoted a recent address of Commodore Gerry, in which, concerning the present State society for child protection in connection with this bill, the commodore said:

"Bequests now made to them individually would instead be left to this great central national bureau, to be squandered at its pleasure in 'educational' work and fat salaries to the deserving. Useless statistics would be piled up by the millions and our great and glorious work of rescue and prevention obscured. I can not well conceive of a plan framed better than this to destroy our usefulness."

"Dr. William O. Stillman, president of the American Humane Association," continued Mr. Lindsay, "addressed a letter to the chairman of the House committee which had the bill under consideration, saying:

"'This bill seems especially designed to create expensive and unnecessary offices, at the expense of the Government, for the purpose of scientific investigation of statistics relating to juvenile questions, which must eventually be wholly thrashed out by the State legislatures. It is believed that the proposed plan is only an entering wedge for much larger expenses, which in reality should be wholly borne by private individuals and corporations. There is more red tape than there is of practical conditions seem to have been sacrificed for the sake of philosophical studies and the glamour of th

I have on my desk the statement made by Mr. Elbridge T. Gerry, but I think enough of its spirit, which is in conformity with what I have just read, will be found in that statement.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to prolong this discussion at all. I merely desired to call attention to the wide scope and the possibilities, not the probabilities, affecting the investigation of the children of those who are not to be classed among the poor. Poverty is, in the contemplation of those supporting this measure, to be made a spectacle for the wonder and amazement of those who have little to do except to attend to somebody else's business. It is a sad spectacle in the legislative forum of the country to see these people who are as much a part of the Government as any others made the special target of criticisms and the recipients of the scorn and the pity of those who would build up political machinery as they would build monuments at their gateposts.

Mr. President, if there is anything that weakens the founda-tion of our Government and loses or sacrifices the confidence of thinking people, it is such attempts at legislation. I do not know what the end of such a measure will be, should it unfortunately pass out of this body with its approval. I can only trust that somewhere along the road it will meet with its deserts at the hands of the executioner.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, like other Senators upon this floor, I have gotten communications from persons in this city and some States in the Union in support of this measure. In-asmuch as I have made up my mind to vote against it, I desire to put upon record the reasons which have brought me to that

Before I examined the bill or investigated the subject I had intended, in a general way, to support this measure, upon the idea that I could thereby do something to aid children and to help them to become useful men and women. Any measure of this kind appeals to one who has seen and knows the hard side of life. If I could be convinced that the Congress has the power to enact legislation of this kind, I might waive some of the other serious objections which appear in the bill.

To those who scoff at constitutional objections being raised upon this floor I may offer as an excuse that I am new here and I am not very far away from the solemn oath which I took on this floor less than a year ago to support and defend the Constitution. Having the old-fashioned idea that the National Congress must find a warrant in the Constitution for every step which it takes, it would seem to me that those who are sponsors for this legislation would point out the grant of power under which this legislation could be justified and not refer us to textbooks alone.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has finally taken recourse to that clause of the Constitution authorizing the Federal Government to enumerate the peoplethe census clause. There is ingenuity in this position, but to me it is not convincing. But, as I shall show later on, the Census Department and other departments have, either with or without constitutional grant, gone into the life of the family as fully as is contemplated by this bill. But when the great Senator from Maryland wants to support a measure and he can find no other warrant for a department to investigate "juvenile courts," "diseases of children," and "desertion" than the census clause, then I feel an additional security in my position.

The report from the Committee on Education and Labor says:

The bill is not designed to encroach upon the rights nor relieve the States from the duty of dealing with this subject, but to furnish information to enable them to more successfully deal with it. It was the opinion of the committee that the duty devolves primarily upon the States to legislate upon this important subject and the States can more effectively deal with it. But it seemed to the committee that there was a duty upon the part of the National Government to aid in getting such information and data with a view to assisting in this work, and that the National Government could get such information and data more effectively than the respective States.

Thus we see, at the outset, that the committee which reported the bill to this body admits that the subject of child life is one as to which the States have not delegated any power to the National Government. They further admit that if any remedial legislation shall follow from the investigations and reports to be made under this bill such legislation must devolve upon the various States.

It is not claimed that the Government has any power, but in some mysterious way the duty is linked to the Government, where the power is admitted to be absent.

The party to which I belong has been for years calling the attention of the people to the gradual encroachment of the Federal Government upon State power. The alarm has been sounded by that party that gradually the Federal Government has been encroaching, under one pretext or another, upon powers which at the beginning of this Government were never intended to be exercised by the Federal Government. It therefore seems to me that especially those who hold commissions in this body under that party should be ready and willing to draw the line at some point and at some time. If we can make inrestigations upon subjects as to which we can not legislate, and do it for the confessed purpose that in the future it is hoped that the legislatures of the various States will use our information to carry out the powers confessedly in the States and clearly not within the Federal Government, then we have crossed the dividing line, and it is useless to inquire further where the granted powers of the Federal Government begin and where they end. It is not the fault of this Senate that the granted powers of the Federal Government do not extend to the deaf, dumb, and blind, the lame and insane, and to many other unfortunates with whom the States must deal.

We can not be blamed because the States failed to grant to the Federal Government the power to reach down and take every unfortunate little child by the hand and lead it to hope, opportunity, and success. I would, if I could, take every child in the country from a workshop and give it only play, supshine, healthy surroundings, and a good education. Whersunshine, healthy surroundings, and a good education. ever I have the constitutional power I would vote to better the condition of child life. But where no one points to the authority for the legislation and the committee which reports the bill admits that the subject is one belonging to the States and not to the Federal Government, and even the Senator from Maryland is forced to fall back upon the census clause. I am forced to vote against my feelings and support my ideas of the pledges made by my party and the oath which I have taken as a Member of this body.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHILTON. I hesitate to do it, but of course I will yield. Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it will not disturb the Senator from West Virginia, I should like to ask him a question in the line of what he is discussing.

Mr. CHILTON. I am not sure that I can answer it, but the Senator may ask it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand the Senator to say that we have no right to gather information to enable the States to legislate. I think the Senator perhaps is correct about that. But the Senator will concede that we have the right to gather information to enable Congress to legislate.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir; I think so.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Provided the legislation is based on some power which Congress has a right to exercise. Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHILTON. 1es, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the Senator's attention to this:
We have the power, undoubtedly, as it seems to me, to gather information from foreign countries to enable us to legislate intelligently with reference to our own country, within the delegated powers of the Constitution. We have the power, I think, to gather information from foreign countries and from the States, which will enable us to legislate intelligently with reference to the District of Columbia, because the Constitution confers upon Congress the sole power to legislate in all matters concerning the District of Columbia. Therefore, the welfare of the children of the District of Columbia is certainly a subject within the power of Congress. May we not gather information with reference to the various subjects that are mentioned in the bill, wherever we may find it, in the States of the Union or elsewhere, if that will enable us to legislate intelligently with reference to the welfare of the children of this District? The District of Columbia has a population of several hundred thousand; there are a good many children here; and I submit to the Senator from West Virginia-

Mr. BAILEY. Limit the bill to the District of Columbia, and nobody will object to it.

Mr. CHILTON. Let me answer. Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me-

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from West Virginia. He has a prepared speech.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The legislation will apply to the District of Columbia, although the information may be gathered elsewhere

Mr. CHILTON. I will say in answer to the Senator from Utah that I have no doubt a bill relating to the District of Columbia would be perfectly proper, but I want to say now, as I shall show later on, that we have the departments now actually working and, in my judgment, if they do their duty they will be gathering this information just as fully as they could if this bill were passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But is it not within the power of Congress, if Congress thinks it needs additional information, to gather it? Is that not a matter of legislative discretion?

Mr. CHILTON. I take due note of the words "additional in-They can get the additional information under existing law.

From the standpoint of my record and my desire to aid children, my position here is a source of deep regret to me, but from my standpoint as a Democrat and the duty which devolves upon Democrats to keep the party pledges, I do not hesitate to say that I feel that my foundation is as firm as a rock. If the supporters of this bill would amend it so that even under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution it could be defended, I would go to great lengths to support it. But to ask those of us who are here under a pledge to resist further en-croachments of the Federal Government and to guard the re-served powers of the States to the very letter of the Constitution, to vote for a measure whose sponsors can point to no clause in the Constitution justifying it, seems to me is the same as asking that fundamental principles and constitutional limita-tions shall be willfully and knowingly ignored. The people of my State further expect me to do what I can to reduce the heavy burdens of government rather than increase those burdens. The party to which I belong is also under a pledge to the people to reduce taxation as far as possible. Assuredly I can not redeem that pledge by voting an expense upon the Government regarding a matter upon which it is conceded the Government can do nothing in the way of legislation. To do so would be to needlessly expend public money.

This bill proposes to create in the Department of Commerce and Labor an additional bureau with a chief, and an assistant, and a number of clerks and employeees at an initial salary of $29,000 a year. None of us need doubt that from year to year and from time to time the number of these employees will be increased, and salaries will likewise be increased, and when we pass this bill its sponsors will draw a long breath and congratulate themselves only upon a good beginning. What has been the history of all bureaus will be the history of this one. The Department of Commerce and Labor was established February 14, 1903, with a Secretary at a salary of $8,000 a year, an Assistant Secretary at $5,000 a year, a chief clerk, a disbursing clerk, "and such other clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress," There were transferred to that department from the Treasury Department all matters pertaining to the Lighthouse Board and the Lighthouse Establishment; Steamboat Inspection Service; the Bureau of Navigation and United States shipping commissioners; the National Bureau of Standards; the Coast and Geodetic Survey; the Commissioner General of Immigration, the commissioner of immigration; the Bureau of Immigration, the Immigration Service at large; and the Bureau of Statistics. From the De-partment of the Interior there was transferred the Census Office. There was attached to it also the Department of Labor, the Fish Commission, and the Office of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The Bureau of Foreign Commerce was taken from the Department of State, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor was given the power "to rearrange the statistical work of the bureaus and offices confided to said department and to call upon any other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them." There was also created in the Department of Commerce and Labor a Bureau of Manufactures, with a chief, drawing a salary of $4,000, and such clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. There was also created a Bureau of Corporations and a Commissioner of Corporations, with a salary of $5,000, and a deputy at a salary of $3,500; also a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law. The said commissioner was empowered and di-

a diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States * * * and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, etc.

In order to enable the commissioner to exercise this power and authority the said commissioner was given the right to have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations that had been conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in the act approved February 4, 1887, entitled "An act to regulate commerce," including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths.

There was also transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor jurisdiction over the fur-seal, salmon, and other fisheries of Alaska, and over the immigration of aliens into the United States. The commissioner was also required to "make special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President, or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent." He was given the further right and power to make other appointments and to bring to his department other assistants who may be found necessary.

I simply refer to that to show that we have not been backward in creating departments and bureaus in Washington.

Within two years after this act had been passed there had been added for confidential clerk hire, chief clerks, chiefs of divisions, other clerks, messengers, laborers, assistant telephone operators, and attorneys, an annual expenditure of $98,920. (See S. Doc. 195, 58th Cong., 3d sess., pp. 687-688.)

I have not had time nor opportunity to ascertain whether or not other increases in salaries or additions to the force of the Department of Commerce and Labor have been made, nor is such an inquiry necessary to the proposition which I desire to It seems to me that whether the Government has illustrate. the constitutional power or not to inquire into the condition of child life and secure the information contemplated by this bill, it now has enough departments with sufficient powers and is paying a sufficiently large sum of money to have that information. If the Congress is to pay any attention whatever to the many promises made to the people to economize in governmental expenditures, it seems to me that it is our duty now to inquire what, regardless of our powers, is our duty regarding this bill. Assuredly it is meet and proper that Congress should inquire whether or not it is engaged in duplicating officials and duties.

Under the act of February 14, 1903, the Bureau of Labor was put under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and all laws and parts of laws relating to the Bureau of Labor, theretofore created by acts of Congress, were made applicable to the Department of Commerce and Labor. The act of June 13, 1888, provided:

That there shall be at the seat of government a Bureau of Labor, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects of labor, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity.

By the act of March 2, 1895, the Commissioner of Labor is authorized to prepare and publish a bulletin of the Bureau of Labor on the condition of labor in this and other countries, condensations of State and foreign labor reports, facts as to conditions of employment, and such other facts as may be deemed of value to the industrial interests of the United States. I see by the Congressional Directory, Sixty-second Congress, second session, page 301, that this bulletin is issued every month. It seems that these powers already granted to the Bureau of Labor are amply sufficient to collect for the public every item of information contemplated by this bill. How could language be more comprehensive than the following:

To acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with labor, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

If, as has been said upon this floor, some Senators should be sensitive that the information contemplated by this bill would show a deplorable condition in some factories as to child labor, then I suggest that that sensitiveness is late in arriving. The threat of the pending bill need not alarm, because all of the powers necessary to get the information which it is claimed would show these deplorable conditions are now vested in the Department of Commerce and Labor. There is no reason why under existing law, if there be no constitutional objections to its enforcement-and there could be no greater constitutional objections urged to existing law than could be urged to this bill-then there exists upon the statute books ample power to get the most general and comprehensive information concerning the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, the relations of labor to capital, and any useful information on subjects connected with labor, and the means of promoting the material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity of the people, children included. If we shall enforce legisla-tion which we have, and under it secure the information contemplated by these various acts of Congress, there is little, if anything, connected with child life, and especially with child labor, which can not be brought, by way of public documents, to the attention of the people.

Indeed, we are informed by the ninth annual report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, just out, that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the Bureau of Labor published 8 volumes of a report on the condition of child wage earners in the United States. This is Senate Document No. 645, Sixty-first Congress, second session. After the close of that fiscal year 3 other volumes were given to the printer. These 11 volumes embrace the following subjects:

Volume I, Cotton Textile Industry; Volume II, Men's Ready-Made Clothing; Volume III, Glass Industry; Volume IV, Silk Industry; Volume V, Wage-Earning Women in Stores and Factories; Volume VI, The Beginning of Child-Labor Legislation in Certain States: A Comparative Study; Volume VII, Conditions Under Which Children Leave School to go to Work; Volume VIII, Juvenile Delinquency and its Relation to Employment; Volume X, History of Women in Trade-Unions; Volume XI, Employment of Women in Metal Trades; Volume XII, Employment of Women in Laundries.

It seems to the uninitiated that the Bureau of Labor is going right forward with the work which is contemplated by this bill. We are further informed, however, by the same report that the bimonthly bulletins from the Bureau of Labor have contained digests of reports of the State bureaus of labor, foreign official labor publications, decisions of courts affecting labor, and the laws of the various States relating to labor. These bulletins embrace the subjects of child-labor legislation in Europe, fatal accidents in coal mines, labor laws declared unconstitutional, industrial accidents, and various other subjects which have been reviewed in this and other countries. We are further informed that there are four other volumes in the hands of the printer, as follows:

Volume IX, History of Women in Industry in the United States; Volume XIV, Employment of Women and Infant Mortality; Volume XV, Relation of Occupation and Criminality of Women; Volume XVI, Family Budgets of Typical Cotton-Mill Workers.

Here we are going forward investigating all about diseases of women and diseases of children, infant mortality, the conditions under which they work and do not work, the time when they leave their homes and take employment, and, not satisfied with this, we have the comprehensive budget called the Family Budgets of Typical Cotton-Mill Workers.

It seems that the Bureau of Labor does not hesitate now in making investigations as to children and child labor, conditions under which children leave school to go to work, infant mortality, and history of women with regard to criminality, and even "family budgets." It has construed the acts of Congress now upon the statute books as being as comprehensive as the English language can make them, so far as conferring the power and exacting the duty of the Bureau of Labor to investigate and report upon every phase of human industry, capacity, mortality, health, and earning power. There is nothing required in this bill which can not now be investigated and reported upon by the Bureau of Labor. Is there, then, any reason shown for taking this power from the Bureau of Labor? Is there any reason shown for duplicating the work already committed to one of the departments of the Government for the purpose of multiplying the number of Government officials and to dig down deeper into the pockets of an overtaxed people? Let us concede for the argument that there is ample constitutional warrant for this legislation. Let us, for the purpose of argument, wipe out State lines and give the Federal Government the same power in dealing with this subject that it has in dealing with interstate commerce and national currency. Why should we create a new department to do the work which is now being done by other departments of the Government? It is no answer to quote the letter of a chief of the Bureau of Labor, because of the known inclination of a Government official to create more departments and more offices, where an excuse, not to say a reason, can be given for it.

On page 2 of the report of the Committee on Education and Labor, submitting the pending bill, it will be seen that the Chief of the Bureau of Labor says that there are only two or three things which his bureau would touch at all. He lays stress upon the quality of work which can be done under a new bureau, and thinks that a new bureau would give to the work "high-grade quality," and that the equipment of the Bureau of Labor could not study the matters contemplated in this bill as "thoroughly and as fundamentally" as they ought to be studied without somewhat departing from its proper line of work. In other words, here is a tacit admission that the statistical work can be done now under present departments. The sponsors for this bill are apparently contemplating a "thorough and fundamental" study by some new officials rather than the gathering of statistics.

On page 408 of the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor for 1910 I find that the Commissioner of Labor says, speaking of volume 1 of the Report on Women and Child Wage Earners of the United States (I am using his exact language):

The report treats of the sex, age, race, and conjugal conditions of persons employed in cotton mills investigated, their earnings and hours of labor, the composition of their families, the conditions of the members of such families as to employment, the family income from various sources, home ownership and cost of rent, statistics relating to children of specified ages at work, single women over 16 years of age at work, married women at work, and literacy and school attendance of woman and child employees. Other subjects treated are employment of children under legal age, violations of certificate laws, methods and frequency of wage payments, overtime and night work, sanitary conditions of mills and homes, and social and moral conditions.

If the Commissioner of Labor now has the power to report upon these matters, why shall we create a new department for children? It can be seen that the Commissioner of Labor has already reported on sex, age, race, and conjugal conditions, morals and wages of children, illiteracy, night work, sanitary conditions, and even social and moral conditions. There can be no doubt that he has these powers under the act of June 13, 1888, for, as I have shown, language could not be more comprehensive than that used in the last-mentioned act.

Bulletin 95 from the Bureau of Labor is on the subject of "Industrial lead poisoning in Europe." The former bulletins, 94 in number, are on subjects set forth in the last 4 pages of Bulletin 95. They are numbered from 1 to 94, consecutively. To show how comprehensive has been the field of activity under existing law, I ask leave to have printed as a part of my remarks the subjects respectively embraced in these bulletins as set forth in the last four pages. This is to show the subjects treated and to illustrate my point that everything which is embraced here, every activity of any department to be put in use under this bill, has already been put to use by departments now existing.

Mr. CHILTON. An inspection of these subjects will show that the Commissioner of Labor has construed his powers as embracing everything contemplated by the pending legislation. We have been told by a great authority that the Government of the United States can be run on a business basis at a saving of $300,000,000 a year. Already there has been appointed by the President a Commission upon Economy and Efficiency. This commission is in response to a general demand of the people that, inasmuch as Congress has been for years increasing rapidly the heavy burdens upon the people, the time has come when a halt should be called and the expenditures of this Government should be carefully scrutinized and some efforts made to bring the departments of the Government to a state of efficiency approximating an ordinary business concern. If at every session of Congress we create more departments, more bureaus, increase salaries, and create new offices, of course the result is bound to be increased appropriations.

If we have the Census Office, the Bureau of Statistics, and the Bureau of Labor, all with power sufficient to gather in-formation concerning children, and, in addition to that, have a department of health to investigate diseases and their causes, what is the use of duplicating the work required of these departments by creating now a children's bureau, which can do nothing but collect, tabulate, and write up the very same information? Other departments of the Government have been investigating for years. If these departments are not doing the work, let us rather inquire why. Do the employees of these departments, now in existence, give the same time and do as effective work as they would for the same salaries under private employment? If they do not, let us rather inaugurate a movement that will compel department officials to produce the same results in public employment that they are expected to produce in private employment. We might as well create a department for women. My heart goes out to the children of the United States, and I would do anything necessary to protect or help them; but it goes out just as much or more to the women, the patient, long-suffering mothers of these children, who, in many cases, bear the burdens of the whole family. As much and more could be said in favor of creating a depart ment for women that should investigate and report upon the sorrows, sufferings, and the neglect which they have to bear.

Make all the mothers healthy and happy and it will do more to make healthy and happy children than could be done in this bill if it were enacted by every State in the Union. Before I would be willing to vote an increase in the expenses of the Government, if I had the power to do so, I would aid in the building of roads throughout the country to help the farmer and workingman and bring them nearer to the markets to increase the profits upon what they produce. Before the Congress should create a department or bureau for statistical work, and especially for statistical work already provided for, it should improve the waterways so necessary in solving the transportation problems of the Republic and at the same time should make advances in building good, substantial roads to enable the producers of this country to reach the markets at the lowest possible expenditure.

The magic word "progressive" is already being whispered in these Halls as the mascot which shall land this bill safely on the side of the majority. I am a progressive in the broadest and truest sense. I love progress and give no sanctity to a thing solely because of its age. I have acted here with the new Democracy, but have not despised the old. But whenever progressivism shall link itself with needless expenditures, the reckless multiplying of useless officials, and the unthoughted duplication of duties, making no real change except to increase public burdens, then it will soon come to pass that the word "progressive" will lose its magic power,

Mr. President, I can not be deceived into voting to increase needlessly the burdens of the overtaxed people, even though I am told that we shall be led to do so by a little child.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill, and I wish very briefly to give some of the reasons which will influence my vote. It is proposed to create a children's bureau, the work of which is to gather information of a certain character expected to be helpful to those who are giving their time and their efforts to better child life. An appropriation of $29,000 is to be made for the bureau. The information to be gathered is to be published from time to time and be brought within the reach of those who desire to use it.

The objections which have been made to the bill can be classified under two heads: First, that we have no constitutional power to pass it; second, that the bill itself is not meritorious. The reasons which have been advanced to sustain the second objection seem to me not to apply to the measure before the Senate. Phantom dangers, imaginary results, entirely outside of the purpose of this bill, have been attacked by Senators, and the lack of wisdom of certain lines of conduct not provided for by this bill has been made quite clear. It seems that at some time an appropriation of a large amount was made for some kind of an investigation that was carried on foolishly by somebody and resulted in many large volumes of no use to anybody, and perhaps containing matters very objectionable. can not understand why that is any reason that a children's bureau should not be established. Because those to be put in charge of this bureau may do something improper I do not think a sufficient reason to defeat the bill. Let us hope that the head of this bureau will be broad minded and sane; let us hope that he will employ agents who are broad minded and

If they undertake to do such foolish work as that which has been criticized, then it will be time enough to suppress the bureau. The very criticisms that have been so very justly made here upon that other work will warn those in charge of the bureau to be careful how this work is done. Let us see what some of the work proposed by the bill is to be:

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children. The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

I shall not undertake to discuss each one of these duties, but let me illustrate some of the beneficial results that can come from the collection of information by this bureau, through observation that most of us who have been connected with State governments can readily recall.

"Juvenile courts." Within the past three years we have been at work upon a measure of this kind in my own State. The friends of this measure—it has already passed—are still studying the question. They desire to improve it. It would have been of great value to those of us engaged in this legislation to have called upon a bureau of this character to furnish us all that had been done in any one of the States, or even in other countries, toward perfecting juvenile courts. It will still be of great value to the judges of those courts to obtain information of this character, carefully and intelligently prepared. It is a continuous, and it should be a continuous, study to perfect in all the States courts of this character. It is a broad, discretionary work which the judges in juvenile courts perform, and the information gathered and furnished to them through such a bureau will be of vast advantage.

We were engaged in legislation affecting the hours of labor and the character of service to be done by children. Such a bureau, gathering intelligently and sanely information upon this subject, would not have been an interference with the rights of the States; it would not have been an exercise of a power by Congress to prevent the State or to stop the State in which I live in the performance of the duty that properly belongs to it; but the information would have been valuable and helpful to those legislators who were studying the problem and seeking to exercise the authority placed in them wisely to provide for the State the best plan of child-labor legislation.

These problems are still to be studied.

Take again the question of "diseases." No man for a moment would expect the clerks provided for in the bill to give medical opinions, but such a bureau from various hospitals throughout the country could gather information and put it in bulletin form that would be of great value to the boards of education, to the medical boards, and to various organizations in the different States which are studying these problems connected with child life.

I can see substantial benefit that can come from a bureau of this kind. It does not propose to interfere with the rights of a State or of a parent; it solely puts within the reach of those studying the questions the opportunity, with less expense and less difficulty, to obtain information which is to help them in their States.

The bill appeals to me; the purpose of the bill appeals to me. The truth is, I believe in appropriating public money for work of this kind; and I had rather see the National Government appropriating the money that comes from all the people to work of this kind, than to depend upon the charity of some one who has accumulated his millions and in his old age concludes perhaps to make atonement for the way in which he accumulated them.

But it is urged that we have not the power under the Constitution to make an appropriation of this kind and to create this bureau. I am not sure that I like the bill so well creating a separate bureau as I would were the work attached to the Bureau of Education now existing in the Interior Department, but as it is in the shape it is, and I have not the opportunity to vote for it in the other shape, I am going to take it as it comes.

I have said that I believe in spending public money for work of this kind. Is it unconstitutional? What other work of the same character are we doing? Turn to the Agricultural How much can you leave in the Agricultural Department if this bill is unconstitutional? Turn to the Census Bureau. How much can you leave of the census reports if this bill is unconstitutional?

Turn to the Department of Commerce and Labor. How much can you leave in it if this bill is unconstitutional? Turn to the Interior Department. You must wipe out the Bureau of Education; you can find no pretext for it to stand if this bill is an unconstitutional appropriation of money or an unconstitutional creation of a bureau. Take any department in our Government, and applying the strict constitutional rule that would deny to Congress the power to make this appropriation and create this bureau, you would find that you would mutilate this work and stop one-half of the agencies that have grown up during more than a century for the welfare of the people of this land.

Now, I want to ask Senators who vote against this bill upon the ground of its unconstitutionality to be consistent. When the general appropriation bill comes, if we are to fight this bill on account of its unconstitutionality, let us stop that bill and strip the departments, from the Department of State on down. of every dollar of appropriation that goes to a bureau that stands upon the same footing as the proposed bureau will stand.

When for more than a hundred years a majority of Members of the House and of the Senate have continuously made appropriations along a certain line, recognizing all the time, as they have done, their responsibility under the Constitution to obey the Constitution, I would hesitate to set up my own opinion against this long record made by great lawyers and declare that what they have been doing so continuously and so often and so much for the general welfare has been unconstitutionally done.

If I knew it was unconstitutional I would not only vote against this bill, but I would be consistent; I would, when the general appropriation bills come, strike every single dollar from them that stood upon the same footing. But I am not troubled in leaning somewhat upon the precedents that exist. I would not by this declaration commit myself to all these precedents, because there are some that have come to my attention that I would not wish to follow; but, with this long line of precedents for a hundred years, I find no trouble in following them in the present case.

Here upon the floor the Senator from Utah [Mr. Suther-Land] points us to the District of Columbia as a constitutional reason. That would hardly satisfy me, because I wish also to justify my vote upon appropriations of the same character as the appropriation in this bill that have no connection with the District of Columbia, and I do not support this bill on account of the District children.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNEB] points us to the census law. I turn to the Constitution, and I find there other provisions upon which this bill may be based. I find, in Article

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

I turn over a few pages and I find in Article IV, section 3:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. Eliminating the intermediate words, this would read:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of the property of the United States.

Still further I find that Congress has the power-

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

With these provisions of the Constitution I am not prepared to set up an opinion that the course of the Senate and the House of Representatives for the past hundred years with reference to these appropriations for work so valuable has been unconstitutional. I readily reconcile my convictions of duty to accepting the precedents, and I am glad to have an opportunity to vote for an appropriation to so worthy a cause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Works].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, although they take opposite views of the question, it is a matter of satisfaction to one of the older Senators here to find two new Senators like the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] so well able to present their views. But the satisfaction which I feel as a Democrat in witnessing such additions to this body is somewhat marred by the circumstance that these two able Senators have reached opposite conclusions, and yet I venture to hope that the difference between them is not irreconcilable.

But it was not to praise them that I now ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment; it was to examine the case presented to the Senate by the distinguished and brilliant Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I do not accept all that is said in the opinion from which he quoted, and yet I am perfectly willing to rest this contention on the very extract which the Senator from Maryland has read. Let me reread it to the Senate, or at least the vital part of it, which is this:

Respecting the suggestion that the power of Congress is limited to a census of the population, it should be noticed that at stated periods Congress is directed to make an apportionment and to take a census to furnish necessary information therefor, and that certain representation and taxation shall be related to that census.

That far, of course, there is no division amongst any men. The learned judge then proceeds, and this is the meat of the quotation:

This does not prohibit the gathering of other statistics if necessary and proper for the intelligent exercise of other powers enumerated in the Constitution.

Now, Mr. President, we can end this argument, so far as I am concerned, and I will cheerfully resume my seat and bind myself to support the bill, if any Senator can point to any power enumerated in the Constitution to the exercise of which the information to be gathered under this bill is either necessary or appropriate. I do not doubt that if Congress possesses the power to do a given thing it may choose any appropriate means to inform itself so that it may do that given thing wisely; but tell me, sir, what power enumerated in the Constitution can be more justly or more wisely exercised through the information to be gathered by this proposed children's bureau?

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland], with an acuteness for which he is proverbial, suggests that under our power to legislate for the District of Columbia we may go abroad in this and other lands to accumulate this information. The Senator from Utah should not be too certain that Congress has the power which he intimates in consequence of its right to legislate exclusively for the District of Columbia. We do not legislate in our capacity of national sovereign over this District. We legislate by virtue of and under that particular provision that confers upon us exclusive power over the seat of the Government; and it has been held more than once that the seat of government occupies a peculiar relation to the General Government of the United States.

The Senator from Utah perfectly understands that when we create the judiciary of the District of Columbia, we do so, not under the judiciary clause of the Constitution, but under our plenary power over the District. The Senator from Utah knows that the Supreme Court has held, upon a great occasion, that a citizen of the District was not within the meaning of the judiciary clause of the Constitution which provides for the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in cases of diverse citizenship; and I might offer other illustrations of the fact that our power to legislate for the District is confined to the District in the same way that the power of a State to legislate for the people within its borders is confined to that State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not at all disagree with the Senator from Texas that the power of Congress, so far as legislation is concerned, is confined to the District; but does the Senator deny that in order to enable Congress to legislate wisely in reference to the affairs of the District it may not gather information from anywhere it may obtain it?

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely as a State might acquire information to qualify its legislators for the performance of their duty. Let me put this question to the Senator from Utah. Are you voting for this bill for the purpose of qualifying yourself to legislate with respect to the District of Columbia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I answer very frankly, not altogether. Mr. BAILEY. Then the Senator's predicate falls.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish my answer to the Senator. I say not altogether; and I think I can point the Senator to many laws passed by Congress that were not passed altogether to carry out some delegated power under the Constitu-For example, we passed a law with reference to employers' liability which immediately dealt with the relation of master and servant.

Mr. BAILEY. But that was a regulation of interstate commerce with which Congress is especially authorized to deal.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that was a regulation of interstate commerce. Yet it went beyond, and accomplished something in addition to being a regulation of interstate com-It made a better condition for the men who work merce. upon the roads. It accomplished that ulterior purpose as well, and I submit to the Senator that it is no objection to the exercise of a power that out of its exercise comes a beneficent result.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly not— Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me, if we can tie the legislation to a delegated power, we may legislate, although in some other aspect and, perhaps, in a broader aspect, the legislation may accomplish some other purpose which, standing by itself, Congress would have no power at all to deal with.

Mr. BAILEY. No, but the—
Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me still further, but the fact that in addition to being enabled to use this information for the benefit of the District of Columbia, it may be used for the benefit of the States, does not render the law unconstitutional, as I view it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Utah is really voting for this bill for the purpose of enabling him to legislate for the District of Columbia, he casts a constitutional vote, notwithstanding that the result of his vote might be to accumulate information for the legislators of Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And notwithstanding it may result in greater benefit for the States than for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAILEY. But is that the Senator's purpose? He says no, and every Senator on this floor understands that that is not the purpose of it. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was frank enough to say that the general object of the legislation appeals to him, and the Senator from Georgia was frank in another respect. He says he believes in liberal appropriations for such purposes.

Mr. President, I am sometimes tempted to believe in them, too, when I see a pension bill to appropriate $75,000,000 added to a present expenditure of $150,000,000 for that purpose. When I see public money wasted here as if it were not the fruit of the people's labor, I also am tempted to believe that an appropriation of the public money is no burden upon the people. I was impressed by the comparison when the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] stated this morning that we are spending $4,000,000 annually for education in the District of Columbia, and I could not help recalling that the total expenses of the entire Federal Government under the first year of Washington's administration were less than that sum. Sir, that was more than half the annual average of expenditures of the Federal Government under Washington and Adams and Jefferson's administration, if you exclude the interest on the public debt.

In 1861 this was a frugal Government. In 1861 the Representatives and Senators believed that the public money was a trust fund, which they had no right to spend except in the execution of their appointed trust. A great Republican paid a tribute to the southern men of that generation which conquered my animosity toward him, when he declared that the southern men in Congress before the war, while wasteful in their private expenditures, were scrupulously exact when it came to spending the public money.

In 1861, with a population of more than 31,000,000 people, the entire expenditures of the Federal Government aggregated less than $60,000,000. Now, with a population but three times as great, our expenditures amount annually to the stupendous sum of a billion dollars; and I must be permitted to say that the cheaper government of that day was a wiser and a juster government than the extravagant one of this day.

These enormous expenditures, wasteful and profligate, might almost say, have been produced just by the disposition of everybody to be obliging to everybody else and to support men in any kind of propositions that may be tendered.

But, Mr. President, I care very much less about the expenditures than I do about the question of power. I hold peculiar views, or at least they are peculiar in this day, though there was a time when what I believe was believed by practically every Senator occupying a seat on this side of the Chamber. Those who know my peculiar views as to the limited power of Congress may be surprised when I say that I am rather inclined to believe there is no limit on the power of mere appropriation. With the money collected and in the Public Treasury, I think the Congress has the right to give it away just as it may give its public lands; just as it may give away its disused cannon; just as it may loan, as it has done, with my consent, its tents for Confederate reunions; just as it has loaned, over my protest, its money to an enterprising company conducting an exposition. In other words, over its money and over its property I concede that the Government possesses a proprietor's right and may do with it whatever it pleases. I go further in that respect than many men who thoroughly agree with me upon a strict construction of the Constitution.

Mr. President, let every Senator ask himself why he votes for this bill. If he votes for it, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, for the purpose of using this information to guide him in legislating for the District of Columbia, I have no quarrel with him. I may not think his vote a wise one, but I will consider it well within the Constitution. But, sir, that quarrel with him. is not the object of this legislation. The committee is candid enough to say that this bill is intended to help the States to better perform their duty toward the children under their jurisdiction. Search the Constitution from the preamble to the

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to make one suggestion, if the Senator from Texas will yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

WILLIAMS. If the position assumed by the Senator from Utah were really his position, then would he not have supported a bill making provision on an appropriation bill for a bureau somewhere within the District of Columbia and connected with the government of the District of Columbia for the purpose of attaining the end which he says he has in mind?

Mr. BAILEY. I feel sure that is true, and I took the liberty of interrupting the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton] in his very brilliant address long enough to make a suggestion like that to the Senator from Utah. If it is written in the Constitution that Congress shall have power to aid the States in wisely caring for the children under their jurisdiction, then this information will be obtained for a purpose enumerated in the Constitution. If it is written here that Congress may aid the States in healing the sick, or in leading the blind, or in rescuing the deserted children in each of these American Commonwealths, then the information which it is proposed to collect falls within an enumerated power of the Constitution. But nowhere in this sacred instrument is there an intimation that it is the duty of the General Government to aid the States in performing any of those duties. And Senators really aggravate the case against this bill when they say that the purpose of accumulating this information is to help the States perform their duties and discharge their obligations.

Mr. President, unless our fathers made a grave mistake when they established this system, the power of the General Government ends precisely at that point where the power of State The Federal Government is under no government begins. obligation to aid the States in performing their duties, and the States are under no obligation to aid the Federal Government in performing its duties. If it is within the power of the Federal Government to aid the States in the performance of their reserved duties, then if the States fail to perform those duties it must be within the power of the Federal Government to usurp them and perform them instead of the States.

That was once a novel doctrine in this country, but it is novel no longer. An ex-President of the United States—and some people believe that he is to be again the President of these United States, though I do not share that apprehension—while holding that great office solemnly declared that if the States would not perform their duty the Federal Government ought to perform it for them. And, to my mind, that doctrine is no more disquieting than this other suggestion that the Federal Government must help the States to perform their

Mr. President, I understand the forces behind this measure, and it would be a dull man who does not. They were partly revealed by my lovable and brilliant young friend, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], this afternoon in his colloquy with the very able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] when they were disputing as to whether "he" or "she" had done a certain work. The Senator from Idaho averred that if "she" had done it, it was better done than if "he" had done I am willing outside of this Chamber to give the good women all the credit they could crave, but I believe and I do not hesitate to declare it, that the more a woman knows about the things she ought to understand the less she knows about how we ought to perform our duty here. I heard a very excellent story the other day, and while I believe it is not good taste to insert stories in the Congressional Record, I am inclined even at the risk of offending the proprieties of the occasion to relate this one. One of these militant suffragettes went to one of her sisters in the cause and poured out her trouble; told her how her drunken husband had left her with a family of helpless children, and how she was struggling to support them. After she had finished a story of her suffering and distress, which would have moved a hard-hearted man to tears, the suffragist leader said "Sister, put your trust in God, [Laughter.] and she will take care of you."

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to this bill, hoping that the bill might take such form that I would be able in the end to support it. I have received this morning 15 telegrams from good women in the city of New York, conspicuous for their works of charity and philanthropy. Every one of those telegrams was in exactly the same wordsto the extent of misspelling my name.

I am satisfied, after more mature consideration, that I would not be able to support this bill, even if my amendment should be adopted, and one of the things that has done more than anything else to convince me of that fact is the persistency with which the friends of the bill have insisted upon retaining in it that portion of it which I desire to strike out.

Under the circumstances, I feel that I should not call upon the Senate to vote upon the amendment I have offered, and for that reason, with the leave of the Senate, I will withdraw the amendment

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California with-raws the amendment. No amendment having been offered draws the amendment. thereto, it does not require the permission of the Senate, the Chair having held in his own mind, though without having so stated to the Senate, that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio was not an amendment to the amendment, but a separate amendment.

The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the arguments which have been submitted this afternoon in behalf of this measure have been such that it is unnecessary for me to occupy more than a moment's time or, at most, but a few moments in saying what I desire to say.

I was made chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor. I found before that committee a number of bills covering the subject of child labor, and those bills very generally undertook to legislate on, and through congressional action to control, the question of child labor in the several States.

I became satisfied, after investigation, notwithstanding some very earnest arguments in support of the bills, that we had not the constitutional power to go to the extent to which those bills would lead us, and the proposition therefore rose in the committee as to what, if anything, could be done in the premises, those bills being, in our opinion, unconstitutional.

This led to the investigation of the necessity of something being done, as a matter of policy, as to the meritoriousness of the legislation itself, and I became satisfied that we ought to do what we, as the National Government, could do. For that reason and upon that basis I became very much interested in knowing what we could do.

Mr. President, if this matter was submitted to me as an original proposition as to where we would be able to find the power for this kind of legislation, I am frank to say I would have a great deal of difficulty in locating the provision in the Constitution which would warrant the passage of this measure. I felt that way at the time I began the investigation, and I feel that way now. If we stood here without precedent or without Congress having acted heretofore, we would have some difficulty in putting our finger upon the particular provision of the Constitution which would justify the creation of this bureau and the expenditure of this money.

But, as I say, believing that something ought to be accomplished along the line in assisting to remedy the condition which existed in different parts of the Union, I became anxious to know whether the courts or the Government in its other departments had so construed our Constitution or had through long practice established a precendent for this action; and it is upon such construction and such action rather than upon the other proposition or propositions, which have been sub-mitted this afternoon by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Utah, that I rely

I desire to read here a section which has long been upon the

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

Now, under what provision of the Constitution was that measure passed? If we are to stand to-day upon the original proposition and look within the lids of this book for an authority to engage in agriculture, to furnish seeds for the farmer, and to investigate the condition of his live stock and those things, under what provision of the Constitution are we to proceed to do it? If we were here now creating the Department of Agriculture, with its manifold duties as they have been developed from year to year under different acts of Congress, under what provision of the Constitution would we proceed?

Nevertheless, all who have been here long enough to participate in legislation know that the ablest lawyers in the Senate have not only accepted that construction of the Constitution, but by their votes, directly or indirectly, by action, express or have specifically upheld that construction Constitution.

Again, Mr. President, the Commissioner of Education collects statistics and general information showing the condition and progress of education, issues an annual report in two volumes, a bulletin in several numbers annually, and miscellaneous publications; has charge of the schools for the education of native children in Alaska; supervises the reindeer industry in Alaska; and administers the endowment fund for the support of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts.

Aside from two phrases or two clauses in that section describing the duties of the Commissioner of Education, under what provision of the Constitution do we proceed to do that? What right has the Federal Government to engage in the matter of distributing literature for the benefit of educators in the different States and of gathering that uniform knowledge which some people believe to be necessary in order to raise the standard of educational work in the different States? Under what power, if you were required to place your finger upon the clause of the Constitution, do we assume to do that?

Again, the Bureau of Soils investigates soils in all their relations to climate and to organic life. It makes field investiga-tions and prepares soil-survey maps showing the extent, distribution, and characteristic properties of all the important soil types found in various portions of the United States, and its published reports suggest possible lines of improvement in the treatment, management, and use of these soils.

It investigates and represents upon maps the distribution and concentration of alkali salts in soils of various portions of the arid regions. Through its laboratories it investigates the fundamental causes of the fertility or infertility of soils and the causes for low yields of crops.

Now, is that under the interstate commerce clause? Is that under the census clause? Does it distinguish itself in your mind from the fact of gathering information concerning the citizenship of the country? I might call attention to a number of other illustrations.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Texas.
Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator has made his opinion reasonably plain, but I want it made perfectly plain, because, without intending to flatter him, I value it. I want him to say that in his own judgment there are no clauses of the Constitution on which the instances to which he has referred can be

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would not want to say that, because I would fly in the face of such men as the Senator from Texas and others, for whose profound knowledge I have the greatest admiration, for they have in my judgment construed that power to exist somewhere in the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; the Senator from Texas has not. The Senator from Texas has been opposed to all these things. As a last word I want to say to the Senator from Idaho now that some years hence, when our successors are debating still another bill that goes further than this, as we have gone further than the cattle and the soil bureaus, they will then point to this, as the Senator has just pointed to them, as a warrant for going beyond what we dream of now. I want to say flatly and frankly that in my opinion Congress had no warrant for creating any of the bureaus to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. BORAH. I might be perfectly willing to join with the Senator from Texas in that view if it were an original proposition to be submitted without the judgment of those men who have found that authority to exist. But, Mr. President, the question arose then in the mind of the committee that if the Government was assuming to itself the power to do these things, if the authorities having the right to construe the Constitution either in the courts or as a legislative body were assuming to do these things, should we not proceed to do that which in our judgment was of the utmost necessity to be done?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I want to remind the Senator that the greatest Democrat who ever occupied a seat in the Senate, except the great Democrat who in the second administration presided over the Senate, challenged the right of Congress to create the Department of the Interior. He declared that the very name was ominous, and predicted precisely what has grown out of it, until, as we read that debate to-day, it sounds like a prophecy. These things have not passed unchallenged.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Texas a question before he takes his seat, for the same reason that he asked the one of me.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator from Texas concedethat the thing which we are undertaking to do in this bill is something which we have been doing under other bureaus for the last 20 or 40 years—that is, so far as the question of power is concerned?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; because we are here exercising the power to create an office, and I maintain that an office can only be created to execute some Federal power, while it might be competent for Congress by a naked appropriation to either employ somebody to obtain this information or to authorize some incumbent of an office already created to ascertain it.

Mr. BORAH. But we created the Bureau of Soils.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that. Mr. BORAH. And we created the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. BAILEY. And of Education. Mr. BORAH. And of Education; and we created them all and made the appropriation and defined the duties. They must be the same duties, and the same power to create must be the same we are exercising here.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator and myself do not differ about that, and I think precisely the same argument that lies against this bill lay against them. I think I perhaps could justify the Bureau of Animal Industry, because that relates in some degree to interstate commerce; but I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Idaho that the acts creating the other bureaus are on all fours with this, and I was just as much opposed to them as I am to this.

If the Senator will indulge me a moment longer, I will add that when I began my opposition to this measure I did not expect it to be any more effective than, from time to time, my opposition has been to similar measures; but I think the Senate now begins to perceive that these proceedings we have authorized and encouraged have progressed too far into the realm of State jurisdiction, and the best of us-not all of the best, but many of the best in the Senate-feel that the time has come to call a halt.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should hate very much to halt upon a children's bureau. I think there might be reasons for halting upon this bill which did not exist with reference to these other matters, but they are not constitutional reasons. There are powerful interests which would like to defeat this bill. We could not very well justify ourselves or justify our consistency by halting the creation of this bureau unless we should go back, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, and strip these bureaus of the authority which they are now using when appropriation bills come in; and I suspect-

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Idaho and every other Senator will find himself willing many times to do with respect to the hogs and horses and cattle what he would not entertain any suggestion of doing with respect to the children.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly there are many things we do with reference to the soil and with reference to the cattle, etc., that we would not undertake to do with reference to children. Nevertheless the things which we propose to do in this bill are quite as essential as those things which we propose to do and are doing with reference to the other matters.

Most of the objections to this bill, Mr. President, are not in the bill at all. Most of the objections which have been made on the question of merit are based upon propositions which, in my reading of the bill, I do not find there at all. We do not seek to interfere in any way or shape or form with the matter of legislation in the States or with the control of the question of child labor, or say how long they shall work or what the hours of labor shall be, nor where they shall be employed. We do not seek to interfere with the domestic relation of the parent and child. We do not seek to take away from the custody of any parent the child, or to educate it, or to have anything to do with those matters about which so much has been said, and to which such earnest and, in my judgment, wise objections have been made.

We seek only, Mr. President, to gather information concerning that which the States are doing, or may do, to diffuse that information precisely as we diffuse the information with regard to these other subjects matter. We interfere in no way with those matters which the States. those matters which the States would protect, and I stand with them in their views concerning those matters. I believe that the States should deal with these matters in affirmative legislation; and if we had the power I would certainly hesitate to enter into the domain of the State to interfere with those relations about which the State must know most and with which it can deal better than the National Government. But the in-formation which we seek to gather is for the benefit of the entire proposition of dealing with the citizenship or those who are soon to be the citizens and are to take care of the country when the duty finally devolves upon them.

Something has been said with reference to the fact that we will not enter the homes of the rich. I do not know that we shall. I do know that the death rate among the poor, that the condition with reference to diseases which are superinduced or caused by reason of their poverty is something that needs attention. I doubt if those same things need any attention in the homes of those who have means to take care of the situa-

But if Senators will read the facts which are at hand with reference to the condition of children in the great cities, in the manufacturing establishments, and in the places where they work and toil, they will come to the conclusion that there are conditions surrounding the poor and those who labor, conditions which they can not control, which ought to have the supervising and controlling power or eye of some one to direct and to pro-There is no discrimination in classes, but the necessity of it will likely not exist to the same extent that it does in other instances

Now, Mr. President, I shall not longer detain a vote. I should like to cover a few other points, but I am suffering from such a severe cold I am unable to proceed further.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand there are other Senators who want to speak on this bill. It is now 20 minutes to 6, and if it does not conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement, I will move that the Senate taken a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this debate. I stated on yesterday that this information could be obtained and was being obtained by departments, and that there is no use for the creation of this new bureau. I have searched through the Congressional Directory and I find that we have 10 bureaus under which this information can be obtained. We have a Bureau of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in the Treasury Department. We have a Bureau of Education in the Interior Department, and now we are flooded with letters from every State in the Union asking us to extend the power of the Educational Bureau by giving them additional appropriations. We have a Bureau of Statistics in the Agricultural Department. We have a Bureau of Statistics in the Commerce and Labor Department. We have a Bureau of Labor in the Commerce and Labor Department; and I want to read the authority given by Congress to that bureau. In addition to other things directed by that bureau, it says the Commissioner of Labor-is also authorized to make special reports on particular subjects whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress, or when he shall think the subject in his charge requires it.

Now, there is the authority for a great bureau of this department to get all this information that anybody wants. I want to read that again:

He is also authorized to make special reports on particular subjects whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress, or when he shall think the subject in his charge requires it.

In addition to that, we have the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce and Labor. We have the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce and Labor. have the Division of Vital Statistics. Under that you can get all the information you want. Then we have the Bureau of Economic Investigation of the Agricultural Department. You can get all you want under that bureau. We have the Bureau of Information of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Do we need another bureau when we have 10 bureaus now established that could get this information you desire?

What does a bureau mean? It is said there are only $29,000 appropriated. If this bill passes, they must have another building, probably a $100,000 building, with a rental of $10,000. That has been the experience of the past.

We have here a bureau chief with two messengers, one to open the door when you come in and shut the door when you go out; one to put on your coat when you go out and pull off your coat when you come in. He has to have a stenographer. He has to have a chief clerk. When he puts on his coat or takes it off he has to have a messenger, and then there must be an assistant chief and clerks all down the line. When we will have a division here, and will have to have agents to go around in every State and get this information. You have got to get it somehow or another. Do you expect to get it by mail? You have to have special agents in every State and every city and every county in order to get all this information.

It takes $150,000 or $300,000 to get the information we have, which nobody has read. It will take at least $300,000 to get this information. Why establish this new bureau, especially when we want to economize? I believe the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] always goes around armed; that he carries something in his hip pocket. I want to see if he has a little red book in his pocket, from which he used to read to us in years past. Let us see if the Democratic Party in its platform has not declared against increasing officeholders and for economy and reform. I wonder if he has that red book in his pocket now.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have the red book.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator has it, I would like to have him read the plank from the Democratic platform against the increase of officeholders.

Mr. STONE. I make no bold pretension of being the bearer of the ark of the Democratic covenant containing the book of the law. Nevertheless, I am an humble defender of the ark and the law. There is a plank in the last Democratic platform to that effect. I may say by way of preface that this which I am about to read was written by Judge Alton B. Parker, one of our great party leaders, and was heartily approved by our candidates for the Presidency in 1908. It is a plank in this platform having the hearty approval of two of our party leaders, and it was adopted with unanimity by the great convention of 1908. It is as follows:

Coincident with the enormous increase in expenditures is a like addition to the number of officeholders. During the past year 23,784 were added, costing $16,156,000, and in the past six years of Republican administration the total number of new offices created, aside from many commissions, has been 99,319, entailing an additional expenditure of nearly $70,000,000, as against only 10,279 new offices created under the Cleveland and McKinley administrations, which involved an expenditure of only $6,000,000. We denounce this great and growing increase in the number of officeholders as not only unnecessary and wasteful, but also as clearly indicating a deliberate purpose on the part of the administration to keep the Republican party in power at public expense by thus increasing the number of its retainers and dependents. Such procedure we declare to be no less dangerous and corrupt than the open purchase of votes at the polls.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the Senator and I are both on the same side of this question, I want to express regret that through the instrumentality of that little red book he has introduced partisan politics into the discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator from New Hampshire said this morning, we can not judge of the future except by the past. The establishment of these 10 bureaus will show that when originally established there were but few officeholders and but a small amount of money appropriated, and year after year, year after year, there has been an increase of the number of officeholders and an increase in the amount of money appropriated. You may take these 10 bureaus and under every one of which we can get this very information. can get it under the Bureau of Labor, where the power is absolutely declared that the Commissioner of Labor shall report on particular subjects whenever Congress or the President may inquire, and that covers the very things provided for in this bill.

Here you propose to establish another bureau. It is said $29,000 is the only amount required. Where will it lead if we are to have the information in this way? Any man can make the calculation. It will take $500,000 at least in the near future, and the Senator from New Hampshire, who has had very much experience in these matters and has been here a long time and knows where these things carry us, says it will take more than $500,000, and I feel sure it will.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire expressed a regret that anything like partisan politics should be introduced in this discussion. This is not a partisan Nevertheless, it seems to me to be appropriate that the Senators upon this side of the Chamber might have their attention called to the deliberate policy of their party against the creation of bureaus, commissions, and unnecessary officials. Here is a well-considered and wise protest against this policy, made by the highest court any party has sanctioned, by two of the great party leaders of the party with which we on this side are affiliated. One wrote it; the other approved it.

I am not introducing party politics for the purpose of making it a party question here, but to call the attention of my colleagues upon this side to the attitude of the party to which we belong and to ask them whether they feel and believe that we ought deliberately to go into the work of creating new bureaus with the promise of a multitude of new officials, unless there is such a demand for it as can not be avoided without a disregard for the public interests. No such contingency presents This bill does not present such a contingency. itself to-day.

Mr. President, I have listened to the learned dissertations with which this debate has been regaled on the constitutional aspects of this measure. I do not care to enter into that phase of the discussion. I pass it by and confine the few observations it is my purpose to make to the merits of the proposition itself.

What does this bill propose to do? To create a bureau, a new governmental establishment, with a new official force to perform some supposed important and necessary work. What is that work? First, to inquire and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of the children and child labor.

That is pretty broad—"All matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child labor." An ingenious head of a bureau An ingenious head of a bureau who was fearsome that his term of office was approaching a possible end could devise how many excuses for continuing the work of the bureau affecting the welfare of children and child labor?

Then there is one other general clause in it, the last one in section 2. It is that this bureau shall further inquire and report upon "such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children."

Certain specific things are stated just ahead of the clause I have read, namely, they shall find out and report upon infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children, employments, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and then comes the clause, "and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children.

Mr. President, I am sure I have no objection, quite the contrary, to having this information gathered if it has not been already gathered, collated, and put into intelligent form for the use and information of the people. I have no objection to that. If collected, properly tabulated, and distributed, it might be of value to the legislatures of the States when they come to make laws on this subject or these subjects.

It might be of value to the executive boards and commissions in the States, and so on; it might be illuminating in a way and helpful, and I have no objection to it; on the contrary, if there is a need for it, I favor obtaining the information; but, sir, with all the agencies we now have already established. any one of which might be utilized to secure, and just as well secure, the very information that it is intended that this new bureau shall secure, I protest that to establish a great bureau to do this work would be a monstrous blunder in legislation." It ought not to be thought of or tolerated, and I am against it.

Sir, talk about establishing this bureau with 1 superintendent, 1 assistant superintendent, 1 private secretary, 1 specialist, and 4 or 5 clerks-8 or 10 men and women altogether—to do this work; why, it is impossible and nonsensical. There is not a Senator here who does not know that $29,000 to be expended by this force could not accomplish this work and that you are merely laying the foundation here for another great establishment. As has already been said, it will not be long until the Senate and the House will be appealed to to make adequate appropriations for this great work, and instead of having 10 or 12 employees we will have perhaps 100.

Mr. OVERMAN. Or 2,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of 2,500.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Carolina thinks it would be 2,500; but whether 100 or 2,500, what is the need, Senators, of adding the one number or the other to the already overpadded official rolls of this Government? What is the need of it? I protest against it on that ground, and that is all I have to say.

RECESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understand there are quite a large number of Senators who are deeply interested in this bill and desire to be heard upon it. There is nothing else very pressing before the Senate at the present time, and there-I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. What hour did the Senator say?

Mr. GALLINGER. Until 10 o'clock. Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I was just inquiring as to the I think it would be well to take the recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. I move that the Senate take recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. I simply rose to inquire as to the hour when the Senate would reassemble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIPPITT in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 31, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, January 30, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!" Help us to hope and aspire and pray with perfect faith and confidence, for in Thee we live and move and have our being, that the tangled web of life may be unraveled, all its misunderstandings made clear, for if we work and pray, pray and work, we shall at last appear in the likeness of our Maker, pure and strong and noble, just and wise. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PLANT INVESTMENT CO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 29, 1912.

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3087) for the relief of the Plant Investment Co. of New York, N. Y. Attest:

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Wood of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John J. Flynn, H. R. 19711, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this day having been set apart for District business, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 1618) amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force. This is what is known as the crossing policemen's bill, and comes over as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the District of Columbia calls up the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1618) amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division, and upon that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. All those in favor of the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "aye" and those opposed "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 269, nays 9, answered "present" 13, not voting 101, as follows:

Sec. 3. That the objects of the said corporation shall be to advance the knowledge of numismatics along educational, historical, and scientific lines in all its various branches; to assist in bringing about better cooperation between all persons interested in the coinage, circulation, classification, collection, sales, exhibition, use, and preservation of all coins, bills, and medals; to acquire and disseminate trustworthy information bearing upon these topics; to promote greater popular interest in the science of numismatology, and for the particular purpose of bringing the numismatists of America into closer relations with one another, and of promoting friendly feeling for one another through social intercourse, the interchange of ideas and discussions of mutual interest; to acquire, own, hold, and dispose of such real and personal property as may be necessary to properly carry into effect the purposes herein set forth, and to perform all such other acts and things as may be necessary to the full carrying into effect the said purposes, but such purposes do not include operations for pecuniary profit.

Sec. 4. That the principal office of said association shall be in the District of Columbia, but the association through its representatives, shall have power to establish and maintain such other offices throughout America as the business of the association. The incorpo

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ash-

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to in-corporate under a Federal charter the American Numismatic Association. I want to say that the passage of this bill will establish no new precedent as very many bills of a similar nature have been passed by Congress for charitable, educational, fraternal associations, and organizations. The objects and purposes of this bill are very briefly set forth in the bill but I would like to read to House the objects and purposes of this association. I read from section 2 of the constitution of the American Numismatic Association:

Its object shall be to encourage and promote the science of numismatics by the acquirement and study of coins, paper money, and medals; to cultivate fraternal relations among collectors and students; to encourage and assist new collectors and to foster the interest of youth in the subject; to stimulate and advance affiliations between collectors and kindred organizations in the United States and foreign countries; to acquire and disburse numismatic knowledge; to form and maintain a cabinet of numismatic specimens and a library of numismatic liter-ture for the use and benefit of its members; and to demonstrate the fact that numismatics is an educational, serious, and entertaining pursuit.

will say that this association has been in existence for nearly 30 years. Its membership includes representatives citizens of every State in the Union and in many foreign countries. There have been many similar bills passed and I might say that it is of very great importance to this association, which is of high character, that this bill should pass. A bequest of a considerable sum has been made to this association by a member in a foreign country contingent upon the incorporation of this association.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is an existing numismatic society

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, yes; this has been in existence for about 30 years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The purpose of this bill is to incorporate it so that it will have certain rights throughout the

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is the object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that various local bodies are associated with this existing association?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Practically all State associations are affiliated and a part of the American Numismatic Association.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And its membership is very widely dispersed now among the citizens of the United States who are interested in numismatics?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Its membership includes representatives in every State in the Union.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are also some distinguished men who are honorary members of the association?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There are very many. I will say that the King of Italy is an honorary member of this association as are numerous other distinguished citizens of foreign countries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact there are also royal societies interested in the study of numismatics, as, for instance, in London and Belgium?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that nearly every other country has an association similar to this, which is similarly chartered, and it is for the purpose of putting this association upon an equal plane with similar societies in other countries that the passage of this bill is asked.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the effect of the passage of this bill would be to place the American Society on an equal footing with foreign societies already established? Mr. ASHBROOK. That is the exact fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And recognize the scientific and literary bodies in their countries?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true, and in numerous countries appropriations are made by the Government for the purpose of encouraging these societies. But there is no desire at this time, and never will be, for any pecuniary assistance from this Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentle-man from Ohio and to the House that there are some very excellent citizens of Philadelphia who are interested in this work. and I would like to see this bill passed. But before the gentleman closes I would like to ask him if it is not a fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] who is now addressing the House will be one of the incorporators of this body if this bill should pass?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true, inasmuch as I am one of the board of governors of this association. And I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is my intention to offer an amendment to the bill substituting the present board of governors for those named in the bill. Since this bill was introduced there has been an election of a new board of governors, and it will therefore be necessary to offer an amendment to correct the incorporators.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not see any necessity for correcting it. I asked the gentleman that, in order to bring the information to the House, that it may be understood that this comes with good faith and has excellent backing.

Mr. AUSTIN. The reason that I am going to give it my support is that the gentleman is one of the directors.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I thank you. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP].

Mr. KOPP. Is it not also true that a great many collections are from these great royal societies and great historic interest will be given to this society if this incorporation is granted?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true. As I stated a moment ago, a bequest by a member, not a resident of this country, has been made to this association contingent on the incorporation of this association by this Government.

And it is also true that there will be no advantages accruing to any member?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Not in any way. It is purely educational and social.

Mr. KOPP. For the purpose of acquiring knowledge of the history of coins and medals of other countries of the world? Mr. ASHBROOK. A study of coins and medals.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if this is a proposition for a Federal charter?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to ask if among the incorporators there are foreigners as well as American citizens?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is an American association, but includes in its membership honorary members from other countries

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the purpose of it? Mr. ASHBROOK. The purpose of it is the scientific study of coins, other moneys, and medals-an educational institution.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Could these researches be performed under the charter issued by some one of the States as well, or by the District of Columbia?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that they could be, as they have been—

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Would it not be preferable, then, to let it get a charter from one of the States rather than to commit the Government to the doubtful policy of incorporating private companies?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It would not, for many reasons, one of which is that this association desires to be placed upon the same plane of equality as similar institutions in foreign countries. And, as I have stated, a bequest has been made, I would say, of the value of $2,000 or $3,000 to this association, contingent upon this incorporation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think, Mr. Speaker, if the gentle-man will permit me, that all of the States have carefully wrought out general laws under which companies may be incorporated. These Federal incorporations are brought up here generally by unanimous consent or by some other poorly considered method and hurried through without any opportunity for investigation by the majority of the membership of the Charters granted in that way could not be uniform in their character or in their nature. It seems to me it would be better to send these companies to some one of the States to get a charter than for us to grant charters here, the terms and conditions of which we do not understand and could not understand without more study than we are able to give to them. If the United States is to grant charters to private corporations, then Congress ought to work out some general plan carefully safeguarding the Government and the public, and ought not to depend upon the desultory action of Congress as is proposed to be done here to-day. Let them be incorporated under a general law, if the United States is going into the business of incorporating companies of this character.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will yield, but not right now.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that this is not a company or association formed to do business. It is only a society.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Could it acquire property?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It could acquire such property as might be donated to it or which it might otherwise acquire.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When it gets that property, either by bequest or otherwise, would that property be subject to taxation under the laws of the States?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not advised as to that, but I assume it would be subject to the same sort of taxation as fraternal and charitable institutions are.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House that the gentleman from Ohio has stated the whole crux of the matter as I see it. The gentleman from Ohio who presents this bill, when I asked him if this property which the association might acquire would be subject to taxation under the laws of the States, is not able to answer. If he, the man who is presenting the bill, can not inform us of the nature of this bill, how, then, can we know? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not know what we are doing, it is better to do nothing in such cases

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that I have not made inquiry as to whether the property of this association | This charter shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of Congress.

would be subject to taxation or not. But that is only incidental. It is not likely that this association would ever acquire or hold or own property of any considerable value.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But I will ask the gentleman if we ought not to fully understand what we are doing when we are delegating governmental powers to such an association?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It would be subject to the State laws the same as other associations.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman only assumes it would? Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I assume it. Mr. KOPP and Mr. SISSON rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield? Mr. ASHBROOK. I will yield first, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP].

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman from Missouri realizes, no doubt, that practically every one of the leading countries of the world has a numismatic association, under royal authority and sanction, and that these various societies all over the world wish to exchange collections of coins, medals, and so forth, with the national society of the United States. Now, to have a State charter would make this society appear rather in a belittling condition as compared with these others, and therefore

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Before the gentleman gets away from the topic about what other countries have done, let me call the gentleman's attention to the further fact that almost all the foreign countries to which the gentleman alludes have their dukes, and earls, and titled nobility upon whom they confer honors and bestow medals. We do not have to do what foreign countries do unless it be wise.

Mr. KOPP. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri as to that. But concerning the question of taxation, the gentleman from Missouri knows that whatever property this society owns in any State will be subject to all the laws of taxation in that State. The gentleman knows that as a fundamental principle, without its being reiterated in this bill or answered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK]; and if that association should have property—as it probably never will have beyond property for the purpose of an office or a home—it will be subject to the laws of that State. If that State sees fit to exempt that property from taxation on the ground that it is for a charitable or educational purpose, well and good. If that property is subject to taxation, the association will have to pay the taxes

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman why can not these gentlemen incorporate under the general laws of the District of Columbia?

Mr. KOPP. I will refer that question to the gentleman from Ohio, who has charge of the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] that there are numerous State societies that are auxiliary to this national association. Some of them are incorporated under the State laws, but this is the parent of practically all of these societies in the different States.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman why can they not go down here and incorporate under the general laws of the District?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Because it would not then be a Federal

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, my recollection is quite clear that under the general law in the District one-half of the incorporators must be residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT. My recollection is that at least three of them must be.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be correct about that. I have heard it stated here on the floor of the House that one-half must be residents of the District. I have never looked up the law myself.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, it would be easy to get incorporators in the District of Columbia to incorporate under the general law. The real motive of this bill is that it may have the prestige of a special charter from Congress, is it not?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think that is correct. It would give it a better prestige among the nations of the world to be incorporated by the General Government rather than by a State.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think they ought to have it.

Mr. SISSON. I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that this charter gives to this association some extraordinary powers. The first is the power of perpetual succession

I would call the attention of the gentle-Mr. ASHBROOK. man to section 8, which provides that-

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that ever amounts to much, because nobody's attention is ever called to this. But they have the right to own real estate. Now, the securing of this charter virtually gives them the power to do business in every State in the Union and own property in every State in the Union. Does not the gentleman know that under this Federal charter their property would not be subject to taxation in the various States, because they could destroy the property and destroy the organization by taxation?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman knew anything at all about this organization he would know that there would never be any likelihood that the association would acquire property in the various States, because I can not conceive for what purpose it could be used.

Mr. SISSON. You have given it the right to acquire both real and personal property, the same power that a charter would give to any other corporation.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The same power that is given to educational and fraternal associations. I will say further that its property is for its own uses only.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the gentleman also believe that this precedent would enable all the fraternal organizations, all the fraternal insurance companies, and other organizations of that kind and character that are not organized for profit, to come here and ask for charters?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman surely would not include fraternal insurance societies, because they are not organized for

Mr. SISSON. The corporation itself makes no money out of it. All the institutions of learning in the various States might ask for charters of this sort from the United States, in order to give them prestige. In other words, does not the gentleman believe that he is entering upon an entirely new field here and seeking to establish a precedent that may rise up and haunt us in the future?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not think so. As I have said, the Congress has passed numerous charters for charitable, fraternal, and educational societies, and this is purely an educational society. It is not organized for the purpose of profit or any pecuniary gain for any of its members, but is absolutely an educational institution. I would say that at this time the society cwns no real estate.

Mr. SISSON. Following up the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] I notice in the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, section 574, a very simple and easy method of incorporating institutions of learning and institutions of that character. It is only necessary that five or more persons desiring for educational purposes a charter from the District shall go to the recorder of deeds and file their charter. It is a mere matter of form. It is almost a perfunctory act to get a charter for an educational institution or an institution of this kind.

Now, if you want the charter here in the District for the purpose of giving it some national home, why would it not be better, simpler, and easier to get your home in the city of Washington by taking advantage of this simple chapter providing for incorporation of religious, educational, and fraternal institutions? There is practically nothing required except to file your charter, stating that it is for a purely educational or charitable institution.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand that, and I understand that the association could easily secure a charter from any of the saveral States. I would consider if you will allow me to saveral States.

several States. I would consider, if you will allow me to say it, that a charter from the State of Ohio would give it as much prestige as a charter from the District of Columbia, but the gentleman will readily see that a charter from the Congress of the United States will place it on a very much higher plane than a charter from any of the States, and it is for that purpose only that this society wants to be put on an equality with similar societies in other foreign countries. That is the reason that we ask this charter from Congress.

Mr. SISSON. This is an institution for the purpose of studying coins, for the purpose of collecting old coins throughout the country, and old bills throughout the country, and the gentleman would solemnly ask Congress to give it a Federal charter in order that it may get some distinction by virtue of that charter and an indorsement by Congress?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that you state the facts. This is already a national association, but not chartered.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman one other question and then I will stop. Does the gentleman believe that under this charter it would be possible for the incorporators of this institution to do any business other than that of collecting coins and bills? Does the gentleman believe that the language is so drawn as to limit them to that one business alone?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is my understanding of the bill. Mr. SISSON. I have not had time to study section 3 closely, but there are so many different clauses there that it is difficult to determine at once. It says:

And for the particular purpose of bringing the numerous numismatists of America into closer relations with one another, and of promoting friendly feeling for one another through social intercourse, the interchange of ideas, and discussions of mutual interest.

Now, does that mean the interest of the members with each other, or the interest of all nations with each other?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It means the interest of members in the study of numismatics.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I discover that provision is made for the purpose of acquiring, owning, and disposing of both real and personal estate. Is it the object of the bill to own and dispose of real estate?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that it is perhaps hoped that some member of the association may at some future time in his generosity bequeath to the association a suitable home for the coins and medals that belong to this association, but there is no desire or intention on the part of the association, member of it, to own or dispose of real estate for profit.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not your bill broad enough for the purpose of giving this association, or corporation, power to dispose of all the real estate that it may see fit to dispose of?"

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say that, if the association might in the future acquire real estate and it was possible for it to dispose of it and it desired to do so, it undoubtedly would have that power; but it is altogether likely that any real estate that may be bequeathed to the association would be on the condition that it be used for certain purposes

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that this is a dangerous precedent to set, to give a national corporation power to own and deal in real estate without limiting that power?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that there is no desire or intention on the part of the officers of this association to deal in real estate in any way, because, as I have said, its object is not one of profit or of any pecuniary gain, but is wholly for educational, fraternal, and social purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. It reads as follows:

To acquire, own, hold, and dispose of such personal property as may be necessary to properly carry into effect the purposes herein set forth, and to perform all such other acts and things as may be necessary to the full carrying into effect of said purposes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman will understand that it might be possible in the future that this association should desire to dispose of some real estate of which it might be possessed, but I can not say as to that.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the gentleman be willing to limit the ownership of real estate to that kind of real estate necessary for office purposes for the association?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Absolutely. Mr. FOWLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire, when the proper time comes, to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill, an extract from which was just read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.
FOWLER], states, at the conclusion of what he read, the fol-

But such purposes do not include operations for pecuniary profits.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would that not seem to answer the questions raised a while ago?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It seems to me that it would. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman with regard to the right to acquire and dispose of real estate. Is it not the thought of the incorporators of the society that somewhere, at some time, a building may be erected which will be an ornament to some locality?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some such memorial as we have in good number in the District of Columbia?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that therein may be deposited these interesting collections of coins that may be dedicated to the society by individuals? And is it not a perfectly proper thought that there should be such a building to house these collections?

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is true. I would say to the gentleman that the New York society owns a handsome home in New York City. It is a State society, and it is the ambition of this society to acquire a home of its own in some of the cities of the United States for the very purpose already mentioned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The National Geographic So ciety is a society in point. It has members all over the United States. It has the right to acquire and dispose of real estate, but its principal real-estate holding is here in the District of Columbia, where its collections are kept. Is not that substanpurpose of this bill as related to the Society of tially the Numismatics?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would enable this society to establish a home where, safe from fire or theft, may be kept the interesting collections that otherwise might be destroyed or lost?

Mr. ASHBROOK. And to place it upon an equality with other similar societies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no line in this bill, is there, that admits the thought that a man may become a member of this society and work the society for profit?
Mr. ASHBROOK. None whatever.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But rather becoming a member of the society establishes his credit among learned men upon the subject of numismatics?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How carefully was this bill thought out and worked out in committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not prepared to answer that ques-

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was this reported from any committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Here is the report, No. 150, from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to look at this other paper. Was not this bill brought into the House by privately passing it around from hand to hand and getting the Members to consent that it be brought in here? It was not brought in here after full consideration in the committee by the members thereof, was it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on the District of Columbia at the time this bill was before it was

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not proper to state on the floor of the House what transpired in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, that is true, but I was not referring to what happened in the committee; I was referring to what happened on the floor of this House when the committee was not in session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to state anything that happened on the floor of the House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I do not know that it all happened here. Some of it may have taken place in the corridors of hotels or on street cars.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may state anything that took place anywhere except in the committee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to ask the gentleman if this was reported by the committee by passing it around, like the petition was in Texas, which the judge signed and then found it was a petition that he should be hanged?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It was reported to this House by a member of this committee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. And without being ordered to do so by the committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; it was ordered by the committee. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to see the order.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am not in possession of the papers of the committee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Here is a member of the committee; I will ask him if the committee ever ordered that report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] to ask the other gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am always glad to oblige the gentleman from Missouri in every way I can.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman from Missouri inform me whether the Committee on the District of Columbia as a committee ever ordered this bill reported here?

Mr. DYER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman, that the fact that it is here and reported by that committee, as the bill shows and as the chairman of the committee already stated when he was here, ought to be sufficient evidence for the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and-Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. When does the time come for amendments to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The time has come right now.
Mr. FOWLER. Well, I offer an amendment to the bill.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 24.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, before this bill is voted upon I desire to offer an amendment-

Mr. DYER. I just wanted to inquire how we are voting.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the roll call.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported before the roll call is proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the roll call.

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The proceedings, under the call, will be dispensed with and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. SISSON, Mr. FOWLER, and Mr. ASHBROOK rose. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amend-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], who rose first.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following

Mr. DYER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ashbrook], in charge of the bill, offer an amendment?
Mr. ASHBROOK. I did.

The SPEAKER. That takes precedent over the others. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the semicolon, in line 4, and all of lines 5 and 6 to and including the second comma in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Henry Chapman, of Philadelphia; J. M. Henderson, of Columbus, Ohio; Howland Wood, of Brookline, Mass."

Mr. MANN. Does the bill include the name of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK]?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It does.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.
In line 12, on the first page of the bill, strike out the words "perpetual succession" and insert "50 years."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, strike out the words "perpetual succession" and insert the words "50 years."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker— Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is the way the gentleman

Mr. SISSON., A succession should be a "succession of 50

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "perpetual succession" and insert the words "succession of 50 years."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, in the first place, in national charters nor a general law for national incorporation. I do most seriously object to associations like this coming to Congress and taking up its time with this sort of But another special objection to this, gentlemen, is that this bill has received absolutely no consideration at the hands of the committee who have reported it. The fact is, and it will not be denied, that this bill was carried around and Members signed it. Enough of the Members signed a petition to report the bill without any hearing. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that that is a bad practice and a bad precedent. if this bill had been considered by the committee, many of the features might have been eliminated, but I shall never a perpetual charter of any kind. I am perfectly willing that this bill may go back to the Committee on the District of Columbia and receive consideration, but I am unwilling that the bill should be passed upon by the membership of this House without having been given consideration by that committee. But if the membership of the House is determined to incorporate this coin-collecting association, and has made up its mind to do so, I trust that it will limit their succession to 50 years.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this amendment will not prevail. As I have said heretofore, section 8 of this charter may be amended or repealed at the pleasure of the Congress, and if the bill should be amended, as is proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], at the end of 50 years it would simply be necessary to come back to Congress and ask that this bill be again passed. And for that and other reasons I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 77, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] that while the Chair promised to recognize him next, and has every desire to keep his word, the mo-tion made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] is a preferential motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, can we have the amendment reported from the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

The Clerk read as follows: Strike out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 43.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of striking out the enacting clause will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, on page 3, strike out the word "charter" and insert the word "act."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, because that committee has never considered the bill.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make the motion which he did, which was to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia because that committee had not considered it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair disregards the reason given-

Mr. MANN. Debate is not in order on it. The SPEAKER. That is true, and the point of order is well taken. The Chair was stating as fast as he could that debate is not in order, but the motion to recommit is in order. The question is on recommitting this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Sisson) there were—ayes 69, noes 83.

Accordingly the motion to recommit the bill was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Connell, for one week, on account of illness. To Mr. Kahn, for three days, on account of sickness.

THE PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the pension appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] if we can make some arrangement as to the time for general debate?

Mr. BINGHAM. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia desire for his side?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have had some applications for time, but I believe that two of the gentlemen are not ready.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, I will ask for the same time as the gentleman from Georgia takes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time he desires?

Mr. BINGHAM. I would suggest three hours. Mr. BARTLETT. On a side?

Mr. BINGHAM. Three hours; an hour and a half on each side.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour and a half on a side, three hours in all, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 18985, the pension appropriation bill; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, an hour and a half on a side, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia, for the information of the House, whether he intends to proceed with the reading of the bill for amendments this afternoon?

Mr. BARTLETT. If the general debate should expire before the time limited, probably I would. Does the gentleman desire to make any suggestion?

Mr. MANN. I think it would be fair to the House to say that we would not proceed to the reading of the bill under the fiveminute rule to-day

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the time is not occupied in general debate

Mr. MANN. It is very certain that the time will be occupied in general debate if it is proposed to read the bill under the fiveminute rule to-day, because Members wish to be here when the

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the three hours set aside for general debate is not occupied-

Mr. MANN. That would end the general debate, and we would proceed with the reading of the bill on Thursday.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, we might commence reading the bill under the five-minute rule at once, and at the conclusion of the bill there be three hours general discussion.

RARTLETT. I will state that it is quite probable that Mr. BARTLETT. I will state that it is quite probable that general debate on this side will not occupy an hour and a half.

Mr. MANN. I think in a matter of this sort that it is quite fair to the House, if we are not going to have three hours of general debate, that the House should be informed of it. The Members of the House ought to know whether they are to re-main here for the reading of the bill under the five-minute

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not tell what applications for time the gentleman from Pennsylvania bas, for I do not know.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not tell either. I may wish to occupy a little time; the gentleman from Connecticut wishes to occupy some time, and several other gentlemen want time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have had some applica-tions for time, amounting to about two hours and a half, but the gentlemen who made those applications have indicated to me that they would not want to use time now.

Mr. MANN. I do not care so far as I am concerned. I am here all of the time, but a great many Members claim that they have no opportunity to do any business in their offices.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From the indication I will state that this side will occupy probably not more than half an hour in general debate. If general debate be exhausted before 5 o'clock, the desire will be to read the bill under the five minute rule. If we run in general debate until after 5 o'clock, there will be no such desire.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows that one of the first propositions in the bill is the matter of the abolition of the pension agencies, which is sure to create discussion. involves a change in the form of paying the pensions, and it is quite certain that the gentleman will not be permitted to enact that into law without a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Gentlemen who are interested in this matter should be here and listen to the explanation of the bill. They will be able to act more intelligently if they remain here and listen to debate, as does the gentleman from Illinois and as do I.

Mr. MANN. It is not at all certain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 18985, the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with Mr. BOOHER in the chair.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the general appropriation bill for the payment of pensions provided for by ex-Under the law as now administered and to be administered for the ensuing fiscal year the bill appropriates the sum of $152,579,000. The estimates were $152,687,750. appropriation bill, Mr. Chairman, carrying this sum, is evidence the most liberal provision by this Government for the men who served in the service of the Army and Navy of the United States, and for the widows and children of those men. not propose at this time to discuss the probability or the propriety of enlarging the bill or of increasing the burden of pensions. That is a matter that this House has passed upon in passing another bill, a matter which did not meet with my approval nor have my vote, and the policy of which did not receive my indorsement. I think that by the sums of money that we have from year to year appropriated by the various acts of Congress, granting pensions to the survivors of the various wars in which this country has been engaged, and to the widows and children of those survivors, this Government has shown a liberality far exceeding that of any other government in the history of time. I do not believe that it is incumbent upon Congress, nor incumbent upon the people of the United States, to pass additional pension laws that shall increase this burden upon the people of the United States which now exceed, by some thirty-odd millions of dollars per annum, the pensions paid by five of the greatest countries in the world, viz, Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria, and Hungary, whose combined pension payment in 1910 amounted to $129,000,000.

It is not my purpose in explaining this bill to animadvert further upon that proposition, except to say that the laws upon the statute books now give, in my judgment, ample pensions to all who should receive them, and that in administering the law or in enacting laws in reference to pensions there should be considered service and disability from wounds or age. reading the testimony taken before the Senate committee, which has held hearings upon the bill which recently passed this House, I find that the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic, both present and past, have given it as their opinion that the old soldiers of the country who are asking for this pension legislation desire it to be based upon service and upon disability caused by wounds or disability occasioned by age. So much for the general policy. I may elaborate that further, but I shall not undertake to do so at this time. desire only to say I am heartily opposed to the proposed pension legislation which, for service alone, would add seventy-five millions annually to this and similar pension appropriation

I have stated the amount which is carried in the first section of this bill. Now, there are some recommendations which we make in reference to change of agencies. You find on page 3 of this report the proposed changes in the existing law. We provide that-

From and after July 1, 1912, no pension shall be paid to a non-resident who is not a citizen of the United States except for actual disabilities incurred in the service.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, to be found on page 41 of his report, we find that there were paid to pensioners residing in foreign countries, for the fiscal year 1911, $978,471.98. The number to whom these pension were paid who were residents abroad are 5,476. They reside in a number of countries, and I will put this table in my statement. Most of them reside in Canada. Of the 5,476 in number, 2,712 reside in Canada. This was the law in 1893, and it was repealed. The Commissioner of Pensions in his evidence before the commiftee made this statement on page 10 of the hearings:

Mr. Bartlett. On page 42 of your report it is stated that you paid $978,471.98 to pensioners residing in foreign countries?

Mr. Davenport. Yes, sir. If you will look at page 41 you will get the amount paid in each country and the number of pensioners in each the amount paid in each country and the number of pensioners in each country.

Mr. Bartlett. Now, Mr. Davenport, are these men citizens of foreign countries or simply temporarily residing there?

Mr. Davenport. Both; some of them have been naturalized here and some of them have had their homes always there. Some belong in this country, but most of them, I think, are foreigners.

Mr. Bartlett. They are residents of foreign countries?

Mr. Davenport. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bartlett. They are residents, they are not sojourning?

Mr. Davenport. Very few of them are temporarily sojourning. There are a few connected with the United States consulates, but very few. It would not amount to 20 all told.

Mr. Bartlett. They are counted by you as residing in foreign countries, and you send them their pension checks as a matter of convenience?

Mr. Davenport. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BARTLETT. Are those attached to the Consular Service among those paid in foreign countries?
Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir. They are all paid from the pension agency

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir. They are all paid from the pension agency in Washington.

Mr. Bartlett. With the exception of a few—and you estimate 20—they are citizens and residents of foreign countries?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Most of them are ex-sailors residing in Canada. The great bulk in Canada are men who came over and enlisted in the Army. Mr. Bartlett. There are 2,712 who reside in Canada?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. They are residents and citizens of Canada?

Mr. DAVENPORT. They are residents and citizens of Canada?

Mr. DAVENPORT. They are citizens and residents also of Canada.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask you this question as to the policy: Why should pensions be paid to persons who prefer to live and reside as citizens under the jurisdiction of some other government, unless they reside there as a matter of health or business?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Do I understand you to ask why the Government should pay them pensions?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir. What do you think of the policy of the Government paying pensions to people who have abandoned their citizenship in this country?

Mr. DAVENPORT. That matter came up in Congress some years ago, and a bill was passed prohibiting payments to pensioners living abroad. That stopped it for a long time, until the law was repealed. That was agitated at one time, and I am sure the bill was passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Was it repealed on the recommendation of the Pension Bureau, or what do you think about that policy?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No.

Mr. BARTLETT. What do you think of the present policy of paying pensions to persons who prefer not only to live abroad, but to be citizens of foreign Governments, unless they reside there under peculiar conditions or as a matter of health, or necessarily to conduct their business? That is the question I ask. What do you think of the policy of paying pensions to such persons?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Several years ago the question came up in regard to foreign pensions—what they were doing in the civilized countries abroad in the matter of pensions—and the U

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to my colleague?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. I only wanted to know if you elicited from the Commissioner of Pensions the number of foreign soldiers who were not disabled during their service in the war? Mr. BARTLETT. No; we did not.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has passed that point, may I ask him about another one?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. But I was going to say, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, that we have examined the pension laws referred to by the commissioner in this evidence, of other countries, and we find them almost, with very few exceptions, universal; and that when the pensioner abandons his allegiance to any one of those countries or becomes naturalized in and a citizen of another country the pension ceases; also, when he resides out of the country. This provision does not propose to take the pension away from any man who resides outside of the United States and still retains his allegiance of citizenship, or from anyone who has been pensioned for actual disability incurred in the service of the United States Government.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon my asking him, I will say that I think I agree with the committee in all the provisions they have reported in the bill-

Mr. BARTLETT. May I complete this statement? I find that the Argentine Republic, Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Greece, Peru, and Servia have a provision that the pension stops when the pensioner abandons his citizenship and goes away and renounces his allegiance to the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if he has any statistics to show what number of these foreign sol-diers that are drawing pensions were 90-day men? What part of them ever did any actual service and what part of them did not?

Mr. BARTLETT. We have not such information. We were not able to get it. So far as that is concerned, all we know is that we have 5,476 pensioners who reside abroad, and all those, with the exception of about 20, are not only residents abroad, but are citizens of foreign countries.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have heard the statement that a good many foreigners enlisted during the war for 90 days and never smelled powder at all, but are drawing pensions.

Mr. BARTLETT. And not only enlisted for 90 days, but received large bounties.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: I wanted to know if you had the

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no official knowledge. I have seen that statement in magazine articles on the subject, by certain writers, but I would not say they were accurate.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman a question there.

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly, sir.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Some of these men may have drawn a small pension on account of injury received while in service. On account of the passage of other laws, which gave them a greater pension under an age law by the act of June 27, 1890if those people were drawing under that law-if this provision of your bill becomes a law-they can go back under the other

Mr. BARTLETT. If this becomes a law, no pensioner tem-porarily or permanently living abroad, who is a citizen of the United States, or who is not a citizen of the United States, will be deprived of his pension when he is pensioned for actual disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It would take a readjustment of those cases to determine whether he was entitled to a pension other than for disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question connection with this.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will be glad to answer it, if I can. Mr. MANN. I am not sure that my recollection is good, but it seems to me that I have heard it stated that during the Civil War the North was rather short of sailors and obtained a good many of them from Canada, and that a good many of these pensioners are Canadians. Is the gentleman able to give us facts in regard to how many of them are of that nationality?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know anything about it, except the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions. He says that most of them are ex-sailors residing in Canada. He says that the great bulk of those in Canada are men who came here and enlisted in the Army. I think he meant the Navy.

Mr. MANN. I had not read the hearings when the gentleman read that statement.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does that answer the gentleman's question? Mr. MANN. Yes; but I wanted to ask the gentleman a question in regard to another matter, and that is in regard to the legislative provisions of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that yesterday the gentleman from Georgia introduced a bill into the House containing legislation,

Mr. BARTLETT. I introduced it some time ago, but I made a report on it yesterday.

Mr. MANN. According to the RECORD, it seems to have been introduced yesterday.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think there is any matter of controversy between me and the gentleman from Illinois. I introduced the bill in December, and yesterday I reported another one in lieu of the one I formerly introduced. I think I have stated the matter accurately.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of the gentleman's accuracy. will not ask the gentleman how he managed to get it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but I will ask the gentleman what authority the Committee on Appropriations has to report a legislative bill? Under the rules where do they acquire jurisdiction over legislation?

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill that was first introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Appropriations was a bill that was drafted to carry out certain recommendations and suggestions made in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, which had its foundation in a provision carried in the pension appropriation bill last year, directing the Commissioner of Pensions to report to Congress upon the particular subject as to the propriety of changing the method of paying pensions. That was carried in the appropriation bill. The bill I introduced was drafted along those lines and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, it may be true—and I will not enter into any discussion Now, it may be true—and I will not enter into any discussion of that or dispute with my friend on the subject—that if the suggestion had been made that the Committee on Appropriations should not have jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction had been called for by some other committee, and that question had been submitted to the House, or if the Committee on Appropriations, upon investigating that bill, had determined that they did not been invisible to any had reported it to the House and not have jurisdiction and had reported it to the House and asked to have it referred to some committee about whose jurisdiction there was no dispute, that would have settled the question.

But the Committee on Appropriations, having had the bill referred to it, and no effort made to decline jurisdiction on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, to whom it was referred, or no other committee to whom it might be said it could properly have been referred having sought to obtain jurisdiction, the Committee on Appropriations having taken jurisdiction and having reported it, they had the right to do so and the question of jursidiction can not now be raised.

think I have correctly stated the rule.

I think the gentleman is correct, and I think Mr. MANN. it is now too late to make a point of order. The Committee on Appropriations have had the bill referred to it and have made a report upon it, and it is too late to question its jurisdiction now. But it has been repeatedly held by committees themselves that when they had no jurisdiction under the rules they would not assume jurisdiction. I will ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to report a legislative bill under this rule? matters under the control of the Committee on Appropriations have to do with the appropriation of the revenue, and to nothing else.

Mr. BARTLETT. That relates to what shall be referred. As in a case of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as I recall, during my service on that committee when the gentleman was its chairman-

Mr. MANN. I understand; but this is the first time when a committee of this House, knowing they have no jurisdiction over a subject matter, deliberately reported a bill affecting a matter over which they had no jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken. In the appropriation act for the current year a provision was inserted directing the Commissioner of Pensions to report as to legislation providing for a new way of paying pensions. report was made, and a bill was introduced to carry into effect the recommendations contained therein. I assume that the Speaker had the same difficulty that I had, when I looked up the question as to whether the bill should properly have gone to the Committee on Appropriations, to ascertain what committee might properly have jurisdiction of it; and I assume it was sent to the Committee on Appropriations because it seemed to go there properly in connection with the reform desired. The committee having the bill there, and it having rested there for some time and no other committee of the House apparently having come to the conclusion that the jurisdiction of the matter belonged elsewhere

Mr. MANN. And not having any knowledge of the bill— Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, the bill was introduced before Christ-

Mr. FITZGERALD. They should have had knowledge of it. It is not an exceptional or an unusual occurrence under similar conditions, because that has been the practice of the Heuse during my service here.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not make the request for information for the purpose of criticizing the committee. That criticism has grown up only incidentally. I made it for the purpose of leading up to the question I now want to ask, and that is, whether the question of reporting a legislative bill on a subject matter over which the committee had no jurisdiction was for the purpose of keeping in the appropriation bill the legislative provisions in that bill under the Holman rule?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; but we are—
Mr. MANN. It looked to me that it would be very effective to that end, and I just wanted to get on to this new kink in parliamentary practice. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I will say to my friend that I am very much gratified if he thinks we have gotten up something new in legislation. But we have reported it, believing that all these provisions are in this bill legitimately. We can not foretell what will be done.

Mr. MANN. I wish to assure the gentleman that I am not opposed, as far as I know, to any of the provisions in either of the bills.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am glad it meets with the gentleman's

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This section of the bill gives to the Commissioner of Pensions the right to devise such means as he thinks best for paying pensions, without sending out vouchers to be returned to the pension agents.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. I have not come to that exactly,

but go ahead

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That scheme has been worked out by the commissioner, has it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. If the gentleman will turn to the Pension Commissioner's report he will find that.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I remember that; and under the provisions of the bill the Commissioner of Pensions will be able to pay all these pensions without the necessity of any pension agencies?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; with only one agency. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I am glad the gentleman has included that provision.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, having disposed of that, the next provision of the bill is that from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be only one agent for the payment of peusions, to be appointed in the manner now provided by the law, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum; and section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the appointment of agents for the payment of pensions, is repealed.

According to the evidence before the committee, there are 18 pension agencies situated in various places in the United The salaries of these agents amount to $72,000. The expenditure for clerk hire-there being some 350 clerks in these various pension agencies—amounts to $384,705.15. rent is $4,500. This provision is that after July 1 there shall be only 1 pension agent instead of the 18, which dispenses, of course, with the salaries of 17; and it provides for the transfer and removal of the property, furniture, and papers from these agencies thus abolished to Washington and carries the amount necessary to accomplish that purpose.

This question has been before Congress several times, but it has been simply in the way of providing for the payment of one pension agent. This provides for the abolition of 17 agencies, and we think under the rules of the House as they are now in force we have a right to do that.

We propose, then, to authorize the payment of pensions in a different way from that now in operation. According to the report, there are now issued about 4,000,000 vouchers which have to be sent out, signed, and returned, and then the checks are sent. These vouchers have to be acknowledged before a notary public. The pensioner has to execute the vouchers before a notary public or other officer authorized to administer oaths, for which he necessarily incurs an expense. This bill proposes to adopt what we think are up-to-date methods with reference to the payment of pensions, just as they have been adopted in the great commercial, manufacturing, and industrial corporations of the United States. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and other great corporations with hundreds of thousands of employees and countless transactions have dispensed with the old system of having a voucher come in, to be followed by a check, and our effort is simply to put into operation in the Pension Office the same business methods of paying pensions, guarding the interests and safety of the United States as well as of the pensioner, just as the modern business methods of to-day have been inaugurated and are being followed by these business corporations employ-ing a great number of men. That is done in pursuance of an act of Congress from which I will read an extract.

In the pension appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1912, is found this provision:

The Commissioner of Pensions is directed to formulate and embrace in his next annual report a simplified plan for the payment of pensions whereby all preliminary vouchers shall be abolished and the only vouchers required shall be attached to or a part of the payment checks, and the commissioner shall further report what, if any, changes in the law are necessary to carry such plan into effect.

The Commissioner of Pensions and others competent to do so took that matter under consideration, and after investigation made their report, which is contained on pages 18 to 27, inclusive, of the commissioner's report.

The Commissioner of Pensions and Dr. Thompson, who has been pension agent and is familiar with the payment of pensions, were before the committee and gave evidence in which they say this will be a great improvement in the payment of pensions, and will be a saving to the Government and to the ensioner. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I understand it is proposed that the department shall issue checks or drafts direct to the pensioner and send them to the pensioner through the mails.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. What identification will be required by the department?

Mr. BARTLETT. The purpose is to send the check with the pensioner's name in it every quarter, calling for the amount that is due him, signed by the pension agent authorized to sign it. On the back of it is to be a statement that it must be signed by the person to whom it is payable, that he is to be identified by two witnesses, not necessarily a notary public or an officer authorized by law to authenticate signatures or administer oaths, but any person who knows him to be the identical person.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The only thing that would make it cheaper, or in which there would be a saving, is that you do not require the acknowledgment before some notary public.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is one thing. For instance, the check is sent to some one in the gentleman's district and delivered by the mail carrier or the delivery clerk to the pensioner. He can take it to the bank or a merchant, and their indorsement underneath his name certifying that the proper indorsement was made in their presence by the payee, who is the identical person named therein, the check would be paid by the bank or taken by the merchant. The merchant ordinarily knows everyone in his neighborhood.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Under this bill there is no less work than under the former procedure, except that it does not require the certificate of a notary public?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, yes; there is much less than under the present law. Under the present law the pensioner must the present law. get his voucher signed in the presence of a notary public, return that voucher to the pension agent, and then his check is forwarded and he has to have that check indorsed and certifled to.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Would this economize the time in which the pensioner could secure the actual payment of his check?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know as it would economize time, because he is paid every quarter, but it would economize the trouble of getting the voucher executed, and the trouble and expense of hunting up an officer.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The pension is due the first of each parter. Now, from the time the pension is due, does this method shorten the time in which the pensioner will receive the money over the old procedure?

It ought to. For instance, the pensioner Mr. BARTLETT. receives a check on the 1st of October. Under the present law he has to sign a voucher in the presence of an officer or notary public, return it to the pension agent, and then he gets his check, which he likewise has to indorse and have identified in order to get the money from the bank.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. And all that has to be done after the 4th of the month?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; this requires that the Pension Office shall inaugurate a system of sending the check directly to the pensioner through the mail, to be delivered by the postmaster, the rural letter carrier, or the city carrier, and then by his indorsement thereon, authenticated by two persons, he gets his money. That is all that is required.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I want to say that, so far as the method of paying the pensioner by check is concerned, it seems to me a good method providing it does not lengthen the time from the time the pension becomes due for that quarter to the actual time that the pensioner gets the money on his check.

Mr. BARTLETT. It seems to me it would lessen the time, because now you have to take two chances through the mail, one with the voucher and one with the check. It seems to me that it shortens the time in which he would get his money.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It would make a difference of 11 days

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from West Virginia says would make a difference of 11 days.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. They get their vouchers, and on the 4th day of the month they are executed and sent in to the different bureaus, and then the check is returned, so that practically the pensioner gets his actual pay about the 15th of the month. Under this proposed provision he will get it on the 4th of the month.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. BARTLETT, Certainly.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The intention is that he shall be paid his pension with a check directly?

Mr. BARTLETT. He gets paid by check, and never has to sign a voucher. The voucher is on the back of the check.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. So he gets it practically on the day that it becomes due?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; and has nothing else to do beyond signing the check in the presence of these two witnesses.

ends the payment.

Mr. Chairman, it is well to say that the postmasters and the delivery clerks and the carriers and all other postal employees can not deliver these letters addressed to the pensioner if the pensioner has removed, or, in the case of a widow, if she is believed to have been remarried, or if the pensioner is dead. It is incumbent upon the postmaster and the postal authorities to return the check to the Pension Office here upon ascertaining that any one of those three contingencies has happened. It is the purpose of the Pension Commissioner, and it is so required in this act, to have printed upon the back of the envelope instructions to all mail employees, letter carriers, and so forth, that if any one of the contingencies mentioned shall happen the letter shall be at once returned to the Pension Office. Some inquiry was made with reference to what would be done if the pensioner changed his address-how he would get his pension. There is no change in that from what is now done by the Pension Office.

If a letter is returned containing a pension voucher and a check because of the fact that the pensioner's address is not known, or if he has removed, it is held in the Pension Office until he is heard from. It is the purpose of the Pension Commissioner, if this manner of paying pensions is changed, to notify each pensioner when he receives the last quarterly payment under the present law of the requirements of this proposed law, and to request him in the event that he changes his address before the next quarter to let the Pension Office know, so that the pension, if this bill shall become a law, may be paid promptly under the provisions of the law. No delay will be occasioned by reason of it to those who may be entitled to receive a pension.
Mr. McKENZIE.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. In order to carry out this system of making these payments, does the gentleman think it would be advisable or at all necessary to abolish the various pension agencies throughout the country; could they not be maintained?

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not necessary to do it; but they would be useless to carry out either the present or the proposed law, because the evidence before the committee, given by the Commissioner of Pensions, is that under this law, and probably under the present law, one agency here would answer all the requirements of the present or the proposed law, and hereafter pay the pensioners as well as they are paid under present conditions. If this proposed provision of the bill becomes a law, it necessarily prevents duplication, the sending out of vouchers, and clerks to send them out. We will need but one pension agency.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think what the gentleman has said in regard to this system of paying pensions is well said. I think a great improvement may be made along that line, but it seems to me that with the pension agencies in the various parts of the country the payment of pensions can be handled a great deal better and more expeditiously than by having one central office here

Mr. BARTLETT. We think the United States Government can manage this business of paying the pensions in the same efficleat way that the affairs of large corporations, which have a greater number of payments to make, are handled. These pension agencies are now maintained at Augusta, Me., Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Columbus, Concord, Des Moines, Detroit, Indianapolis, Knoxville, Louisville, Milwaukee, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Topeka, and Washington.

Mr. PEPPER. 'Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. How many employees are there in these 18

Mr. PEPPER. How many employees are there in these 18 agencies?

Mr. BARTLETT. Not considering the agents, I think about

Mr. PEPPER. Is it contemplated that the force here in Washington will be increased in any respect?

Mr. BARTLETT. This bill does not provide that any of the employees in the agencies shall be dispensed with. According to a statement made by the Commissioner of Pensions, the force here, together with those who are now employed in pension agencies, will be able to promptly and efficiently carry out

Mr. PEPPER. Are these employees of the various agencies under civil service?

Mr. BARTLETT. They are.

Mr. PEPPER. What is proposed to be done with them?

Mr. BARTLETT. We have not proposed to do anything with them in this bill.

Mr. PEPPER. What will be the effect of the passage of this bill with reference to them?

Mr. BARTLETT. So many as are necessary here in Washington, I presume, will be transferred here. The commissioner

Mr. PEPPER. That is the point. If this bill passes, will the commissioner have the authority to transfer all those employees to Washington?

Mr. BARTLETT. If necessary, yes; or they can be transferred to some other department of the Government. Under the civil-service law they can be transferred and are entitled to be transferred to any other department of the Government or division of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. PEPPER. I would like to know what the commissioner himself said with reference to that proposition, as to what extent here the force will have to be increased by reason of the concentration of the work here.

Mr. BARTLETT. The existing force here would not have to be increased at all.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. They work the whole

Mr. RUSSELL. May I ask the gentleman what estimate he makes of the saving which would be effected by this change in abolishing the agencies?

Mr. BARTLETT. We save the salary of 17 agents who get $4,000 a year, which is $68,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is estimated to be the saving?
Mr. BARTLETT. Then clerks and office rent, and so forth, it will be over $100,000. We do not appropriate for rent of offices. We have to rent an office in New York at $4,500, and we strike out the provision for the rent of office in New York.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then the purpose in abolishing these values of the provision of the rent of the purpose in abolishing these values.

rious pension agencies is on the ground of economy rather than efficiency?

Mr. BARTLETT. It is on the ground of economy and dispenses with these agencies which are not necessary to properly pay these pensions, and this system we inaugurate, which we hope to carry through, will enable the Pension Office here, with one pension agent, to pay more promptly and more satisfactorily to the pensioners and to the Government, saving expenses and work and labor to the Government, than the present system with the 18 agencies-

Mr. RUSSELL rose.

Mr. BARTLETT (continuing). And it will dispense with practically the handling of 4,000,000 pieces of mail, because there are 4,000,000 vouchers each year which have to be prepared, signed, and mailed.

Mr. RUSSELL. And it will accomplish that with no lessening of efficiency at all?

Mr. BARTLETT. We think it will increase the efficiency.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will make it more efficient and better service?

Mr. BARTLETT. And quicker. Mr. RUSSELL. With less delay and less expense? Mr. BARTLETT. We think so.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will save the pensioners' notary fees. Mr. BARTLETT. And with equal safety to the Government, because a man when he goes to receive a pension has to have the indorsement of some one he knows, a merchant or clerk or banker, and he gets the money right there, without having to make a return of a voucher and wait for the pension check.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. With pleasure.

Mr. AUSTIN. This bill in the first paragraph carries an appropriation of $152,000,000 to pay Army and Navy pensions.

Mr. BARTLETT Yes

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, the report shows the amount of pensions paid to pensioners located in the various States of the Union is $156,301,131.53.

Mr. BARTLETT. What page? Mr. AUSTIN. Page 6. This report shows, on page 6-Mr. BARTLETT. You mean the committee's report?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; on page 6, Exhibit 6, it shows that there is $156,301,131.53 paid to pensioners in the various States in the Union, $37,499.52 to pensioners in the insular possessions of the United States, and $978,471.98 to pensioners of the United States scattered in various foreign countries, making a total of $157,325,160.35. Now, that amount is greater than the amount carried in the bill. Why is that discrepancy in the bill and in the report? In the bill it is $152,000,000, and your report shows $157,000,000. There is a difference of $5,000,000. Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. That is $152,000,000, but the administrative expresses are in addition.

the administrative expenses are in addition.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill also carries something in addition to that for agents.

Mr. AUSTIN. But this Exhibit 6, on page 6, gives the number of pensioners in the States and the total amount of pensions they draw, the number of pensioners in the insular possessions and the total amount they draw, and then the total number of pensioners scattered in the various foreign countries and the total amount of pensions that they draw, and that footed up amounts to $157,323,103.03; and the first provision of the bill carries an appropriation of

Mr. BARTLETT. This bill carries every dollar that the Pension Commissioner asked for, and also carries the other sums for the administrative part of the bureau. It carries $152,000,000 of pensions for the Army and Navy.

Mr. RUSSELL. Those were the pensions that were paid and are not proposed to be paid by this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I say, this exhibit shows the number of pensioners in each State, and the total amount foots up $157,-000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Those are the pensions that were paid for the last fiscal year.

Mr. BARTLETT. Those are the figures for 1911 that you are reading from. This is the appropriation for the next year.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then the appropriation for the coming year is $5,000,000 less than for last year?

Mr. BARTLETT. There were over 35,000 pensioners who died last year. Mr. AUSTIN. Then you are carrying appropriations for all who are on the pension rolls now? Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. The bill takes into consideration all that the United States Commissioner asks us to provide for.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Again referring to the matter of forwarding these checks, I notice that section 4 of the bill puts a very great discretion in the hands of the postmasters, delivery clerks, letter carriers, and all other postal employees by prohibiting them from delivering such mail to any person whomsoever if the addressee has died or removed, or, in case of a widow, believed by the postal employees intrusted with the delivery of such mail to have remarried. In the case of both, I suppose that is certain; but is it to be left to all of these employees to decide, when a soldier who may be temporarily absent or may have gone from the community without notifying the postmaster, that his checks shall not be delivered?

Mr. BARTLETT. How can they be delivered if he has gone away from the post office? Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. They may be delivered simply to some representative who lives in that community to be for-

Mr. BARTLETT. This does not contemplate a temporary absence. It contemplates when a pensioner has removed, in the well-defined and accepted legal meaning.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I have in mind in my country a number of old soldiers who go to Florida every winter.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is a good place for them to go to. Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is the best place on earth for anybody to go to.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. And possibly may not have notified the post-office employee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course I meant in the wintertime, not in the summer.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. It is not very good there in the summer. Under the old system that voucher would be forwarded to the soldier, but under this, the way the law now stands, the postmaster would be compelled to return it to the department, and it would make a great deal of delay and annoyance to the soldier.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so. This does not contemplate a mere temporary absence.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. In other words, in the judgment of the chairman of the committee, what is the necessity for having that requirement in this section of the bill, putting such discretion into the hands of even these rural letter carriers?

Mr. BARTLETT. If a man dies, he does not deliver the letter to him.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Then it would take the same course as any other mail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the first mail carries a check. Under the other system it carried a voucher, and that would come back and then the check The Commissioner of Pensions, after an exwould go out. haustive investigation, reported that this is the best method by which to protect the Government and to cause the least inconvenience to the pensioners.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. In the case of a widow here, if they believe that she is remarried—it does not say if she is remarried-but if they believe she is remarried, the check must be

Mr. BARTLETT. What is the difference from that and the present system? If a piece of mail is a voucher, and not delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, the mail carrier would not deliver it to a person who was not entitled to receive it. It would come back if not called for in so many days, as directed by the return clause on the Government envelope, and if it gets back here it stays, under the present system, until the pensioner informs the Pension Office or agent of the fact that he has changed his residence.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Under section 4 of this bill, if it becomes a law, instead of the letter being forwarded containing the check to where the soldier is located, it must be returned absolutely to the Pension Department here in Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what happens now.
Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Then it would withhold the pension, even on the suspicion that she may have been remarried, without any evidence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman state that it is on somebody's suspicion?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. On their opinion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The language states it exactly. The gentleman should not substitute for it that which comes into

Mr. BARTLETT. He must give the reason for returning it. Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The gentleman can define the difference between "belief" and "opinion" as to this matter.

I simply call attention to that for the purpose of indicating the great amount of discretion that is vested in these rural route carriers and postmasters, and the great annoyances and delays that might ensue.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me put it this way to the gentle-

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Let me ask this question of the chairman; just a moment: What is the necessity of having that provision in this law?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because if a person is dead and the letter comes back there would be nobody to indorse the check.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Why not let that mail take its course the same as other mail?

Mr. BARTLETT. This provision is intended to protect the Government from fraud. Otherwise somebody might get the check and indorse it, forge it, and then you would have to institute a prosecution for forgery.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman from Kansas familiar with the post-office regulations as to the forwarding of mail?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The letter would lie there so long, and then be forwarded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know what the regulations are controlling the return of mail, if a person has moved and is not found and the mail can not be delivered?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. If it is not called for within 30 days, it has to be returned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that this will cause great inconvenience and annoyance. Upon what does he base that statement?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Upon this, that it is left to the discretion of the rural-route carrier and the mail man to return it at once, without holding it. If he believes that the parties have removed, then the proposed provision would compel him to return it at once, while, on the other hand, it may be forwarded, under the instructions left at the post office by the addressee, to the post office of the addressee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are certain classes of mail with which that can not be done.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. This is first-class mail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know it is first-class mail, and it will contain a check for the payment of money, of which it is necessary to keep some accurate track. This matter has been carefully investigated by those who are paying very nearly 1,000,000 pensioners a year, and who have been for some time sending out and returning over 4,000,000 pieces of mail; and they believe that this particular method is the one that would cause the least inconvenience to the beneficiaries of the pension laws and would best safeguard the Government. The gentleman simply says, in his opinion, that-

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. What I would like to have the gentleman from New York explain is, Why is it necessary to put this class of mail under a different rule from that of other ordinary first-class mail?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For the simple reason that if a pensioner has changed his address, if his pension check does not come promptly, he will at once communicate with the pension agent; and if it can not be delivered to him promptly, it should be returned as speedily as possible to the pension agent, so that it can be sent to him at once, wherever he may be.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will be less liable to loss by that method?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It is in the interest of the pen-

Mr. BARTLETT. And it is not only in the interest of the pensioners, but it is a protection to the Government.

I said something, Mr. Chairman, about these pension agents. I desire to call attention to the fact that the present 18 pension agencies are not divided or established with regard to any geographical division or any division of work or on the basis of the number of pensioners that are paid by them. For instance, at Augusta, Me., 15,000 pensioners are paid, and the agent there gets $4,000. The agent at Topeka, Kans., pays 105,175 pensioners. The State of New York has two pension agencies, one at Buffalo and one at New York City. There is one agency at Knoxville, Tenn., and one at Louisville, Ky.

Mr. KENDALL. And there are two in Pennsylvania, are there not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; one in Pittsburgh and one in Philadelphia. From this it is evident, Mr. Chairman, that these pension agencies have been established, not so much with a view to facilitating the business of the agents or for geographical reasons or in proportion to the number of pensioners paid by these agencies, but rather, as it appears, they have been established through favoritism to certain particular localities.

Now, all other pension payments, including those paid to pensioners residing in foreign countries, amounting to $1,000,000, are made here from Washington, and the pensioners who receive their payments from Washington are scattered all over the world from Algeria to Wales, and there is no complaint. Therefore, in making this recommendation, the committee not only think, if they succeed in having it enacted into law, that it is a measure that will produce substantial economy, but they think also that it will in no way interfere with the efficient discharge of the duties of the Pension Office or in any way hamper or hinder the prompt delivery to the pensioners of the pensions that they receive. It saves about $200,000 a year.

Now, it might be proper for me to state here that some suggestion was made that the law might interfere with the payment of pensions to soldiers at soldiers' homes. I refer to national soldiers' homes and not to State soldiers' homes. We inquired into this matter. Under the present law (Stat. L., vol. 21, p. 350) pensioners who are inmates of national soldiers' homes are paid by the treasurers of the homes. The amount in gross or in a lump sum is sent to the treasurer of each soldiers' home, and the inmates of that home are paid under the direction of the trustees of the home in such a manner as the trustees shall provide.

In other words, the pensioners at the national soldiers' homes do not individually receipt for their pensions, nor do they receive them each quarter in the same way that a pensioner does who is not in a soldiers' home. The number of pensioners in the home is certified by the treasurer of the home, and the total amount is sent by the Pension Office and paid to the individual pensioners under certain rules and regulations prescribed by the trustees of the home. This bill in no way interfers with that, and if when the bill is considered under the five-minute rule it is deemed necessary to amend it in any way in order to continue the present law, we will propose such an amend-ment, because we think that is the proper way to pay these men in the soldiers' homes; in other words, that under this new system they shall be paid just as they are now; and it is the purpose of the Pension Bureau and its officials, if this becomes a law, to carry out the present system of payment to the pensioners in the soldiers' homes. There is no intention to change it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have explained the new provisions of this bill which are legislative in their character, and unless some other gentleman desires to ask a question, I have nothing further to say at this time.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand the abolition of these pension agencies has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BARTLETT. Both have done so. The Commissioner of Pensions has been before us, and he approves of their abolition, and says that it will not in the least interfere with the administration of the Pension Bureau; that they can as promptly pay these pensions as they do now.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Is it not a fact that this House has for several Congresses voted to abolish these various pension agencies throughout the country?

Mr. BARTLETT. We have voted to abolish all but one, but the abolition of them does not repeal the statute, and under the former rules of the House, under which these bills were reported and acted upon, you could not repeal an existing law even though it reduced expenses.

The only thing the House was able to do heretofore was not to appropriate for the salaries of these other 17 agents. That left the office and the officer without an appropriation for his salary, and it might, and doubtless would, have left the United States liable for the salaries. But under the rules of the present Congress, as we hope they will be administered, when this bill comes to be considered under the five-minute rule, we believe it to be perfectly legitimate to repeal the statute which establishes these 18 agencies.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If this bill passes the House and goes to the other end of the Capitol, and these pension agencies are there restored, do I understand that the conferees on the part of the House will insist that the bill as it passed the House shall become a law, or will they consent to a restoration of these agencies?

Mr. BARTLETT. I can only speak for myself. If I should happen to be a member of the conference committee, I shall endeavor, representing the House, to obey the wishes of the House, or else resign the position of conferee.

I would not be a conferee if I could not represent the wishes of the House, and the moment I could not do so I should surrender the appointment. The gentleman may rest assured that, speaking for myself-and I think I can speak for others-if the House passes this bill with these provisions in it, I will not recede unless the House votes to recede. That is my position, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The conferees and not the House have receded heretofore, have they not?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know. I can not undertake to say.
Mr. ASHBROOK. I think that is the fact.
Mr. BARTLETT. If the House should pass this bill and submit it to conference, I should not agree to recede without instructions from the House itself to do so, because I think whoever acts in a representative capacity and knows the will of the constituency that appoints him to the office he holds, whether that position is that of conferee or other office, if he can not carry out the wishes of the elective or appointing power he ought to permit some one else to take his place.

Now, unless there is some other question, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] such time as he desires.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if I had had an opportunity yesterday to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], the leader of the House, I should probably have taken but very little time. The circumstances are such now that I shall be compelled to take more, and to trespass somewhat upon the generosity of the House, although I recognize that that is not a wise thing to do generally.

The gentleman from Alabama yesterday made this statement:

In this schedule, as has been stated before, are sewing machines—sewing machines which the uncontested testimony shows are being sold to the poor people of this country and to the rich and poor alike, from $23 to $45 apiece, and yet are being laid down, freight paid, in the Orient for $8.75.

I am not prepared to demonstrate the mistake in that proposition at the present time. I have written to the Singer Sewing Machine Co., saying that this statement has been made, and asking them for the actual facts, and shall give them to the House when I get them, for I asked permission to quote them.

I do know this, that the home of the sewing machine was in the city of Bridgeport, Conn. It was first invented by Elias Howe, jr., and the immense factory which was built by him and in which he manufactured for years I think is now used by a silk manufacturing concern. Subsequent to that the Wheeler & Wilson Co., manufacturers of sewing machines, was started in Bridgeport, and was later bought out by the Singer Manufacturing Co., and that industry of making sewing machines has largely been transferred elsewhere. That factory now is principally devoted to making wooden-cabinet cases, although some sewing machines are made there still.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] made the remark "America beats the world in the manufacture of sewing machines.'

I am glad if it is true, and if it is true it has come about under the magnificent policy of protection which the Republican Party has stood for through all these years. [Applause on the Republican side.] And now they make an attack upon that, and in such a way that the inevitable result will be that they will destroy that industry in this country and transfer it to the other side of the ocean.

In 1897 I had the privilege of visiting the city of Glasgow. Scotland. I saw there the Singer sewing machine factory then employing 5,000 people. This very hour while I am talking to you 12,000 men are working in the Singer sewing machine factory in the city of Glasgow, Scotland. Why should they double their plant there if they can make them cheaper here? Now to tell me that a machine that sells in this country for from $23 to $35 is made in the United States and shipped to the Orient and sold there at $8.75, when for some reason or other, you can judge for yourselves what it is, the same concern is employing 12,000 people to-day in making sewing machines in Scotland and in another large factory in Germany is absurd. They would be fools if they did not ship those sewing machines to the Orient from those countries where they can make them cheaper than here. Perhaps that is a hard word to use, but I use it without hesitation. I know they would do just exactly what you and I would do.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. HILL. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that the only reason the gentleman disbelieves the statement as to the price at which these machines are sold?

Mr. HILL. I did not say that I do not believe it, I say I can not deny it, but I have written to the company for the facts.

FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not expect that they will admit it?

Mr. HILL. I do if it true, for they are gentlemen of integrity and honor. I have known them for years, and they are thoroughly reliable and trustworthy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman write and ask them why they increased their capital from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 and distributed it as stock dividends?

Mr. HILL. I do not know anything about that, and therefore can not discuss it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I discussed it and placed the facts in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have received a letter from a gentleman whose name I do not hesitate to quote, an honored Republican for years, H. R. Parrott, of Bridgeport, Conn. The letter in part reads as follows:

I note by the papers that the Ways and Means Committee propose, among other items, to put sewing machines on the free list. Talking with the managers of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., who also own the Wheeler & Wilson, I was told they had factories in Scotland and Germany; that to run the same machines that are used here to make the parts that they pay here $3.50 per day, in Scotland they pay $1.75 per day, in Germany they pay $1.50. As the sewing machine is 90 per cent labor, this great saving of labor would enable them to import the parts and simply assemble them here.

I have said that over and over again in this House, and it falls upon deaf ears. If you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber desire to transfer these industries to Europe, where they can get cheaper labor, all you have to do is to do the very thing that you now propose-to let those people bring in the finished or unfinished parts free and simply make as-sembly shops of the United States factories. It will come, surely and speedily. So much for the sewing-machine part The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Palmer—and I do not see him here, although I sent word to him that I was going to use his name in this connection, a thing which he did not have the courtesy to say to me yesterday, although he had the opportunity—together with the leader of the Democratic Party, on the other side of the House, on yesterday declined to allow me to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania at that time in regard to a matter which he brought up and, in violation of the rules, closed proceedings under the five-minute rule. I shall therefore have to ignore the fact of his not being here He did at that time what I have never seen done before in this House. He took a copy of the personal correspondence of a Member of the House and read it publicly in the Chamber without the knowledge or consent of that Member. simply a matter of taste. Mark you, gentlemen, I do not say good taste. I say it is simply a matter of taste. I would not have done it, I think. I do not think the gentleman who stands before me, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], would have done it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly. Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not present.

Mr. HILL. I sent for him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood, from the way the letter was read, that it had been sent to him by the person who communicated with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. It was a copy of a personal letter to me. I now hold that letter in my hand. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] saw fit to read it on yesterday. Anyone who reads it in the Record would see that the gentleman who wrote it had two grievances—first, that he had to pay a duty Mr. FITZGERALD. Two duties.

Mr. HILL. And, second, because notwithstanding he had de-clared the piece of cloth among his personal effects, he was nevertheless not allowed to have it treated as a part of his personal effects, but was compelled to pay duty upon it. He ought to have paid the duty. It was a piece of cloth. It was merchandise; it was not within the provisions of the law. If it had been made up into clothing and worn, it could have come in under the hundred-dollar exemption, but it does not lie in the mouth of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] or the gentleman who wrote the letter, the gentleman from Stratford, Conn., to make any criticism of the Republican Party.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. When the free-list bill was up at the special session of Congress I offered an amendment to provide that the hundred-dollar exemption might include $100 worth of anything, including merchandise, and the Democratic side of the House threw that amendment in the wastebasket. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HILL. For the information of Members I desire to call attention to a singular fact in regard to this matter, because I think there are very few things in the tariff law which are criticized more than this feature of the customs law

WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman Mr. yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. WARBURTON. In reference to sewing machines, as I remember it, we shipped, I think, did we not, more sewing machines abroad in 1910 and the preceding year-a much larger amount-than Great Britain?

Mr. HILL. I do not doubt it. I do not know. I know this, that when you are talking about sewing machines you do not cover only machines that are made and sold for from $23 to $45. There is made in the city of Bridgeport to-day a machine that goes all over the world, a little hand machine that sells for from $5 to $6 and $8. It has no table; it is fastened onto another table with a thumbscrew. When you talk about sewing machines you ought to get down to facts and give us definitely what it is that you are referring to. I was in Canada last year during the session, and I walked through the streets of a city the name of which I do not remember-it is right opposite Port Huron.

A Member. Sarnia? Mr. HILL. No; just below that. We went down on an excursion. It is where they have a large sugar-beet factory. was walking through the streets and I came to a sewing-machine store. I went in and I said, "What kind of sewing machines do you sell?" He answered, "Singer." Said I, "What do you sell them for?" And he replied, "Thirty-five dollars." That was in Canada. They were made in Canada, at St. Johnsbury, where the Singer Sewing Machine Co. has an enormous factory.

Why did they build that factory there if they could make them cheaper here and send them over there? They have to pay higher wages in Canada for that work than here. Why did they do it if they can send them over there, freight paid, for a full-grown sewing machine, with a table, with a leather belt

Mr. REDFIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut why it is, if they can make sewing machines so much more cheaply over there than here, that I personally took orders in Germany for sewing-machine parts more than once made in New York City, shipped there, and which were sold at full American prices, but were so much cheaper than the German price that it paid to transport them and pay the tariff and transportation charges. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. That, I frankly say to the gentleman, I do not know, but I propose to find out; but I will answer the gentleman this way—that his proposition, submitted with eloquent diction, with magnificent force here at the last session of Congress, as to the efficiency and as to the cheapness of American labor has been absolutely destroyed and overthrown by the Tariff Board in the report on efficiency of textile machinery and textile labor which they have just made. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I will tell him more than that concerning the plan to put machine tools on the free list, for which he voted yesterday, that I received yesterday a telegram from the Billings & Spencer Co., of Hartford, whom he can tell you are leaders in the industry in which he is engaged, protesting against the passage of the law and saying that it would compel a reorganization of the wage system in the United States, so I give him his own authority in absolute contradiction of the statement which he has made on the floor of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REDFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken, I think, in two of his facts, as he is upon the question of duties. In the first place, I did not vote as he said I did, because I was not

Mr. HILL. The gentleman voted in the caucus.

Mr. REDFIELD. And in the next place it is not a fact that the firm which the gentleman mentioned is the leading firm in the industry.

Mr. HILL. Very well; I have no objection to a question, but I do not care for a speech to be interjected into mine.

Mr. REDFIELD. The gentleman will pardon my answering the statement just made-

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. REDFIELD. It has been my pleasure for some yearsand, by the way, there is a third mistake there, that I am now actively engaged in that industry, as I have not been for some six years. It is a fact, however, that we did make sewing-machine parts for the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Co., for the New Home Sewing Machine Co., and others.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman explain to me, and I will give him the time to do it, why the factory of the Singer Sewing Machine Co. in Scotland has grown from 5,000 employees to 12,000 and the industry in this country has reduced in volume at the same time?

Mr. REDFIELD. Has the gentleman never heard that there are sections of the English Empire which allow a preferential tariff in favor of British products?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I have, and that is Canada; and the Singer Sewing Machine Co. are making their machines in Canada and selling them at $35 apiece, to my certain knowledge.

Mr. REDFIELD. Is that the only part of the British Empire that allows preferences to British products?

Mr. HILL. That is one.

Mr. REDFIELD. What is another?

Mr. HILL. I do not recall all of them.

Mr. REDFIELD. Australia is one.

Very likely.

Mr. REDFIELD. Has the gentleman never heard there are parts of the British Empire in which goods can hardly be sold at all unless they are British made?

Mr. HILL. I will admit that Australia has a preferential tariff, but I fail to see how it is possible for any preferential tariff to meet a reduction from $36 to $8.50 when, according to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama, we are shipping sewing machines from New York into the Orient right alongside of Australia.

Mr. REDFIELD. The gentleman seems to avoid his own question as to why goods are made in Great Britain. Has he ever heard that American goods can be readily sold in India?

Mr. HILL. I have heard of the restrictions there, but that is a system of protection by which Great Britain, under free trade, protects herself.

I know that while Great Britain stands without a tariff on locomotives that no American locomotive can run on a railroad in Great Britain and is not allowed to do so.

Mr. REDFIELD. But the gentleman also knows that American locomotives are sold all over the world cheaper than English locomotives, does he not [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

Mr. HILL. I do not. There is no sentiment in business. Why do we not put locomotives in Germany, and in France, and in Russia, and in England? Why do we not do it? There is no sentiment in business. If sewing machines are sold at $8.50 in the Orient, they would be sold at $8.50 in Australia. There would not be 12,000 people in Glasgow making sewing machines to ship to Australia.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Yesterday when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] said that we were paying $23 to $40 for sewing machines in this country, and that we were shipping sewing machines to China and selling them there for $8.75, his statement met with vociferous applause from the other side of the House. At that time the gentleman from the State of Washington [Mr. La Follette] turned to me and said, "Why, we can buy sewing machines in the United States, guaranteed for three years, for $9 and less. That was absolutely so," said he, "a year ago, to my certain knowledge, because I priced them for myself." I know nothing about it.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentlemen to take all of my time.

Mr. WARBURTON. I am not certain about Canada manufacturing sewing machines, but we ship to Canada several times as much as England does, and we pay a preferential tariff of 121 cents ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing more deceptive in the world than taking Government statistics and drawing conclusions from them. How did we sell them? Do we sell them in Canada and in Australia on the installment plan, as they are largely sold here? What kind of machines were they? Hand machines that are fastened with a thumbscrew to a table and have no table of their own? What were they? Until you can answer as to those details and put the proposition on a business basis, the statements you and I make in regard to it are absolutely worthless. I have written for the facts, and when I get them I will give them to you.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly; for a question. Mr. LONGWORTH. I desire to ask a question which I think will bring the gentleman back to his original proposition, which was, as I remember it, a letter. I want to know if the gentleman who wrote that letter complained because he could not bring in cloth as personal wearing apparel?

Mr. HILL. I judge he felt aggrieved in the first place, and I am going to be frank-you can all read the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was the reason for it, was it not? Mr. HILL. That it was unjust and excessive. Of course, "excessive" relates to the duty.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was cloth, was it not, and not a complete suit of clothes?

Mr. HILL. It was a piece of cloth, cut from another piece. It was merchandise.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would suggest that the next time that gentleman comes through the customhouse it will be wise for the officials to keep their eyes open lest he may attempt to bring in pig iron on the theory that it is a penknife. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I do not know whether this constituent of mine is a Democrat or a Republican. I will tell you what I think about At the last election in that town there were 164 Republican votes cast, 77 Democratic, 4 Socialist, and 1 scattering. I am inclined to thing that he represents the "scattering." [Laughter].

But I have not any hesitation as to discussing that particular question with him either in that town or on this floor. I am going to tell you why now. He thinks it was excessive, relating, I think, to the duty, and unjust in that he was not allowed an exemption. I have heard that criticism a great many times. Gentlemen, I refer him to the last Democratic tariff bill on this subject, in which no exemption whatever was given, but which otherwise is almost exactly the same language that is now in the Payne bill. I will read it, and you can judge for yourselves whether this bright, intelligent lawyer was right or wrong in bringing in a piece of woolen goods simply cut off from the full piece. The Wilson bill says as follows:

Wearing apparel and other personal effects, not merchandise, of persons arriving in the United States; but this exemption shall not be held to include articles not actually in use and necessary and appropriate for the use of such persons for the purposes of their journey and present comfort or convenience, or which are intended for any other person or persons, or for sale.

Now, it does not take the intelligence of a child to know that you can not take a piece of woolen goods, or a bushel of potatoes, or a ton of iron, or a bale of hay, as some former Secretaries of the Treasury have ruled, and bring that in free. But under Democratic law he could not have brought in anything, except as just specified, without paying a duty on it.

I will ask the former chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. PAYNE] if Mr. Dingley was not the first person who inserted that exemption of $100 in our tariff law?

Mr. PAYNE. It was first inserted in the Dingley bill, according to my recollection.

Yes; and in the Wilson bill there was no such Mr. HILL. provision. So that if this gentleman has any criticism to make on the parties, he can go back and criticize his Democratic forbears

Mr. PAYNE. It was a limit of $100.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HILL. For a question only, I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The letter to which the gentleman is referring places the objection of the gentleman's constituent upon the amount of the duty. He says, "A tax like this is unjust and excessive and can not be defended on the plea of protection to an American industry, as anyone can understand."

Does the gentleman's constituent also complain in his communication to the gentleman from Connecticut of this other feature that the gentleman is now talking about?

Mr. HILL. The excessive tax?

Mr. HILL. The excessive tax?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. HILL. I think he is just as much at fault on that as he was on the other point. The provision in the Wilson bill was free wool and 50 per cent ad valorem, and I challenge that side of the House to bring in a wool bill on the basis of the Wilson

Mr. FITZGERALD. Gentlemen should not indulge in any reckless challenges over there, because they might find themselves "called." [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I do it good-naturedly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I understand it, the gentleman's constituent was not complaining because he was not allowed to bring the cloth in without the payment of a tax, but he was complaining of a tax of $9.24 on merchandise valued at $11,90. I am inclined to think that the gentleman's constituent had a real grievance against the Republican Party.

Mr. HILL. I will take that up in a moment. There is one thing in this debate that gives me a good deal of grim satisfaction, gentlemen. Were it not for the fact that I believe the passage of the metal schedule revision as a whole will be harmful to the country I confess I would have been quietly laughing for the last three or four days. I remember three years ago I was opposed to the present duty on zinc ore. I thought it was beyond the difference in the cost of production between Mexico and the United States, the only two competing countries, and my colleagues upon the committee know that I stood utterly opposed to a duty of more than half a cent a pound instead of a cent. I was importuned by letters-I think I have a peck of them-from Sunday-school children, from boys and girls in the day schools; pitiful letters, some of them, written by little girls, by wives and mothers, by men working in the mines, and by ministers, until finally the climax came in a newspaper notice that a prayer meeting was being held in Joplin, or somewhere there, and that 27 ministers-I do not know how true it is; it was so stated in the paper—were praying the Almighty that He might soften the hearts of the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means so that they would put a cent a pound duty on zinc ore. [Laughter.] That duty went on. It is there now. A Republican Member of Congress from Joplin then sat in this Chamber and they got their duty of a cent a pound. I do not know whether it was right or wrong. I do not know whether or not I was wrong in not standing for the higher rate of duty or whether was right in opposing it.

I simply know this, and it is a grim satisfaction to me when I look at the vacant chair on this side and see the position now filled by a Democrat on the other side, they now find that they have been buncoed successfully by the Democratic Party, and zinc ore again goes back to the free list. [Laughter on the Republican side.] That is a source of satisfaction to me.

Now, in regard to another matter, for I am going to take a little of your time to treat of another subject.

THE ORGANIZATION AND WORK OF THE TARIFF BOARD.

A revenue policy is and always will be a political question, but with the policy once fixed the application of it, in my judgment, can be made a business matter and divorced from politics by legislating upon one subject at a time upon a finding of facts by an independent, bipartisan, permanent tariff commission. Such commissions have been common in Europe, but have been seldom tried here, and when tried have not heretofore been a success because of unfortunate attempts to invest them with legislative power.

In 1882 Congress passed an act for the appointment of a tariff commission, with instructions to report to the next session of Congress as to what changes were desirable in the existing tariff, but its report was practically ignored in the general tariff revision of 1883.

The commission act of 1888 was prepared and offered by Senator Plumb of Kansas.

Mr. FOWLER. I should be glad to ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. HILL. If it is on this subject.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes. Can you tell us the reason why the report of that tariff commission was ignored?

Mr. HILL. I can not, except that the idea was contrary to the general sentiment of both parties then.

Mr. FOWLER. How full was that report?

Mr. HILL. I can not tell you. I simply have looked up the facts, and I think the explanation will come as I go along, if the gentleman will pardon me.

As I say, the commission act of 1888 was prepared and offered by Senator Plumb, of Kansas. The amendment was accepted on the threat of talking out the session, and became a part of the Mills bill, which never became a law.

The Constitution provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, and they can not and will not and ought not delegate that power to any

Since the Mills bill was defeated, and within the last 20 years, four general tariff revisions have occurred, and the results have been the McKinley, Wilson, Dingley, and Payne bills, a raise and a reduction, a raise and a reduction. The business interests of this country have been turned upside down four times in 20 years

The Payne bill was necessitated by European conditions, which had largely changed during the life of the Dingley law, in the adoption of maximum and minimum tariff systems, and was further in response to a general sentiment for a lowering of many duties which the development of our industries had made unnecessary for protective purposes.

During the 11 years of the Dingley law many of the commercial nations of the world had changed from a single to a double system of tariff rates, known as the maximum and minimum system, the lower rate being used to secure like concessions from others and the maximum applied to those who would not grant them.

The United States, with a single tariff and with the impos sibility of securing the ratification of the commercial treaties which were provided for in the Dingley law, and which President McKinley had recommended, found itself greatly handicapped in competing in foreign markets with the other nations who, by concessions of their own, avoided the imposition of the maximum rates, which in most cases were prohibitory.

Let me give to the Members of the House a statement of some of the variations of these tariffs. I made it from a table inserted in the Record last year by Senator Aldrich, if I am not mistaken. In Argentina the maximum tariff rate exceeds the minimum by 50 per cent; in Austria-Hungary by 200 per cent; in Belgium, 50 per cent. Canada has three tariffs, subject to executive order in council. In Denmark the maximum tariff exceeds the minimum 40 per cent; in France, 50 per cent. Germany has two tariffs, varying 100 per cent. In Greece the maximum exceeds the minimum by 30 per cent. In Greece the maximum exceeds the minimum by 30 per cent. Italy has two fixed tariffs. In Japan the variation is 100 per cent. Norway, Russia, Spain, and Switzerland have two tariffs each, all of them protective, and a maximum rate besides. Mexico has one and Sweden one, both protective. Holland has one for revenue and Sweden one, both protective. Holland has one for revenue only, which is now being changed to protective.

Now, let us see what Europe is doing under tariff commissions. During the last 18 years France, with a tariff commission of 32 members, 13, I think, coming from the city of Paris and the remainder from the other sections of the country, had no general tariff revision for a long time. They went for 18 years without a general tariff revision, from 1892 to 1910. During that time, under the direction and supervision of the tariff commission, 38 acts, affecting 348 rates, were passed, and the business interests of France never knew it, so far as any commercial disturbance was concerned. It might be so here.

Take Germany. Germany went 27 years without a general revision, from 1879 to 1906; meanwhile reciprocal treaties and many other single changes were made. Great Britain has had no general tariff revision in 66 years. Single changes have been made almost every year as a part of the financial budget. is the way it ought to be here. That is the way it would be here with a well organized and thoroughly equipped tariff board, such as we are now trying to have authorized, and on which we have made a most excellent beginning.

The result of our maximum and minimum provisions is shown in the enormous increase of export trade due to the passage of the Payne bill and the adoption of the system, and our consequent entry to the ports of other nations on equal terms, or with substantial equivalents for our minimum rates.

The Payne bill passed August 5, 1909, and provided that the maximum duty should go into effect April 1, 1910. Negotiations had to be concluded with the whole world in eight months. Hence a tariff board to assist the President in such negotiations was needed. The Ways and Means Committee were then opposed to a permanent tariff commission. When the bill reached the Senate Senators Dolliver and Beveridge offered propositions looking to an independent tariff commission. Dolliver's proposition was defeated, and Senator Beveridge agreed to the Senate modification. The amendment adopted by the Senate, in lieu of his proposed tariff commission, was as follows:

To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section, and information which will be useful to Congress in tariff legislation and to the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required to make thorough investigations and examinations into the production, commerce, and trade of the United States and foreign countries, and all conditions affecting the same.

This amendment was changed in conference committee and enacted into law in the following language:

To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section, and the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required.

Under this authority, supplemented by an appropriation of $75,000, three persons were at once appointed to this work, and rendered most excellent work in the adjustment of our trade relations under the maximum and minimum provisions of the Payne bill.

When the tariff bill was passed the President announced that he should construe this clause as giving him authority "to secure statistics covering the prices and cost of production of goods at home and abroad upon which a scientific tariff must be built," and that there might be no question about it he asked Congress at the next session to broaden the authority, extend the scope, and furnish additional funds.

The result was the following provision, which was adopted and is now law:

EXECUTIVE.

To enable the President to secure information to assist him in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, and the officers of the Government in administering the customs laws, including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production as are authorized by said act, and including the employment of such persons as may be required for those purposes, and to enable him to do any and all things in connection therewith authorized by law, $250,000.

Two classes of people bitterly opposed this action:

First, those who opposed any change whatever; and second, those who looked only to personal interests, and overlooked the common good of all.

The President had pledged his word to this much-needed reform, and this is what he said:

It is not unlikely that, in the light of accurate statistics, we may find that certain schedules in our tariff are too high. If we do, I shall at that time not hesitate to immediately recommend their revision.

I believe that the work of a tariff board should be to secure and to present evidence, not to frame a tariff. With this evidence before it Congress will act fairly and wisely, and the United States will have under this method a tariff established on a thoroughly scientific basis—as it should have had a quarter of a century ago.

In the closing hours of the Sixty-first Congress a further appropriation was made to carry, on the work, to the amount of $200,000.

In the summer of 1910 the people of the country took up the subject and forced into the Republican platforms of 28 States a demand for a permanent, independent, bipartisan commission and that all future tariff revision should be made with reference to only one schedule or subject at a time.

The Republican Representatives and the Senators who came to the Sixty-second Congress as a result of that election of 1910 in those States were committed to that program. [Applause on the Republican side.] Some of them seem to have forgotten it since they got here.

In January, 1911, a convention of nearly a thousand memincluding both Democrats and Republicans, assembled in Washington and reported as follows. I will not read the whole of the report but will put it in the RECORD:

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL TARIFF COMMISSION ASSOCIATION, Washington, D. C., January 11-12, 1911. Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, M. C., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith the report of the committee on resolutions of the National Tariff Commission Association:

mittee on resolutions of the National Tariff Commission Association:

"To the convention:

"Your committee on resolutions submits the following report:

"The National Tariff Commission Association in convention assembled, in the city of Washington, January 11-12, 1911, more than 500 delegates being present, representing more than 100 of the leading agricultural, industrial, and commercial organizations of the country, all political parties, and nearly every State in the Union, reaffirm the resolution adopted by the National Tariff Commission Convention held at Indianapolis, Ind., in February, 1909, reading as follows:

"We demand from Congress, for the equal benefit of all classes of the people, and in the name of all American industry of farm, factory, labor, and commerce, the immediate creation of a permanent Tariff Commission."

"We welcome the widespread change of public sentiment which, inspired and contact the sentence of the property of the people, and in the name of all American industry of farm, factory, labor, and commerce, the immediate creation of a permanent Tariff Commission.

"We welcome the widespread change of public sentiment which, in spired and encouraged by the leadership of President Taft, has taken place during the two years since that convention.

"We commend the action of Congress in authorizing the President to 'employ such persons as may be required' to assist him in obtaining information concerning tariff facts, and in making appropriations for the work, and the action of President Taft, under the authority so given, in creating the present Tariff Board, and for the enthusiastic and continuing support he has given to that board.

"We commend the existing Tariff Board for its splendid work in creating an efficient organization for the ascertainment of tariff facts, thereby laying the foundation on which may be erected a permanent Tariff Commission, and pointing the way for the full development of its intended usefulness.

"Recognizing and appreciating these facts and the widespread sentiment of the people signified by the adoption in 28 States, during the recent electoral campaign, of platform planks indorsing the proposal for a permanent Tariff Commission, and appreciating also that further legislation by Congress at this session is required for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the people, thus expressed, we recommend the adoption of the following "'RESOLUTION.

"'We demand from the Sixty-first Congress, now convened in its final session, the enactment of a bill creating a permanent nonpartisan Tariff Commission having functions and compensation analogous to those enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, including the power to require the giving of testimony under proper conditions and safeguards, and for proper purposes; the functions of the commission to report the results of its work and findings to either branch of Congress or to the President, as called for."

"Your committee commends and indorses th

"RESOLUTION.

"We indorse the proposal of President Taft that hereafter the work of tariff revision, whenever required, shall be accomplished schedule by schedule, or preferably one subject at a time, each subject to be so defined that items which are interrelated shall be grouped together rather than by the sweeping revision of the entire tariff, to the end that revision may be accomplished in a more orderly, accurate, scientific, and impartial manner and without the disturbance of business inevitable to a general tariff revision.

"Respectfully submitted, for the committee,

"Henry R. Towne, Chairman."

Henry T. Willis,

HENRY T. WILLIS, Secretary National Tariff Commission Association.

In response to that demand, and I think the next day, or within a day or two afterwards, a hearing was held by the Ways and Means Committee. Various propositions had been submitted, one by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], one by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]; and the Ways and Means Committee had a hearing, and as a result a bill was finally agreed on by the Republican members, not without much labor and anxious thought, not without much anxiety and trouble. It was finally agreed upon, however, and was presented to the full membership of the Committee on Ways and Means, backed by a solid Republican vote in the committee. I am going to tell you what occurred. It was at a former Congress. It is time the country knew about this situation. The bill came before the committee. It was presented and read. The gentleman who now acts as the leader, and who is the leader, uncontested and undisputed, on that side of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Ilyngswoon] announced that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], announced that if they were given a few minutes for consultation the Democrats on the committee would probably agree to the bill. The chairman of the committee then asked how much time they wanted. The reply was they would like to have 15 minutes. The entire Democratic membership retired to the next room and was gone but a very brief time. They came back and said if they could have one amendment they would be in favor of

Mr. COOPER. Name some of the Members.
Mr. HILL. They were all there; and I shall read them to you. They were gone just eight minutes, as I remember. They said that if they could have a certain amendment they would be the control of the could have a certain amendment. be in favor of the bill. What was the amendment? They said they would like to have the board report to Congress as well as to the President. I took a piece of paper and a pencil and drew an amendment then and there and handed it to Mr. PAYNE and Mr. DALZELL for their approval. They both approved it, and I offered it, and it was passed, and the bill went through the Ways and Means Committee by a unanimous vote, Republicans and Democrats—every one of them voting for the [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HILL.

Certainly.
WORTH. Was not the question not to report to Mr. LONGWORTH. Congress, but to report to either House of Congress?

Mr. HILL. I can give the gentleman precisely the language that I put into the bill by my amendment:

And said board shall also make investigation of any such subject whenever directed by either House of Congress.

It was put into the bill by the unanimous vote of every member of the committee who were present, and the bill met the approval of every member, Democratic and Republican.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I said. The point was that the bill used the language "directed by Congress," whereas with the amendment it used the language "directed by either House of Congress."

Ar. HILL. What happened? The question was raised, How shall the bill be brought up in the House? "By unanimous consent," was the reply—we shall all vote for it. It was brought up the next day, and one of the members immediately took the opposite side of the question, for the radical element of the Democratic Party had obtained control of the situation overnight. Do you know what it makes me think about? There has come to my mind over and over again, ever since Tim Campbell left the House, a statement that he made, undisputed, undenied by anybody, that a Northern Democrat down here was like a horse hitched to a post-feeding out of a salary bag, and that was all there was to it. And it is so. I do not blame you men from the South for taking control of the situation. I would do it if I were a Southern man. I would fight for what I believed to be my rights, but I do blame the Northern constituencies that send Democratic Members down here to let you do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But they did it then and took full control and full possession, and the next day on the floor of this House, although that bill and the next day on the hoor of this House, although that but was passed by Republican votes, the votes on the Democratic side of the House were 3 to 1 against it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark], now Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Randell], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brandellina [Mr. Pou]], and th LEY] all stood up like men and defended their position, and I am going to read you some of the things they said, so that you can see how consistent your position is now. Mr. Clark then

We are not afraid of information from any source. We welcome it. I think I am at liberty to say that it takes a vast amount of information to get up a tariff bill which anybody of good sense is willing to stand on in days to come.

How do you like that for a comment on the way that you have been getting up tariff bills since the 4th day of last April? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDELL said:

But, my friends, in this matter we vote for a better bill than exists to-day, when we vote to improve conditions in order that the next Democratic House may have power to gain information that they could not otherwise get by law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD said:

Now, there is no doubt that the sole purpose of this legislation is for a board to be appointed to gather facts, not to reach conclusions, but to lay those facts before this House—not facts that the board wants to lay before the House, but facts that this House shall order the Tariff Board to bring before it. You know, and every Democrat here knows, that one of the greatest difficulties we have had to face is that when the Ways and Means Committee goes into session to ascertain the facts upon which they write a tariff bill, the only men who are sufficiently interested to come before us and give the facts are the protected industries of the United States, and yet to-day you would vote to continue that condition.

What have you done? When the public hearings under the Payne bill were held for three long, weary months, night and day, they were wide open to the American people. There were three classes of people who came before us-manufacturers, who wanted their industries protected; importers, who wanted the like products of those industries brought in free of duty; and consumers, who were interested for their own welfare—every one of them just as much interested and prejudiced in their own interests, one as the other. When you say you talk for consumers in making a tariff bill, you are talking for men who are interested, and you are interested yourselves as consumers. [Applause on the Republican side.] There can be no doubt about that situation. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] that that is true; but on the other hand, I cite a condition of affairs which has existed since the 4th day of last April that this country never has seen before and which no man going before the American people would dare to advocate, the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], on this floor that they had refused to have hearings, but that they had thousands-I think he said thousands, but the RECORD will show whether I am rightthousands or hundreds, at any rate a great many personal pri-With whom? With whom? Manufacturers, vate interviews. producers, consumers! Mr. Oscar Underwood, the splendid chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, stood before you and condemned the open hearings, where witnesses, or Republican witnesses, had the right to be examined by Democrats, as disastrous and as fatal to an honest and just tariff making, and yet you stand here and boast before the American people that for weeks and months you have been having personal private interviews with parties interested in this tariff question, and not a Republican cross-examiner has had the privilege of asking a question. [Applause on the Republican side. 1

Do you think the American people will stand for a tariff made that way? It was bad enough before; it is a thousand times worse under your present system. I have not got through adding what Mr. UNDERWOOD said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Not until I get through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does it differ from the method of the Tariff Board?

Mr. HILL. I have tried to explain it, and if the gentleman had listened he would understand it. I said in the one case they were all interested in it, and they could not divest themselves of that interest, and it made a decided difference whether it was done

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest that there is this essential difference; that when anyone interested in any way appeared before the full tariff committee at the time the Payne bill was under consideration what was said was published to the world.

Mr. HILL. Why will not you publish these conversations? Why do not you publish the interviews that you have had in making up these tariff laws? Why do not you give the facts, as we gave them to you, 10,000 pages of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did not the gentle

Did not the gentleman from Connecticut, himself, complain bitterly because there was placed in the Record yesterday a communication giving facts from one of his constituents?

Mr. HILL. That is personal correspondence of a Member; that is not a statement made in public to influence public officials, but it was personal correspondence, and the gentleman from New York would never have done what the gentleman from Pennsylvania did.

Mr. PAYNE. And I will state to the gentleman that when hearings were had during the last Congress both parties were present, and every man who appeared was examined by each and every member of the committee to his heart's full content. with a most rigid, thorough cross-examination to bring out all the facts

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I can not now. I have not gotten half through yet. I will have to cut my speech short. The gentleman who now honors the Speaker's chair, Mr. Clark of Missouri, and Mr. Cochran said that we had been absolutely fair and impartial all the way through in the hearings on the Payne revision.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. HILL, No; I can not yield to the gentleman from Illi-

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman does not desire to yield-Mr. HILL. Just a moment. The gentleman will allow me to control-

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman does not want to yield for information-

Mr. HILL. I do not at present. Mr. Underwood continued: And yet to-day you would vote to continue that condition, to continue to place us absolutely in the hands of the protected interests in this country for the information on which we are to write a tariff bill and refuse to give us the board that will be composed of men—

He was not talking to us on this side of the House; he was talking to his own colleagues over there who by law are authorized and directed to investigate under our direction and to ascertain facts on which we can base honest tariff provision. Now, that is the issue. My friend from Tennessee wants to know why we should want information in reference to a bill written for revenue and revenue only.

Now, I come right to the practical test of a tariff for revenue only:

Why-

Said the gentleman from Alabama-my friend, of all the bills that require information, the man who is writing a tariff bill for revenue needs information the most.

Said the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims]-

Said the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]—

I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said the difference in wages abroad and here, so as to ascertain what rates were to be levied to equalize.

Mr. Underwood. That is only one of the incidents. If you are writing a bill for protection, you can put it higher and higher, high enough to cut out competition, and you have a good bill for protection.

Mr. Clayron. If the gentleman will pardon me, if you want it for the support of the Government, can not you write it lower and lower, so as to lessen the tax on the people?

Mr. Underwood. That is true.

Then I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this answer by Mr. UNDERWOOD:

That is true, if you could afford to play hide and seek with the Treasury of the United States; but it is our duty, my fellow Democrats, not only to write a tariff bill solely for revenue, but also to write one that is capable of raising sufficient revenue to run this Government, and we must know what we are doing and not guess at it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman do me the honor to read what I said in opposition to that bill?

Mr. HILL. A radical element got in control overnight, and in spite of these portions of speeches which I have read to you, the Democratic vote was three to one against it, but it passed the House of Representatives. It was amended and passed in the Senate on March 3, and was beaten in the House by a filibuster on March 4, and the roll call has never yet been finished. I hold in my hand a pamphlet which I have not the slightest doubt cost thousands and thousands of dollars, which, I am told, was sent to every voter in the State of Massachusetts in the election last fall, from which I read the following state-

The Republican Senate denied the President adequate support for a competent tariff commission, and Mr. Taft's unofficial Tariff Board has been able to accomplish but little.

That was sent out by Eugene Foss, the man who holds the position of governor of Massachusetts. According to the Record, the Senate passed the bill and sent it over here, and it was defeated because there was not time in which to finish the roll call.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly. Mr. FITZGERALD. The Republicans had control of both Houses of the last Congress by a large majority.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that it did not have control of old Father Time. The wheels of the clock were revolving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman imagine the party was sincere when it waited until the dying hours of the session, and then pretended that they desired a tariff board created?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman does not deny that the statement of Gov. Foss is absolutely incorrect, does he?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure about that. I am somewhat familiar with what was done in the other body in reference to that bill.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman from Connecticut will permit, the gentleman who engineered the filibuster is the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who has just been questioning the gentleman from Connecticut. Everybody in the House knows that the gentleman from New York was the man who was responsible for the filibuster which defeated the tariff-commission provision. [Applause.]

And, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask just one more question.

The truth or the falsity of the statement in the circular which the gentleman has just read could have been ascertained very easily by consulting the Congressional Record, could it not?

Mr. HILL. Why, of course.

Mr. COOPER. In other words, then, that statement is nothing more nor less than a deliberate, willful falsehood?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not.

Mr. HILL. Every man must draw his own conclusion, Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not familiar with what took place at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. HILL. After the adjournment of Congress the President immediately appointed two Democrats, in accordance with the provisions of the defeated bill, so that for all practical purposes it was equivalent to the passage of the bill, except that the members were not to be confirmed by the Senate and could not compel the attendance of witnesses. They do not need that power. Out of every 100 mills and manufactories to which they have gone 90 per cent have cheerfully surrendered their books to them, and only about 10 per cent, either in this country or in Europe, as I understand it, have refused to give to them the desired information. And they inform me, and have so informed me again and again, that the power of summoning witnesses is not essential to the proper performance of their duty. But they had all the other power necessary to the performance of their duty.

Of whom does this Tariff Board consist? First is the chairman, Prof. Henry C. Emery, professor of economics in Chale University; next is Alvin H. Sanders, editor and publisher of the Breeders' Gazette; then there is the Hon. James B. Reynolds, who served for years as First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; then there is the Hon. William M. Howard, who served for several years as an honored Member of this Hower.

of this House.

Mr. COOPER. And a Democrat.

Mr. HILL. Yes; a Democrat. Then there is Prof. Thomas W. Page, a professor of economics in the University of Virginia. I challenge any man on this floor to tell me the politics of those gentlemen. I understand, however, that Prof. Page is a Democrat. I know that Mr. Howard, of Georgia, is a Democrat. But who is there who can say whether Mr. Sanders is a Republican or a Democrat? What is Mr. Emery? Who can say? We know that James B. Reynolds is a Republican. There is an absolutely unbiased, nonpartisan board, whose members are the equals in intellectual ability and economic knowledge of any five men that you can select in the United States. Yet I have heard them denounced on this floor as not knowing their busi-Let me tell you what the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means said about that board at a great dinner before the assembled business interests of New York City. what he said, referring to the message of President Taft:

To-day your President has notified the Congress of the United States, in a solemn message, that they must stop, that they must not obey the twice-given command of the American people to revise the tariff downward. And why? Because certain clerks—

Is Prof. Page, professor of economics in the University of Virginia, a clerk? Is William Howard, for years the honored colleague and equal of any of you on that side of the House, a clerk? Is Prof. Emery, who succeeded Prof. Sumner, of Yale University, as professor of economics, a clerk? Mr. Underwood not authorized by Congress, and called a "Tariff Board" only by courtesy were not ready to report.

Not only that, but the extra session was called, and the Tariff Board was at once repudiated by radical democracy on that side of the Chamber. Why? A new political complexion had been given to the Congress, and the men in the majority could not, because of caucus rule, stand by what they had favored when they were in the minority; and the desire on the part of some to destroy the protective system and on the part of others to modify it to suit particular sections and particular States could not be resisted. To wait for an accurate, system-atic, and scientific investigation of schedules when the majority of the majority in this House could bind all of its Members by caucus action to vote as a unit, and when they knew exactly what they wanted to do, was intolerable, and the trouble began.

The President gave as one of his reasons for vetoing each of the bills passed that the Tariff Board had made no report, and, in fact, had only been ordered to report on steel and cotton in December last.

Now, I stand for the Tariff Board. [Applause on the Republican side.] I will stand for square, straightforward, intelligent investigation of the industies of this country before any legislation is had on the tariff question; and I say to you that it is infinitely better not to pass one single, solitary line of legislation than to pass it in such a way that within three months or six months you have got to change it again.

The President has some rights in this matter. I have not consulted him about it, but I know that the President of the United States has legislative power, just as we have, just as the Senate has; that his vote is equal to one-third of yours; that he is compelled by the Constitution to vote on every proposition that come out of Congress, and say yes or no to it; and he has a right, as you have a right, to have intelligent information on this subject; and he would be derelict in his duty to the American people if he did not insist on having that information. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HILL. I can not yield now, Mr. Chairman. My friend will excuse me. I am almost through.

Now, I want to say to you gentlemen on the other side, why do you not give us a bill on a subject concerning which you have full information? I refer to the woolen schedule. Instead of bringing in a bill here relating to $5,000,000,000 worth of the the American people, without any investigation by the Tariff Board, a bill brought in the night before some little information would have been available, such as was subsequently given by the Bureau of Corporations, a bill made absolutely on the old system and worse, because you had no public hearings on it, why did you not-Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose a wool bill is brought in, will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. HIIJ.

Mr. HILL. I will tell you what I will do.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. HILL. I will tell you what I will do. I will vote either for it or against it, according as it harmonizes or not with the Tariff Board report, which we now have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will vote against it; I

And I will give the gentleman the same oppor-Mr. HILL. tunity to vote for or against a Republican measure, based on the Tariff Board report, at the same time on the same subject. Do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will vote against a Republican meas-

Mr. HILL. I will do the same thing on a cotton bill, if I have to sit up nights and frame it myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman vote for this wool bill if it is brought in?

Mr. HILL. I say to you that the American people have the right to have intelligent information on this subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman vote for the wool bill, or is he just begging for another opportunity to vote against it?

Mr. HILL. I will vote for a bill that will protect the industries of the American people, and I will vote against any measure that tends to destroy them. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, I say to you gentlemen that you have the case before you. You have had in your hands the report of the Tariff Commission, and have had it for 30 days or more. You could have brought in a wool bill. Gentlemen complain of the injustice of the present wool schedule. I was against it two years ago. I wanted a reduction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was away ahead of his side of the House.

Mr. HILL. I am against the present wool schedule now. am in favor of a reduction, but I do not believe in order to take a pimple off a man's nose it is necessary to cut his head off. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, why have you not brought in a wool bill? You can not say that you have not the information. You may say that you are not capable of comprehending the information you have, but I do not believe that. The gentleman before me [Mr. FITZGERALD] is the last man of whom I would make such a statement. But you have the information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL.

Certainly.

ERALD. The report on the wool bill comprises Mr. FITZGERALD. four large volumes?

Mr. HILL. Yes; and I have read all four of them once and three of them twice since they came in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has not done much else. Mr. HILL. I have not. I stayed here during the holiday recess, when the gentleman was probably having a good time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Other Members of the House have some thing else to do. Now, does the gentleman believe that any committee inside of 30 days could read and digest and master the information in that report and prepare a satisfactory report to this House?

On what basis, for heaven's sake, are you bringing in tariff bills? If you can not do that in 'O days, how can you take a whole schedule of 82 paragraphs, covering five billions of American products and 83 separate and distinct industries, and discuss it over night and settle it and bring it in here the next day? On what basis did you bring in the bill last summer relating to this schedule? It was not even read in the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's party has had 16 years in which to make the reduction that he admits should have been made three years ago.

Mr. HILL. I submit that if the Committee on Ways and Means, with the Tariff Board's report before them for 30 days, are not prepared to make up a wool schedule and submit it to this House, I ask the question, How can you expect them to bring in a metal schedule, a tobacco schedule, a rubber schedule—which I understand you are to bring in—a chemical schedule, which we went over four times—

Mr. FITZGERALD. And you did not make much of a job of it.

Mr. HILL. Well, we thought it compared favorably with what we have had from you thus far.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The country did not think so.

Mr. HILL. Why do you not bring it in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman vote for the bill that is brought in?

Mr. HILL. I will if it agrees with the report of the Tariff [Applause on the Republican side.] Will you? Roard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether I will or not. I will vote for any bill that is brought in by a Democratic Ways and Means Committee. [Applause on the Democratic Just as the gentleman did for the bill brought in by the Republican committee, although he did not believe in all that was in it.

Mr. HILL. In the absence of the leader of the Democratic side of the House, I will say to you now that here is a wool schedule made as closely in accordance with the findings of the Tariff Board as it is within my power to make it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not as much confidence in it as the gentleman has.

Mr. HILL. If your Ways and Means Committee will bring that in here now, I think I can safely pledge to your Democratic side, without consultation with a single Member on this side, that we will give you a solid vote, insurgents, progressives, and everybody, in favor of a wool schedule in a tariff bill which the Tariff Board will indorse. [Applause on the Republican side.] Will you take the challenge?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman a question. have not read the report of the Tariff Board on the wool schedule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the gentleman is not going to, either, is he? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman intend to read it?
Mr. FITZGERALD. There are four volumes. I have read the synopsis, and if the gentleman had as much to do in the House as I have he would not have read that much.

Mr. HILL. I think I put in about as many hours in work as the gentleman from New York does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that the gentleman is very industrious and gives all of his time to his official duties, and he specializes on tariff matters. I have been informed that the Tariff Board believe that raw wool should be on the free list. Will the gentleman from Connecticut vote for that?

Mr. HILL. Now, I am going to leave the gentleman with one parting suggestion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say that I understand that the Tariff Board believe that raw wool should be on the free list.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where? Mr. HILL. The gentleman from New York says he has not read the tariff report; he has no business to understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not read it, but I have that information; will the gentleman vote to put raw wool on the free

Mr. HILL. I do not know anything about that. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I do not want to discuss a question with a gentleman who says he does not know what the question is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not blame the gentleman for run-[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

ning away. [Laughter on the Democratic s Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman think that the gentleman from New York, when he asks the question if the Tariff Board does not recommend raw wool being put on the free list, know that that is not so, because the Tariff Board makes no recommendations at all?

Mr. HILL. Why, certainly.

Mr. COOPER. And he does that for the purpose of getting it into the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand how clever the gentleman from Wisconsin is in attempting to conceal what is a notorious fact, that the Tariff Board believes that raw wool should be placed on the free list, which neither the gentleman from Wisconsin nor the gentleman from Connecticut would dare vote for.

Mr. HILL. I do not think there is any such notorious fact, that the Tariff Board is in favor of free raw wool.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will tell the gentleman where he can get the information.

Mr.-HILL. I do not know the position of the Tariff Board on that question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman ask them? He has talked with them often.

Mr. HILL. I am studying the report of the Tariff Board. Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut to be more considerate of my colleague. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, do not you get excited also.
Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have just one more thing to say and then I shall stop. As a business man all my life I want to plead for the industries of the United States and for the people of the United States. I say to you that this condition of affairs, which is being maintained purely for politics [applause on the Republican side]—absolutely for politics—is not fair to the business interests and to the people of the United States, either those in business or on the farms or anywhere else. When a report is brought into this House which in all human probability has cost two or three hundred thousand dollars, which has taken two years' time to get, which has taken a large corps of experts all over the world simultaneously, a thing that never was done before in the history of the world and never done so exhaustively by any nation in the world-when such a report is brought in the people of the country have a right to see it. To have it deliberately ignored, and to have the party in power in the House go on bringing in schedules on which no report and no investigation has been made, either by themselves, except in secret, or anyone else, is not fair to the American people. not fair to continue that sort of thing, and I beg of you to stop playing politics and get down to business.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman has said about this report; but why is it that Members of Congress can only secure one copy of this report?

Mr. HILL. Simply because—no; I shall not say that—because our Democratic friends do not care to have it printed.

Mr. GOOD. Is it intended to smother the report?
Mr. HILL. I have tried my best to get copies to send the representatives of the industry in my State. I asked for 25, and I got 5.

Mr. PAYNE. How did the gentleman get the five? Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. How did you get the five?

Mr. COOPER. I can not get but one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I introduced into the House some time ago a joint resolution providing for the printing of 20,000 copies of the tariff report on the woolen schedule, 12,000 for the use of the House and 8,000 for the use of the Senate, but so far have been unable to secure a favorable report upon the resolution.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not a further fact that the then acting chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when this report was brought in refused to move that any copies should be printed, and plainly stated it ought not to be printed?

Mr. HILL. Absolutely. I want to treat the clerk of the committee fairly. I first got 6 copies, and again I asked for 25 and got 5, so that I got 11 altogether.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman tell the rest of us how we can get six copies?

Mr. HILL. I can not do that. I wish I could. There is no sheep grower or woolen manufacturer in the United States who can afford to be without a copy of that report.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. HILL. Yes. Mr. PAYNE. On this other subject. The only place under God's heaven where you can get a copy of that report is from the chairman or the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the number would not last 15 minutes after those who wanted them started to get them.

Mr. HILL. I will state that I got a letter to-day from a constituent in Litchfield, Conn., asking for a copy of this report. I gave it to him and wrote a letter somewhat as follows: I said that this is a very difficult thing to get; that it is a very rare publication; and that I sent it to him cheerfully, one of four remaining, notwithstanding many demands that I have had upon me, and that I asked him as a favor to me, after he had read it, to deposit it in the public library of his town so that other people might have access to it. Yet, Mr. Chairman, we are spending millions upon millions of money in printing, we are spending thousands and thousands of dollars upon useless investigations that are going on, and here is information unique in the history of the world that Members almost have to give bonds for to get one copy. Gentlemen, will not you stop playing politics and do business? Will you not? Is it not fair to the American people, is it not fair to your associates on this side of the House? Is it not fair to the President of the United States, to whom by and by you are going to send up legislation looking to the care or the destruction—one or -of the industries of this country?

Mr. FOWLER. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure for a question.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the President of the United States in 1908 made campaign speeches over the country at various places, among which were Cincinnati and Kansas City?

Mr. HILL. Oh, I do not know anything about that.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask the gentleman further if it is not fact that in his addresses at both of those places the President when and how to make a reduction of the was ready then to tell when and how to make a reduction of the tariff—

Mr. HILL. I will ask the gentleman this question—

Mr. FOWLER. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman himself think it is fair to inject a speech into my remarks?

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not; neither do I desire to do so.
Mr. HILL. Then please do not do it. I told the gentleman to ask a question and I would yield for it. Now the gentleman goes on to make a speech. Mr. Chairman, I thank the members of the committee for the courtesy they have shown me in occupying so much of their time. I did not intend to do it, but I appreciate the courtesy very much. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair inform me how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 5 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the commit-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is that by agreement with the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

The SPEAKER. No; there is no agreement, the Chair understands, but there was a similar bill that is already pending in the Committee on the Civil Service upon which hearings have been had.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

There was no objection.

SENATE. -

Wednesday, January 31, 1912.

(Continuation of legislative day of Tuesday, January 30, 1912.)

The Senate met at the expiration of the recess, at 12 c'clock m., Wednesday, January 31, 1912.

PLANT INVESTMENT CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3087) for the relief of the Plant Investment Co., of New York, N. Y., returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed is reconsidered, a motion therefor having heretofore been entered; and, without objection, the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 1618. An act amending paragraph 6 of the act relating to the Metropolitan police force was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, was read twice by its title.

Mr. REED. I move that the bill just read be referred to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report within 20 days from this date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that House bill 18642 be referred to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the said bill back to the Senate within 20 days from this date. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, of course the Committee on Finance will have to abide by the decision of the Senate on this question. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that apparently no opportunity has been given in the House of Representatives or by the Committee on Ways and Means to give the vast and numerous interests concerned in this schedule any opportunity for a hearing. I am in receipt, as I suppose other members of the committee and other Senators are, of numerous requests for an opportunity on the part of manufacturers to present their views regarding the several paragraphs of the bill.

I do not believe it will be possible to give an opportunity for a proper hearing within the time fixed by the motion of the Senator from Missouri. Many of the persons who desire a hearing reside on the Pacific coast and at a distance and they have to confer with their associates in order to select the persons who are most competent and best able to come here to represent them. Anyone who is at all conversant with the ordinary course of these matters will realize, without further explanation, that the time fixed makes it physically impossible to give a fair hearing to the parties concerned, and it is manifestly unfair to discriminate by giving an opportunity to those near by to be heard and not afford an equal and similar opportunity to those at a distance.

I simply desire to record my protest-

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PENROSE. I do. Mr. LODGE. I only desire to make a point of order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate is now acting under a unanimousconsent agreement, which was to take up the children's bureau bill and dispose of it on the same legislative day. A unanimousconsent agreement of that character has always been held in the Senate to exclude all other business. The question of the reference of a bill which may lead to a great deal of debate is certainly other business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the provision of the rule which permits the Chair to lay before the Senate at any time messages from the House of Representatives makes it permissible for the Chair to lay this measure before the Senate now. But if it is the desire of the Senate to proceed with the special order, the Chair feels sure that all Senators would be entirely willing that the Chair shall withdraw the message now from presentation, and present it later.

Mr. LODGE. I did not intend to make a point of order on the Chair's laying the message before the Senate, which may be done at any time. I make the point of order on the introduction of new business, which is to refer the bill with in-structions, in the middle of a unanimous-consent agreement. I think the question of reference ought to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that there must accompany the right to lay a proposition before the Senate a disposition of it in some way. But the Chair sees no possible objection to the Senate permitting the matter to stand until the other business is disposed of.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am inclined to concur in the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts. All that can be done is merely to lay the matter before the Senate, but without any action by the Senate at this time. Nevertheless, because the bill was laid before the Senate, and under the ordinary procedure here it goes to some committee, I thought it was necessary to make the motion at this time. I am quite content that the matter shall be held in abeyance until we have disposed of the matters included within the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. I would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he do not press his point of order. The matter has come up while many Senators who are interested in the question are present in the Chamber. It will be very uncertain when it will come up again, and it might be quite inconvenient for many of us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the regular order is the disposal of the bill which he has laid before the Senate. The Chair is not inclined to the opinion expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts that there does not accompany the right to lay before the Senate a message from the House the disposal of that message.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I said I did not want to press that point; but under the unanimous-consent agreement I do not think any other business, laying messages or anything else, That is merely my opinion that I offer. I do not think anything can supersede the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest the reading of the rule? Section 6 of Rule VII is:

The Presiding Officer may at any time lay * * * and tion pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose and any ques-

Mr. LODGE. A unanimous-consent agreement, I think, sets that rule aside and suspends it, because otherwise the unanimous-consent agreement would be almost valueless. Business might be laid before the Senate to any extent and destroy all the time for debate under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair make this suggestion, which will obviate all difficulty. Without objection, the message from the House will lie upon the table for future disposal.

Mr. REED. That is satisfactory.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 252.

PROPOSED CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene].

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the discussion is proceeded with, I desire to offer a substitute for the bill. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina proposes a substitute for the entire bill? Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment is pending, which, of course, must be disposed of before the substitute can be voted upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the pending amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene]. A motion to strike out and insert can not be entertained without first perfecting the matter which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the proposed substitute be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read for information. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all the text of the bill and to insert after the enacting clause:

the bill and to insert after the enacting clause:

That the Bureau of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, having especial reference to questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations and accidents incident thereto, diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts of like nature as have a bearing upon the welfare of children.

SEC. 2. The results of the investigation herein directed and provided for shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior on or before the 1st day of February, 1913, and the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith transmit the same to Congress. Congress shall make provision for the publication and distribution of said reports, or so much thereof as may be deemed necessary and proper.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, instead of establishing a new

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, instead of establishing a new bureau with all the expense incident thereto, the proposed substitute gives power to do exactly what the bill provides to a bureau that is already established. It seems to me that it is a proper part of the Bureau of Education, and it can be done with very much less expense. The Bureau of Education can collate all the facts that are given in the Census, in the Labor Bureau, and elsewhere, and give the information all collated that is desired by the supporters of the pending bill. I therefore have introduced the proposed substitute.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if he does not think that it would be necessary to vote some appropriation for the increased work that is imposed upon the Bureau of Education.

Mr. OVERMAN. Whatever is necessary, of course, the Committee on Appropriations will provide, just like we did with the Labor Bureau. It will recommend whatever appropriation is necessary to carry out the duties prescribed in the bill.

The Senator will remember that the Bureau of Labor was ordered to make the prior investigation, and the bill carried no appropriation whatever. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior sent an estimate to the Appropriations Committee of the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill, and the money was duly appropriated. Of course, Congress having provided for this investigation to be made, it will necessarily make the necessary appropriation to carry it into effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not catch the word. Was it to collate or was it to collect information?

Mr. OVERMAN. "The Bureau of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall investigate and report."

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, that is it.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], which the Secretary will read.

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment which was offered the other day was somewhat hastily drawn, and I have redrafted it, making it a little more definite but adding nothing in addi-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his former amendment and offers the following amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations" and in lieu insert:

The chief of said bureau shall tabulate the reports so collected, and shall from time to time publish said compilations and tabulations, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper, but the details of said reports shall not be disclosed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the substitute proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following amendment to the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. In line 1, page 2, insert, after the words "child life," the words "among all classes of our people," so as to read:

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, etc.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Is it offered as an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is offered as an amendment to the bill,

I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought it was an amendment to the substitute

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the bill. Mr. BORAH. I have no objection whatever to the amendment. I think the bill is undoubtedly to that effect now, but if there is any doubt——

Mr. GALLINGER. This makes it clear.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object to it if it is thought proper to put it in, although I think it pure tautology.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the question will be put again. Let Senators vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer another amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary w The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary. In line 3, page 2, after the word "rate," strike out the comma and insert the words "among all classes of our people," so that if amended it will read:

The birth rate among all classes of our people.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask for a rereading of the amendment? The Secretary again read Mr. Gallinger's amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that does not add anything whatever to the authority that is given already in the bill. I do not know the Senator's object in introducing it. The same subject matter is already covered by the general terms of the bill, and the same subject matter will be covered again by repeating it in a former part of the While I do not see any particular objection to it, it adds nothing to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my purpose in offering the amendment is that, in looking over these 12 volumes of interesting literature, volumes that will be interesting possibly to the antiquarians of the country after a few months, I find that the investigations were made exclusively among the poorer people of the country, and especially in the mill villages of the country. I apprehend that will be duplicated if we establish this bureau, and I want this investigation to be made among all classes of our people. If we have race suicide in this country. I think it will be found not to apply so much to the people who have been investigated as to the people who have not been investigated. I want to have a general investigation upon this subject.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think it would be rather unfortunate to establish classes among our people by an act of Congress. I do not think there are any. I would rather not have a law which says there are. There are no classes of the American people. I am against the amendment because it uses that expression.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amend-

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the substitute be read. Some Senators have come in since it was read.

*The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the substitute will again be read.

The Secretary again read Mr. Overman's substitute.
Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate with an extended discussion of the proposed substitute, but I will state that when the pending bill was originally introduced and went to the Committee on Education and Labor it provided that this proposed bureau should be in the Interior Department instead of in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The hearings, however, disclosed the fact that those who had given great consideration to the subject, including the then Commissioner of Education, thought that the bureau should be established in the Department of Commerce and Labor. While I shall not and could not now state in extenso the reasons for that, I will say that it was after a hearing before the committee that the bill was changed in that respect.

With reference to not creating a bureau and thereby saving expense, it was found that this work could not be done any cheaper or any better in any other way than it could be done by creating a bureau, but that if there was a central authority and a responsible head the work would be done just as cheaply and more effectively and more successfully than if it were placed under the Commissioner of Education. For the reasons which were heard in committee we concluded to put the bureau under the Department of Commerce and Labor, and also to create a separate bureau, because we could not find that it would be any saving whatever not to create a bureau and place it else-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], on which that Senator asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PAGE (when Mr. DILLINGHAM's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is necessarily absent from the Chamber attending upon the Lorimer investigating committee. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. Fletcher's name was called). M colleague [Mr. Fletcher] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. Foster's name was called). I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. Foster], and also that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy]. That Senator being absent, and I not knowing what his vote would be if present, I beg to withhold my vote on this subject. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have not a pair, but I have a sort of understanding with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] that I will not vote in his absence. however, reliably informed that he favors this bill, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote under the circumstances. I vote nav.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent from the city. I understand that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], but if present he would vote "nay." I am sure, therefore, that the Senator from Missouri did right in voting.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced-yeas 30, nays 46, as follows:

NOT VOTING—15.
Bankhead Clapp Clarke, Ark. Davis	Dillingham Fletcher Foster Gore	Johnston, Ala. La Follette Lorimer McCumber	Percy Smith, Mich. Warren

So Mr. Overman's substitute was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the smallness of the vote in favor of the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] was due to the fact that there was a misapprehension regarding the meaning of the substitute. There seemed to be an impression that the substitute limited the operation of the bill to 1913.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not so intended. I had my clerk draw the amendment hurriedly this morning, but I did not intend that there should be such a limitation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, Mr. President, that I have been throughout in harmony with the purpose of this bill, but when it was reported to this body by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] I inquired whether the proper jurisdiction should not be that of the Interior Department instead of the Department of Commerce and Labor. I have always been of the view that the proposed bureau should be a part of the Interior Department, and I think it eminently proper that all the duties proposed by this bill should be imposed upon the Bureau of Education in that department. I am sure that the vote for the proposed substitute would have been a much larger one if it had not been for the misapprehension existing with reference to the operation of the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], and I hope that at some subsequent period in the day another substitute will be offered that will not be subject to that misunderstanding.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I came into the Senate too late to hear the substitute read. I voted for it upon the impression that it simply placed the same work in the Bureau of Education in the Interior Department that the original bill placed in the Department of Commerce and Labor. I did not vote for the substitute upon any thought to lessen the effectiveness of the measure, but because of my familiarity with the work of the Bureau of Education I felt sure that if it were placed there it would be intelligently and well done.

VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engross-ment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to amend the bill by striking out, on page 2, line 6, the following words:

And such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children. The effect of the language seems to me to add nothing to what is conferred in the previous language of the bill, which provides that the bureau shall "report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life."

This language is:

And such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children. If the bureau is to report upon all matters pertaining to that, there can be no other facts which have a bearing upon it. It is surplusage, and I move to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amend-

The Secretary. On page 2, line 6, after the word "Territories," it is proposed to strike out "and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. By the sound the "ayes" have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it. Mr. BACON. Is the bill in the Committee of the Whole or in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. It has been reported from the Committee of the Whole, then? The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. Are there further amendments to be offered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for a division upon the last vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Chair will again put the question on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee].

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a divisionayes 28, noes 23.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engross-ment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the amendment I introduced, in order that I may change it in the respect suggested. never intended to limit the operation of the bill at all, and I should like to submit the amendment making it unlimited.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary, if any amendment is to be offered, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time. If there be no objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time will be reconsidered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have inserted in the substitute I have heretofore offered the words "annually thereafter, and the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith transmit the same to Congress," to come in after the words "1st day of February, 1913, and." I now offer the substitute modified in that manner. in that manner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Bureau of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, having especial reference to questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations and accidents incident thereto, diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts of like nature as have a bearing upon the welfare of children.

SEC. 2. The results of the investigation herein directed and provided for shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior on or before the 1st day of February, 1913, and annually thereafter, and the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith transmit the same to Congress. Congress shall make provision for the publication and distribution of said reports, or so much thereof as may be deemed necessary and proper.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understood that this was a reproduction of the other bill. But it simply provides for a transfer to the Secretary of the Interior. It makes no provision whatever for doing the work and provides vision whatever for doing the work and provides no additional force and no additional money.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is exactly like the law for investigations by the Bureau of Labor.
Mr. LODGE. But he has no force with which to do it, and no money with which to do it, and no opportunity to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is exactly what was done in that case.
Mr. LODGE. We must make an appropriation. You can not do anything without an appropriation. The other bill provides for additional clerks.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is exactly what we did in the case of the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. BAILEY. According to the President, you do not need any more.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the substitute has the vice of overlooking the question of an appropriation, and the work presumably is to be carried out by an appropriation on a subsequent appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. The effect of the measure now before the Senate is to limit the amount to be appropriated and to prescribe who shall do the work, and it confines the bureau to a certain amount of help.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator know that this officer could send his estimate of the appropriation here and Congress would appropriate the amount?

Mr. BORAH. Congress likely would not pay any attention to the Commissioner of Education, because the commissioner has said it ought not to be under his jurisdiction and should be under another and separate bureau. The very object of the bill in its present form is to avoid this unlimited power and also to prescribe the limit of the appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator really believe that the appropriation in this bill will be sufficient to do the work? Does not the Senator know, as a matter of fact, that we will be asked for an additional appropriation to carry out the purpose of the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know. I know we went very extensively and in detail into the question when the matter was before the committee, and we thought that this bureau could be organized and the work be begun with this appropriation. Whether or not there shall be more money appropriated will depend upon the facts submitted to Congress, and I think the next Congress will be as wise as this Congress and will be able to determine whether it should appropriate more or less for this bureau. I have no doubt, if the work is done as it should be done, there will be more appropriations, but I assume there will be no appropriation unless there is a necessity for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that 6 clerks are going to be able to go into the 46 States of the American Union and make this investigation?

Mr. BORAH. I have no idea that six clerks will be able to make as thorough an investigation as some people would have made, but they will be able to gather facts in the States, in connection with the work of the different States. It was not the idea of those supporting the movement to create this bureau that the force here provided for would gather all the information, but that it would compile for universal use such information as has already been gathered in the different States.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the bill specifically says they shall make an investigation of these questions.

Mr. BORAH. They shall investigate by gathering together the information in the different States.

I am frank to say that, if I had my way about it, instead of putting it at $29,000, I would put it at $129,000, and in a short time facts would be gathered and sufficient publicity given that there would be some forces, opposing the bill now, which would at least change their system of doing business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply rose for the purpose of asking the Senator, in all seriousness and good faith, whether he be-lieves that the machinery provided in this bill is sufficient to carry out the purposes of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. I do, in the beginning of the work.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the beginning of the work. If you began it with a nickel, it would be just as efficient.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt the Senator from New Hampshire would like to confine it to a nickel.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt it would be as efficient. Mr. LODGE. The machinery in this measure is just as ef-

Mr. GALLINGER. For the former commission not a copper was provided, but I think $300,000 was appropriated. I think the Senator from North Carolina was right in saying that if the Bureau of Education called for an additional appropriation or additional help it would be forthcoming. So I think the statement made in behalf of the substitute, that in it no appropriation is made, has no force, as we very frequently legislate in that way. There is no difficulty about that afterwards. We respond to the demands of the different departments and make the appropriation if it is needed.

I think the Bureau of Labor during this session has received $40,000, and I think it is probably being used for the purpose of this investigation, and in giving us so much literature.

always respond to those requests liberally and freely, and we would do the same thing if the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina should be agreed to by the Senate. There is no question about it at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I came into the Senate Chamber after the substitute had been read, and I have not had an opportunity to consider it, but I do not think the substitute meets the purpose of this bill at all. I see no necessity for a formal report to Congress on the result of these investi-gations. The main purpose of these investigations is that the material shall be at hand and be furnished in bulletin form from time to time for the use of the people who desire to study these questions. I do not think the substitute meets the case, and while I should prefer to see this work done by a division in the Department of Education, I can not vote for the substitute, as I understand it, and shall vote for the original bill in preference.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Georgia. The substitute does not meet the intention of the original bill, in that it does not provide this officer with a berth at $5,000 a year.

And take care of a few friends.

Mr. HEYBURN. And a few friends. I think therein it does fall short, but that to me is rather a recommendation than

Mr. President, the argument which has been made against the bill from the great amount of money that has already been expended in collecting information determines me to stand by the bill rather than by the substitute.

I have not the slightest doubt of the constitutional authority of Congress to collect information regarding the social and industrial conditions in the United States through such agencies as it sees fit to constitute for that purpose.

Would the Senator from New York be good Mr. BAILEY. enough to tell the Senate upon what provision of the Constitution he rests the statement as broad as that?

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from New York will answer that question by reading from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Legal Tender cases. The court

It is not indispensable to the existence of any power claimed for the Federal Government that it can be found specified in the words of the Constitution or clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers. Its existence may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantive powers expressly defined or from them all combined. It is allowable to group together any number of them and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred. * * * Congress has often exercised, without question, powers that are not expressly given nor ancillary to any single enumerated power. Powers thus exercised are what are called by Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, resulting powers, arising from the aggregate powers of the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. ROOT. In a moment, when I have completed my answer. Mr. President, we are vested by the Constitution with author-We impose ity to legislate upon a vast range of subjects. duties-customs and internal-revenue duties. We have the power to impose direct taxes. We regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations. We are vested with the power to propose amendments to the Constitution of the United States if in our judgment the distribution of power between the States and the General Government ought to be changed. We have power to pass upon agreements between the States in case the States choose to regulate among themselves their industrial competition; and, for the purpose of performing duties which are imposed upon us in the exercise of our power in all this vast range of legislation, it is necessary that we shall be fully and broadly informed upon the social and industrial conditions of our country.

Now, sir, Congress must be its own judge as to the kind and scope of its information, and it must be its own judge of the agencies through which it will acquire that information. I have no question whatever of the power of Congress to provide for securing this information, and the reason we are now called upon to provide a new agency for acquiring information in this field is that the agents hitherto existing in the department, who have been engaged in doing this very work, have proved to be ineffective in the performance of the work, and we have accumulated a great mass of material of which no use is being made.

It is in the hope that the expectations of the originators and advocates of this bill for a more effective use of the material which may be collected will be realized that I shall stand for the bill and against the substitute.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, evidently the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] had prepared himself to answer the very question which I asked, and when the Senator from New York prepares himself to answer the Senate may be well assured that he makes the best answer of which the matter is suscepti-I therefore assume that what he has said is not only the best defense of this legislation, but it is the whole defense for it.

I need not remind the Senate, and certainly I need not remind the Senator from New York, that the quotation which he has just read is from an opinion which reversed two former decisions of that court, nor is it necessary for me to remind the Senate or the Senator from New York that it relates to one of the few episodes which almost touched that great court with a scandal. With all of the facts before me I do not now believe, although I have asserted it in my earlier days and on less information, that the court was packed to procure the opinion from which the Senator from New York has read, but the Senator knows as well as I do that there are thousands of intelligent men in this country who do believe it. I therefore would give less weight to that opinion than to almost any one rendered by that great tribunal, unless it would be the opinion that held the income tax of 1894 invalid.

But, Mr. President, let us accept that opinion, and, indeed, I am not sure that I do not readily accept that part of it which the Senator from New York has just read to the Senate. Let us agree that Congress need not put its finger on a single power authorizing a given action, but that it may put its finger on several powers which, taken together, may authorize a given action. Does that rule justify this legislation?

The Senator from New York tells us that we have the power to propose amendments to the Constitution. Does the Senator from New York mean—if he does it is instructive, and I think it would be alarming to Senators on this side—that he believes the purpose of this information is to propose an amendment to the Constitution which shall hereafter confer upon the Federal Government power over the children of the land? Does he mean that we will hereafter upon this information be asked to submit a constitutional amendment which will authorize Congress to pass child-labor laws?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ROOT. May I answer that question now? Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. Of course, the Senator from New York does not mean that Mr. BAILEY. I thought the Senator instanced that as one of the powers.

Mr. ROOT. It is information that may be necessary to enable us to reject a proposal of that description.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say we would submit it. I asked if we are to be asked to submit it. We could not reject it unless we were asked to submit it.

Mr. ROOT. No one, Mr. President, can put a limit on what we may be asked to do.

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely. Very true, if this legislation is constitutional.

Mr. ROOT. Not the amendment of the Constitution of the United States. My proposition is that we have the constitutional authority to collect information to enable us always to be ready to meet any demand upon us for the exercise of our authority

Mr. BAILEY. Information with respect to matters not within our jurisdiction is not apt to materially assist in dealing with matters which have been committed to us. But, Mr. President, let us take the next power which the Senator from New York says that Congress is authorized to exercise. He says we have the power to lay and collect taxes, both internal and external, both revenue duties at the customhouses and revenue duties upon domestic commodities or transactions. Does the Senator seriously ask the Senate to believe that we are passing this bill for the purpose of obtaining information which will enable us to levy taxes?

If the Senator from New York, with all his great ability and acumen, is not able to illustrate his contention by producing an instance which fits this legislation, then no such instance can be produced. The Senator from New York is skilled in argument. The Senator from New York knows as well as any man on this floor what is an apt illustration. Yet he is not able to point out to the Senate a single enumerated power which he will tell us the information which it is here proposed to collect is a necessary and proper means of executing.

Mr. President, in order that I may not do the Senator an injustice, and in order that the Senate may have the benefit of his vast learning and his great ability, I will not leave it to be said that while he instanced things which did not fit the case there were others which did fit the case, and I will be glad to have him now tell me the single provision, or the several provisions, in the Constitution which can be exercised more wisely or more justly upon the information here obtained.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the question which the Senator from Texas has put is the very question which he conceded by the assumption of his argument he was not entitled to put;

Mr. BAILEY. That may be a good answer, but I do not

Mr. ROOT. That we are not to be required to put our finger upon a specific, expressed power-

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say that.

Mr. ROOT. As a basis of an implied power.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator misunderstands me. I did not so limit my challenge. I concede, for the purpose of this debate, that he can not be required to point out a particular one; but I call on him to point out one or several.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator now asks that I put my finger on

Mr. BAILEY. Either one or several.

Mr. ROOT. Either one or several powers of the Constitution as a basis of the implied power to collect information regarding the social and industrial condition of the country. My answer is that there is not one power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution for the exercise of which a wise and prudent disposition of Congress will not provide for full and thorough information as to the conditions existing in the country for which we legislate. Be it the power of taxation, be it the power of regulating immigration, be it the power of regulating commerce, be it the power of establishing post offices and post roads, be it the power of declaring war and making peace, whatever it be, it is our duty to know the conditions of the country regarding which we are legislating, and full and accurate knowledge regarding those conditions will make us better legislators and better able to perform our duty; and in order that we may be able to perform our duty upon instruction and knowledge rather than upon evolving ideas from our inner consciousness, I say that we have the implied power to collect that information and to put it in a form where it will be available for us and available for those who sent us here and who pass upon our acts.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if that theory of this Government should be accepted it would forever destroy all the limitations upon the power of Congress, and I doubt if the Senator from New York in perfectly cool reflection would be willing to repeat the opinion which he has just expressed. I have been drawn to him within very recent years by a belief that he was himself soon to espouse the time-honored doctrine of State rights, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who sits next to him and who smiles at that allusion, has already

I am not surprised that Massachusetts should become an advocate of State rights. Indeed, I will be surprised, sir, if every New England Commonwealth does not become in time a sturdy and earnest advocate of that doctrine. In the old days when New England governed the country New England never feared the General Government, because being practically the General Government they had no fear of themselves. But the scepter has passed from New England's hand; the power to control the destinies of this Republic has gone far beyond them, and they, wise in this generation, as their fathers were in the other generations, will learn a very wholesome fear of a Government which they can no longer control.

I had believed that even the Senator from New York was soon to adopt that doctrine. I may have misread, but I think I do not misread a speech which he delivered before some audience in New York within the last two years in which he declared that the Federal Government was breaking down under the powers now assumed by it or imposed upon it, and he called upon those who heard him to help resist and reverse the tendency to an increase of Federal power and Federal operation.

But, Mr. President, he will call in vain upon the majority to desist from exercising a power which he alleges them to possess. It may be treason to say that the majority can do wrong, but I am guilty of that treason, if treason it be, because I know that majorities have done wrong, and I know besides that the very purpose of framing and adopting this written Constitution was to protect the minority against the wrongs and injustices which majorities might inflict. So long as the Senator from New York is teaching the people of this country the sloctrine of unlimited Federal power he will plead in vain against the exercise of powers which he thus publicly asserts.

But, Mr. President, let us analyze the Senator's answer a little further. If the industrial, the social, and moral condition of the children of this country is a proper subject of Federal legislation, then the Congress may properly authorize the collection of information which may qualify it to legislate upon that subject. But from the beginning to the end of that Constitution the Senator from New York can not find a single authority, nor can he fairly infer an authority from the whole of them, for congressional action with reference to the morals, health, or the protection of children. If he can, I would be greatly obliged to him if he would point it out to me.

I was reared in a school which taught, and I think no other school ever disputed that teaching, that the morals, the health, and the behavior of grown people as well as little children were withdrawn entirely from Federal countenance and left exclusively to the State's jurisdiction. Now, if that be true— and I think the Senator from New York will not be bold enough to dispute that, will he? The Senator does not dissent from that statement, does he?

Mr. ROOT. That is to say, the statement that the behavior of grown people as well as little children is—

Mr. BAILEY. The morals, the health, and the behavior of grown people and of little children.

Mr. ROOT. Of course I do not dispute that. Of course I agree with the Senator upon that, but, Mr. President, is that any reason why Congress can not collect information?

Mr. BAILEY. I think Congress has no power to create offices to procure information which it has no power to use for legislative, executive, or judicial purposes. That is my doctrine. I go back from these bald generalizations of the Senator from New York to the report of the committee itself. What does the committee assert to be the purpose of this legislation? It is to enable the States to do those things which the commit-tee concedes the States alone may do. I do not think I misstate the argument of the committee, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], with his customary fairness, agrees by nodding his assent that I state it properly.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from New York can take that report of the committee and find any power in the Con-stitution, or if reading them all together he can find that all the powers of the Constitution confer upon the General Government a power to aid the States in taking care of the children, I am ready to conclude the argument.

The children, sir, are left, so far as they are left to any sovereignty, to the States of this Union; and I am one of those who believe that the States themselves ought to leave the mother's and father's authority as much unimpaired as possible, taking care only to do those things which are imperatively demanded by the highest interests of society.

So far as any legislation of this country will look to helping sick children, may look to relieving deserted children, may look to a provision for helpless children, those laws must be passed by the States; and there is not a Senator in this body who will contend that outside of this Federal District or the Territories of the United States Congress may enact any such law as that.

Mr. President, though I have no right to put the question to my Democratic associates, I beg them to consider that when the Senator from New York undertakes to rest a defense of this bill upon the broad statement of the Legal Tender cases, and yet is unable even under that to justify the bill by a single attempt to point out one power or any number of powers which it is honestly intended to execute, we concede the whole case between us and our adversaries on a construction of the Constitution. I suppose that it is now a waste of time to argue the Constitution of the United States. There is an impatience both here and elsewhere with arguments of that kind, and I find generally that the men who are the most impatient at the argument are the very men who know least about the Constitution. I have never in my life known a man who had studied the Constitution until he understood it who did not entertain a profound respect for it. Of course I have known wise men to differ about some of its simple provisions, but in all my life I have never known a man who understood it who did not manifest toward it a wholesome and a high respect.

When we are setting aside the Constitution here can we wonder that those who sent us to the Senate may feel impatient of its restraints and seek to set it aside in their sphere? No man who undertakes to construe that Constitution beyond its meaning or out of its meaning, or who dares to do anything here contrary to its meaning, ought ever be heard to tell the people whom he represents that the Constitution of the United States binds their conscience, because if it does not bind his it will not bind theirs.

It will not be long before the Senator from New York will be pleading the ancient and traditional doctrine of this Government in answer to the "progressive" or the "insurgent" demands of his own party. I must not mix those terms. As I understand, "insurgent" describes a certain section of the Republican Party, and "progressive" describes a certain section of the Democratic Party. Of course, they mean largely the same thing—that is, they describe largely the same state of mind-but I believe Democrats have appropriated one and Republicans have appropriated the other. When the insurgents and the progressives face the Senator from New York he will cry as loudly for the protection of the Constitution then as I Yet when they read that extract from the legaltender opinion, which the Senator has read to the Senate, I wonder how he will answer them.

Mr. President, if we intend to maintain this Government there is only one way to do it, and that is to obey its Constitution. I have no patience with the man who invokes the Constitution against those things he does not desire, and yet waives that Constitution in favor of those things which he thinks ought to be done. The Constitution must be respected in all cases or in time it will come to be respected in no case. The Senator from New York ought to know that, and does know that as well as I do. If this Congress possesses the power to pass this bill, then this Congress possesses the power to pass any bill it chooses, because there has been no bill ever proposed here, except indeed it be in open and palpable violation of some express prohibition in the Constitution, that can not be justified upon the argument the Senator from New York has just addressed to the Senate. If I may stand here and say that this bill is warranted, not by any particular provision in the Constitution but that it is warranted by all of them, which I need not specify, then how can a limit on our power be fixed? Oh, Mr. President, let us be candid with ourselves; let us be candid with the country; let us either adopt the argument of the Senator from New York and say that the American Congress has power to do whatever it pleases, or let us say it has no power to do the thing which is here proposed.

I have objected to other measures of this kind, and my objection has from time to time been overruled. Sometimes I have not even been able to elicit a reply from those in charge of such bills as this, but we have gone on, step after step, establishing precedent after precedent until the ablest men in this body abandon the Constitution as an authority wholly and forever, and rest their support of this measure on the precedents, admitting practically that the precedents are without the warrant of the Constitution. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] who has charge of this bill and who is surpassed by no man in this body as a lawyer—a lawyer, too, who has a pride in his profession, and generously endowed with an intellectual integrity—does not say that there is any provision in this Constitution to justify this measure.

The Senator from New York [Mr. Root], second to no man in this Senate, second to no man in this Republic, as a lawyer, will not attempt to specify a particular provision of the Constitution to which this bill can be referred. The Senator from New York, invoking the broadest doctrine ever announced by politicians or by judges in the history of the country, quoting the legal-tender decision in its fullness—and the quotation which he makes from it is the broadest statement in that or in any other opinion ever delivered from that high bench-yet in quoting that he can not justify himself even under it, for when I called upon him to point out either one or several provisions of the Constitution to which this bill may be referred and which this bill is intended to execute, he answers that he is not re-proposed substitute.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill can be passed without trampling upon the Constitution of the United States. If this bill is violative of the Constitution, then that instrument has been misinterpreted and broken from the very day of its ratification.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution opens with the general declaration, "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." This clause, conferring upon Congress these broad and general powers, is followed by the enumeration of certain specific powers, beginning with the clause authorizing Congress "to borrow money on the credit of the United States" and ending with the clause which declares that Congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitu-tion in the Government of the United States or any department or officer thereof."

It is contended by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that notwithstanding the existence of the general clause, the powers of Congress are circumscribed by the specifically enumerated powers which follow the general clause. If we are to accept the construction thus contended for by the Senator from Texas, then there can be no question that we must abolish fully onethird of the present machinery of government, because, if the contention of the Senator from Texas is correct, then that machinery exists in defiance of the Constitution.

If we have no power to inquire into the condition of children laboring in factories, then we have no power to inquire into the condition of adults in factories; thus we wipe out the Department of Commerce and Labor. If we are without power to inquire into the moral surroundings of children, surely we may not investigate the diseases of animals.

A large number of existing bureaus should be immediately abolished. The Bureaus of American Ethnology, of Animal Industry, of Chemistry, of Education, of Mines, of Plant Industry, of Soils, of International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, and of Entomology would be wiped out at once. The Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and the Bureau of Corporations would either be abrogated or their work greatly circumscribed. The Smithsonian Institution must close its doors; the distribution of garden seeds must at once be discontinued; and the entire Department of Agriculture go to the scrap heap.

We would not even have the right to investigate the ravages of the boll weevil or Texas tick; neither could we spend money to prevent the spread of glanders among horses, or the bubonic plague among human beings.

The construction of the Constitution contended for, if placed in actual practice, would paralyze these useful agencies of government and effect a change so radical as to be almost revolutionary..

I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to ever trench upon the rights of the States; but, sir, there is to my mind a very clear distinction between the Government of the United States invading the State and taking away the State's power over its citizens and the Government of the United States collecting mere data and information with reference to the population of the United States.

The power of the Federal Government to count the population of the United States, or by its agents to inquire into conditions of labor, is quite a different thing from the Government of the United States going into the respective States and undertaking to pass laws to control the habits of the people or regulate their conduct. The right of the Federal Government to inquire into the best methods of agriculture is quite a different thing from the power of the Federal Government to say to the farmers how they shall cultivate their lands. The right of the Federal Government to inquire into the moral conditions of children employed in factories and mines and give that information to the public is quite a different thing from the assumption of the power to prescribe how many hours children shall work in factories or the age at which they may be employed in mines that exist in the respective States. It seems to me that here is the dividing line between those acts which constitute an invasion of the rights of the State by the Federal Government, so ably invelghed against by the Senator from Texas, and the proper exercise of Federal functions with due regard for the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. President, I may be very greatly mistaken, but to my mind the Constitution presents no obstacle to the passage of this bill.

The argument advanced by the Senator from Texas is as old as the Constitution itself. Indeed, it was advanced at the time the Constitution was written. Perhaps it has never been more forcibly presented than by the Senator from Texas.

The argument is that the words "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States"—found at the beginning of section 8, Article I-convey no grant of power to do anything whatsoever unless the right is embraced within the specifications which constitute the remainder of the section. The argument, in fact, strikes the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" from the section, and leaves it as though these words had never been therein written.

If that often-urged view is correct, then I concede that this bill should not be passed; but in that event I also contend that this Congress should not pass an appropriation bill carrying a single dollar to any of the bureaus to which I have already referred.

But I do not agree that the view just stated is a sound construction of the Constitution. I have some confidence in the opinion I entertain, because it is bottomed upon the declaration of the greatest writer on constitutional law this country has produced. In his great work on the Constitution Mr. Story at length discusses the very proposition we are now considering, namely, whether the language "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" conveys a distinct grant of power.

At page 912, volume 1, Judge Story says:

At page 912, volume 1, Judge Story says:

An attempt has been sometimes made to treat this clause as independent, and yet as having no real significancy per se, but (if it may be so said) as a mere prelude to the succeeding enumerated powers. It is not improbable that this mode of explanation has been suggested by the fact that in the revised draft of the Constitution in the convention the clause was separated from the preceding exactly in the same manner as every succeeding clause was, namely, by a semicolon and a break in the paragraph; and that it now stands in some copies, and it is said that it stands in the official copy with a semicolon interposed. But this circumstance will be found of very little weight when the origin of the clause and its progress to its present state are traced in the proceedings in the convention. It will then appear that it was first introduced as an appendage to the power to lay taxes.

But there is a fundamental objection to the interpretation thus attempted to be maintained, which is that it robs the clause of all appear that it was first introduced as an appendage to the power to lay taxes.

But there is a fundamental objection to the interpretation thus attempted to be maintained, which is that it robs the clause of all efficacy and meaning. No person has a right to assume that any part of the Constitution is useless or is without a meaning; and a fortior no person has a right to rob any part of a meaning natural and appropriate to the language in the connection in which it stands. Now, the words have such a natural and appropriate meaning as a qualification of the preceding clause to lay taxes. Why, then, should such a meaning be rejected?

913. It is no sufficient answer to say that the clause ought to be regarded merely as containing "general terms explained and limited by the subjoined specifications, and therefore requiring no critical attention or studied precaution," because it is assuming the very point in controversy to assert that the clause is connected with any subsequent specifications. It is not said to "provide for the common defense."

And general welfare in manner following, viz, "which would

And general welfare in manner following, viz, "which would be the natural expression to indicate such an intention." But it stands disconnected from every subsequent clause, both in sense and punctuation, and is no more a part of them than they are of the power to lay taxes. Besides what suitable application in such a sense would there be of the last clause in the last clause of the enumeration, viz, the clause "to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers," and so forth? Surely this clause is as applicable to the power to lay taxes as to any other, and no one would dream of its being a mere specification under the power to provide for the common defense and general welfare.

Then follows in this author's work a statement of the identical arguments which were to-day adduced by the Senator from Texas. They have all been made in years past. And in their support the language of the old Articles of Confederation was often invoked.

Replying to these arguments, Story says:

often invoked.

Replying to these arguments, Story says:

916. But it does so happen that, in point of fact, no such unfavorable or restrictive interpretation or practice was ever adopted by the Continental Congress. On the contrary, they construed their power on the subject of requisitions and taxation exactly as it is now contended for, as a power to make requisitions on the States for all expenses which they might doem proper to incur for the common defense and general welfare and to appropriate all moneys in the Treasury to the like purposes. This is admitted to be of such notoriety as to require no proof. Surely the practice of that body in questions of this nature must be of far higher value than the mere private interpretation of any persons in the present times, however respectable. But the practice was conformable to the constitutional authority of Congress under the confederation. The ninth article expressly delegates to Congress the power "to ascertain the necessary sums to be raised for the service of the United States, and to appropriate and apply the same for defraying the public expenses"; and then provides that Congress shall not "ascertain the sums and expenses necessary for the defense and welfare of the United States, or any of them, etc., unless nine States assent to the same." So that here we have, in the eighth article, a declaration that "all charges of war and all other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare, etc., shall be defrayed out of a common treasury"; and in the ninth article an express power to ascertain the necessary sums of money to be raised for the public service, and then that the necessary sums for the defense and welfare of the United States. Clearly, therefore, upon the pilal language of the articles, the words "common defense and general welfare" in one, and "defense and welfare" in another, and "public service" in one, and "defense and welfare of all the States, but extending to the welfare and defense of the constitution. It is, on i others, the effect must substantially be the same in destroying the import and force of the particular enumeration of powers which follows these general phrases in the Constitution. For it is evident that there is not a single power whatsoever which may not have some reference to the common defense or the general welfare, nor a power of any magnitude which in its exercise does not involve or admit an application of money. The government, therefore, which possesses power in either one or the other of these extents is a government without limitation, formed by a particular enumeration of powers, and consequently the meaning and effect of this particular enumeration are destroyed by the exposition given to these general phrases.

The conclusion deduced from these premises is that under the Confederation and the Constitution "Congress is authorized to provide money for the common defense and general welfare. In both is subjoined to this authority an enumeration of the clauses to which their powers shall extend. Money can not be applied to the general welfare otherwise than by an application of it to some particular measure conducive to the general welfare. Whenever, therefore, money has been raised by the general authority, and is to be applied to a particular measure, a question arises whether the particular measure be within the enumerated authorities vested in the Congress. If it be, the money requisite for it may be applied to it; if it be not, no such application can be made. This fair and obvious interpretation coincides with and is enforced by the clause in the Constitution which declares that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations by law. An appropriation of money to the general welfare would be deemed rather a mockery than an observance of this constitutional injunction."

How much this argument, long ago advanced, sounds like the reasoning we have heard here to-day. But Judge Story answers it—nay, annihilates it—in these words:

it—nay, annihilates it—in these words:

919. Stripped of the ingenious texture by which this argument is disguised, it is neither more nor less than an attempt to obliterate from the Constitution the whole clause, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," as entirely senseless, or inexpressive of any intention whatsoever. Strike them out and the Constitution is exactly what the argument contends for. It is, therefore, an argument that the words ought not to be in the Constitution, because if they are, and have any meaning, they enlarge it beyond the scope of certain other enumerated powers, and this is both mischievous and dangerous. Being in the Constitution, they are to be deemed vox et preterea nihil, an empty sound and vain phraseology, a finger board pointing to other powers, but having no use whatsoever since these powers are sufficiently apparent without. Now, it is not too much to say that in a constitution of government, framed and adopted by the people, it is a most unjustifiable latitude of interpretation to deny effect to any clause, if it is sensible in the language in which it is expressed, and in the place in which it stands. If words are inserted, we are bound to presume that they have some definite object and intent, and to reason them out of the Constitution upon arguments ab inconvenienti—which to one mind appear wholly unfounded and to another wholly satisfactory—is to make a new constitution, not to construe the old one.

The author, after proceeding through these arguments, all of which have been reproduced upon this floor, lays this down:

The author, after proceeding through these arguments, all of which have been reproduced upon this floor, lays this down:

922. A power to levy taxes for any purposes whatsoever is a general power; a power to lay taxes for certain specified purposes is a limited power. A power to lay taxes for the commen defense and general welfare of the United States is not in common sense a general power. It is limited to those objects. It can not constitutionally transcend them, If the defense proposed by a tax be not the common defense of the United States, if the welfare be not general, but special or local, as contradistinguished from national, it is not within the scope of the Constitution. If the tax be not proposed for the common defense or general welfare, but for other objects wholly extraneous (as, for instance, for propagating Mahometanism among the Turks, or giving aids and subsidies to a foreign nation to build palaces for its kings or erect monuments to its heroes), it would be wholly indefensible upon constitutional principles. The power, then, is, under such circumstances, necessarily a qualified power. If it is so, kow, then, does it affect or in the slightest degree trench upon the other enumerated powers? No one will pretend that the power to lay taxes would, in general, have superseded or rendered unnecessary all the other enumerated powers. It would neither enlarge nor qualify them. A power to tax does not include them. Nor would they (as unhappily the confederation too clearly demonstrated) necessarily include a power to tax. Each has its appropriate office and objects; each may exist without necessarily interfering with or annihilating the other. No one will pretend that the power to lay a tax necessarily includes the power to declare war, to pass naturalization and bankrupt laws, to coin money, to establish post offices, or to define piracles and felonies on the high seas. Nor would either of these be deemed necessarily to include the power to tax. It might be convenient, but it would not be absolutely

Mr. President, there is vested in Congress the power to lay taxes for the general welfare and to expend the money for the general welfare. The fact that Congress may abuse that power is no answer to the argument and statement that the power is vested in Congress. As was well said by this author, we have the power to lay these taxes, but we would unjustly exercise that power and we would violate the Constitution if, instead of expending the money for the general welfare, we expended it for the purpose of propagating the Mahomedan religion or some other matter entirely without the purview of our governmental functions.

I think Mr. Jefferson, the patron saint of Democracy, shed much light upon this subject. Says Mr. Story:

much light upon this subject. Says Mr. Story:

The argument in favor of the construction which treats the clause as a qualification of the power to lay taxes has, perhaps, never been presented in a more concise or forcible shape than in an official opinion deliberately given by one of our most distinguished statesmen. "To lay taxes to provide for the general welfare of the United States is," says he (Mr. Jefferson), "to lay taxes for the purpose of providing for the general welfare. For the laying of taxes is the power and the general welfare the purpose for which the power is to be exercised. Congress are not to lay taxes ad libitum for any purpose they please, but only to pay the debts or provide for the welfare of the Union. In like manner they are not to do anything they please to provide for the general welfare, but only to lay taxes for that purpose."

In further answer to the arguments limiting the constitutional powers to those specifically mentioned, the author, in paragraph 934, among other things, states:

tional powers to those specifically mentioned, the author, in paragraph 934, among other things, states:

Every Government ought to contain within itself every power requisite to the full accomplishment of the objects committed to its care and the complete execution of the trusts for which it is responsible, free from every other control but a regard to the public good and to the security of the people.

If, therefore, the Federal Government was to be of any efficiency and a bond of union, it ought to be invested with an unqualified power of taxation for all national purposes. In the history of mankind it has ordinarily been found that in the usual progress of things the necessities of a nation in every state of its existence are at least equal to its resources. But if a more favorable state of things should exist in our own Government, still we must expect reverses and ought to provide against them. It is impossible to foresee all the various changes in the posture, relations, and power of different nations which might affect the prosperity and safety of our own. We may have formidable foreign enemies. We may have internal commotions. We may suffer from physical as well as moral calamities; from plagues, famine, and earthquakes; from political convulsions and rivalries; from the gradual decline of particular sources of industry; and from the necessity of changing our own habits and pursuits, in consequence of foreign improvements and competitions, and the variable nature of human wants and desires. A source of revenue adequate in one age may wholly or partially fail in another. Commerce or manufactures or agriculture may thrive under a tax in one age which would destroy them in another. The power of taxation, therefore, to be useful, must not only be adequate to all the exigencies of the Nation, but it must be capable of reaching from time to time all the most productive sources. It has been observed, with no less truth than point, that "in political arithmetic two and two do not always make four." Constitutio

Mr. President, the reading of this authority, though somewhat prolonged and I doubt not wearisome to the Senate, finds justification in the fact that it completely answers those who have here attempted to construe out of the Constitution the generalwelfare clause. The position of these Senators is not sound in logic and can not be supported by authority.

On the contrary, that clause is in the Constitution, and because it is in the Constitution we have the right to create these various boards to make investigations and perform their multitudinous duties. Pursuant to that power we have gone down into the State of Texas to suppress the boll weevil, the Texas tick, and various other pests that at times afflict that part of

Now, Mr. President, if we do not possess the power to pass this bill, or if Senators do not believe we possess the power, then let us have the courage of our convictions, let us be consistent, let us apply the doctrine to all existing boards which come within the same rule. If I believed we had no constitutional right to pass this bill, I would oppose it to the limit of my ability, but I would for the same reason and with equal zeal contend against the passage of an appropriation bill carrying a single dollar to the Agricultural Department, the Labor Bureau, or the other bureaus I have named.

I have no patience, sir, with that argument which suggests at we can "hang on"—I believe that was the expression that we can used—the right to appropriate money for the improvement of breeds of cattle to the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution upon the theory that some of the cattle may be shipped from one State to another. When we appropriate money to improve the breed of cattle, we do not provide that the money used shall be expended only upon such cattle as may be thereafter shipped from one State to another. We do not limit the expenditure to the particular hogs that are thereafter to cross the State line. We appropriate it for the benefit of the whole cattle and hog industry. But if we were to limit the expenditures to the particular cattle and hogs which are afterwards to cross the State line, and that kind of legislation could be sustained upon the ground that the money was used upon an animal that was to become the subject of interstate commerce, then, for the same reason, this legislation can be "hung on" the interstate-commerce provision. It is true that in one case the subject of interstate commerce is also a common subject of barter and sale, and in the other it is not. We sell cattle; we do not yet sell children. But, Mr. President, it is not essential that the thing shipped shall be the subject of barter and sale in order for it to come within the scope of the interstatecommerce provision. A human being traveling from one State to another is as much within the purview of the interstate-commerce clause as are hogs shipped from one State to the other. A hog shipped from one State to another is the subject of interstate commerce, whether it is sold or not. So, too, is a human It is the shipment, not the sale, which is determining.

You can not hang the appropriations for these other bureaus upon the interstate commerce provision. If you can, then you can just as well make that provision apply to human beings who pass from one State to another State.

I have no patience with the argument which maintains that we can appropriate money to cultivate corn, but we can not appropriate money for the purpose of improving the condition of children. I know it was stated here the other day that the argument that "we are treating cattle better than we are treating children" is old and threadbare. Mr. President, when a man is unable to answer an argument, he always has recourse to the declaration that it is old and threadbare. My experience has been that an argument which will last until it is worn threadbare, lasts because it has the strength which springs from merit. It lives long because it has the virility of truth. A false argument never gets threadbare; it is destroyed before the threadbare period is reached.

When, therefore, we declare that the Government is bestowing more care on the cattle and horses of the country than it is on the children of the land, it is no answer to reply, "You have often so declared in the past, and therefore your argument is threadbare." The point is not how often has a thing been The point is not how often has a thing been stated, but is it true. No man has dared challenge the truth of the assertion we have made. It stands unanswered and undenied.

I come now to consider another argument that has been re-peatedly advanced, viz. that "the parents of children are their natural guardians and the Government ought not to interfere in the homes of the land." Sir, if that was the purpose of this bill, if it was proposed by the bill to substitute governmental supervision for the loving care and protection of the father and mother, I would be against the bill. Every man in this body, regardless of politics, would rise to condemn the bill. But, sir, when we simply inquire into the conditions under which men live, we do not take away the independence of the citizen. We do not invade his home or assail his liberties. We allow him to continue to live as he may see fit, but we may gain and disseminate useful knowledge of which he can voluntarily avail himself.

Neither do we impinge upon the authority of the parent to control the child and educate it and nurture it and rear it as the parent chooses when we merely ask how many children are employed in factories? How many men are coining the blood of babies into money? What is the condition of the children thus employed?

The National Government has an interest in these grave questions. I dislike to put that interest upon so low a ground, but so long as the Government of the United States has the right to lay its hand upon every citizen and muster him into its Army, it has the right coincident to ascertain the conditions under which that future soldier is growing up. I do not mean that the Government has the right to impinge upon the authority of the State to control its citizens. That is something of an entirely different nature. The mere ascertainment of facts and the dissemination of useful knowledge can not by any logical mind be confused with an attempt to pass laws regulating the conduct of the citizen.

Why is this bill opposed? Why is it that men contend that our right to expend the public revenues is comprehensive enough to reach the ox in his stall but not broad enough to embrace the child in its cradle? Why is this opposition comembrace the child in its cradle? Why is this opposition coming from Senators who represent States that have cotton mills Is it because pale-faced children are trooping every morning into the sweatshops of labor? Is it because there are unspeakable conditions in those mills? Is it because men are putting the guinea stamp upon the souls of young children? Or do they really fear they are treading upon the Constitution? Yet every one of them has voted for these other bureaus time and again. They have voted to appropriate money for the improvement of cattle. They have voted money to improve the breeds of horses. They unhesitatingly vote money to publish a "horse book," which embraces every subject from the pedigrees of stallions to the proper feed for calves. But the little information that might, by means of this proposed board, be collected and sent out to the mothers of this land desperately alarms these same gentlemen. May we not rather infer that there is the fear that this board may expose the picture of little children in the very morning of their lives herded into the shadows of great mills that men may make a profit from their toil which creates consternation in these constitutional anatomies?

Mr. President, there is still another argument to be answered. It is that we are going to create a bureau here which will do some work which has already been performed. For that argument, sir, I have the profoundest respect. If it be true that this board will merely duplicate work which has already been done by an existing bureau or board, then we ought not, of course, to incur this expense. I accord to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chillon] the position in this debate of forcefulness and logic. But, sir, I believe that the Senator from West Virginia overlooks this important fact, namely, that while these facts and figures have been largely collected and are to-day in the reports of various boards and various officers and can be found by diligent and careful and prolonged search, they are not in that concrete form which will enable them to be given to the people of this country so that they can be readily grasped and easily understood.

The fact that we have these figures already widely scattered throughout these various reports only argues two things, first, the necessity of gathering them from the volumes and documents and putting them in succinct shape that the mothers and fathers and the legislators of the land can readily grasp them; second, it argues that this work can be done for a nominal sum. If we had to gather all of the information by direct investigation, if it had not already been largely accumulated, there might be some reason for the argument that this bureau would grow into very large proportions; but if the figures are here, then so much the easier is the task.

I think, Mr. President, however, that the figures at hand are not complete. Doubtless there is much information that can be collated and condensed, yet I confidently assert there remains much which can be done and which ought to be done.

Mr. President, I have no patience with another argument, that because "there was once a board and that board published 17 volumes which nobody ever read, and that board made mistakes and made blunders, therefore we should never again proceed to go along that road." That is equivalent to saying that if any department of the Government or any officer of the Government has ever made a failure we should never again attempt to do the thing he failed to do. That argument, in the last analysis, would amount to the abolition of every department of this Government, for there has not been one of them that at some time has not made a failure or botch of some piece of work. Most of us on the Democratic side think that nearly all of the Republican Presidents have been failures, and still we keep on electing Presidents and are obliged to get along the best we can with poor human beings.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We are through electing Republican Presidents.

Mr. REED. Yes; we are through electing Republican Presidents, but we will have no sooner elected a Democratic President than our Republican brethren will become convinced that he, in like manner, is a failure. And the greater his virtues the stronger will be their convictions.

The truth is that all these questions ought to be settled according to the fact and reason of the matter. While some of our departments have wasted money, while under some circumstances and in some instances the work has been poor, taken as a whole much good has resulted from departmental bureaus. I assume it to be true that if the person selected to preside over this work shall be incompetent Congress can discover it, and 12 months from now can discontinue the work.

Neither do I agree with the argument which assumes that this is simply the opening of the floodgates, and that hereafter our appropriations for this bureau will mount beyond all reason. That is a question which must be settled by each Congress as each Congress convenes and proceeds with its business. So it seems to me that no valid reason has been offered against this bill.

I say-this, Mr. President: I do not believe in multiplying bureaus and I do not believe in wasting public money. I stand as much for economy as any other Senator. But I am unwilling, Mr. President, that economy shall begin with the children of the land and end with the children of the land; that we shall expend hundreds of thousands of dollars to increase corn and wheat production, to improve the breeds of cattle and disseminate knowledge with reference to the diseases of live stock, but that we must stop short at the children of this land.

I think the main objection to the bill, from some sources at least, lies in the fact that there is a desperate condition amongst the children of the country in the factory States, and that information on that subject is what is not desired by the proprietors of those institutions.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this bill, almost word for word, passed the Senate during the preceding Congress on the 14th of February, 1911, and without objection. The objections which are now urged so strongly against the constitutionality of the bill appear not to have been considered at all by the Senate at that time. Even the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] gave his acquiescence to this bill on the 14th of February, a year ago.

I have no doubt of the constitutionality of this bill. I believe that the Federal Government has a perfect right to provide for its own self-preservation as a necessary implied power of the Constitution. I believe whatever information is necessary to be acquired by the Congress or the Senate, or by the Executive Department, in the performance of their respective duties, is fully justified. I believe that any information which is necessary to the "general welfare" or the common defense of this Nation is fully justified under section 8 of Article I. The time for debating the meaning of that section has passed. guage is as plain as the English language can be made. It says that the "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes," "to provide" for the "general welfare" as well as the "common defense." And the Congress has been providing for the "general welfare" all these years. So far has it gone with regard to such matters affecting the general welfare that we have enlarged our Federal services so that in the Bureau of Animal Industry we expended last year $1,654,750 to promote the animal industry and conserve and develop animal life. We have taken great pains to eradicate Texas fever in cattle. many men in the field now engaged in this work, clearing up one county after another in various States, pushing back the quarantine line against Texas fever of cattle from one point to another. It is now crossing southward my State of Oklahoma. Inside of State lines Federal officials under the Agriculture Department are now engaged in stamping out various diseases of cattle which would otherwise interfere with the food supply of the American people, and therefore be injurious to "the general welfare."

Congress has proceeded upon this theory ever since I was born. Even gentlemen who have declared this bill was unconstitutional, within an hour voted for a substitute for this bill by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], which contained every element of unconstitutionality of this bill, if it be unconstitutional. What do these gentlemen mean by voting for an unconstitutional provision on their several oaths, if in reality they seriously think that such measure is unconstitutional? The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] is just as open to the constitutional objection as the bill brought in by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah].

Not only has this power in the Federal Government been approved by Senate after Senate, and by Congress after Congress, and by President after President, but it has met the universal approval of the people of the United States. It is the acknowledged Constitution and the accepted law. We need not debate the Constitution any more. The time has gone to consider the question of the constitutionality of this power in the Federal Government.

We expended in the Plant Industry Bureau last year $2,680,416—for the protection of plant life—in the interest of commerce, and now we can not spend $30,000 for the protection of child life in the interest of humanity. Great is commerce! It ranks human life. I think it is of great importance to spend what is necessary to protect this country against the insects which infect our forests, against the San Jose scale which affects the orange groves of the country, and other injurious insects, but shall we spend that money freely as "constitutional" and at the same time be unwilling to expend a dollar for the conservation of the child life of this Republic as "unconstitutional"?

Four hundred thousand children die every year in this country under the age of 12 months, and one-half of them, a vast army of 200,000 little children, lift up their tender voices to this Republic asking for protection from preventable diseases; and we spend $2,674,000 to protect our forests from insects and refuse to spend $29,000 for the conservation of the child life of this Republic.

Child labor is useful in coining money in sweatshop and in mines and in dangerous and unhealthy service, and greedy employers must not be interfered with, even by public opinion based on well-ascertained facts collated by a child's bureau. Great is commerce! It has more power than humane considerations.

When we have had this country assailed by bubonic plague, has any man questioned the right of Congress to protect human life by appropriations and services employed for that end? Did we not spend a million on the Pacific coast for stamping out the bubonic plague for the protection of human life, for the "general welfare"? But we may not spend a pitiful $30,000 to establish a bureau of inquiry as to the best methods to protect child life.

During the last season I sent 25,000 bulletins on how to take care of hogs into Oklahoma; not a bulletin on how to take care of children. We see such a man as Straus, in New York, spending his own private funds for the purpose of furnishing pasteurized milk and teaching the people of New York how they can conserve child life. In that one simple instance thousands of lives of little children were saved, and yet hundreds of thousands of mothers know nothing about pasteurized milk or how to take care of an infant, and may not have the bulletins of a child's bureau when they anxiously seek advice having authority because it is "unconstitutional" to have a child's bureau.

This "unconstitutional" bureau for protecting child life by gathering and distributing knowledge might interfere with sweatshops and factories where the labor of children is coined into money, and such interests will oppose this bill and urge on representatives the objection of unconstitutionality while concealing the real reason.

In the Bureau of Chemistry we spend $965,780, and in the Bureau of Entomology we spend $601,920, a bureau particularly devoted to the study of insects and bugs, and not a dollar is expended for the proper study of child life.

I agree that it is of importance to study the habits of the boll weevil, and it is for the "general welfare" to protect this country against the ravages of that insect so deadly to our great cotton crop. This study has very great commercial importance, because it will enable us perhaps to destroy the life of this pest. But I believe also that we have a right to study child life and give publicity, and the widest publicity, knowledge of how to protect child life. It is a great national asset. It has great commercial importance, if I must put it upon that low plane. Every human being has a certain commercial value, and is worth so many hundreds or so many thousands of dollars. He has a certain productive value if a slave and a greater value if a freeman. Let us take steps to preserve the lives of human beings as a commercial asset and as a matter of prudent national business. The acquisition of knowledge on this subject and its wide distribution is the cheapest way to accomplish this end.

If this Nation is to be controlled by commerce alone, if it is to disregard human life and consider nothing but commerce and the vulgar sordid dollar, let us consider the commercial value of 200,000 children annually whose lives we might save. Are they worth $500 apiece? Then they have a commercial value of $100,000,000 and this bill is justified as a means to saving the vast sum invested in infants under 1 year of age. I waive all sentiments of humanity, the grief and anguish of unlearned mothers and fathers unnecessarily bereaved of their little children.

Mr. President, as a matter of policy, this question has been considered not only by learned men in this Republic but by the learned legislators of the great nations of the world abroad. The German Empire has a complete method for considering and investigating the conditions of child life with a view to preserving child life, and that wonderful nation, because of its interest in the preservation of human life, is growing by giant strides to be the master nation of Europe. Its great sons have been a most tremendous asset to this Republic. They do not believe in race suicide. They raise large families and love children and care for them.

The German Empire has set us an example, and the British Empire has set us an example in their recent "child's act providing for the study of the conditions of child life. Why shall we hang behind the march of the civilized world and lose sight of the welfare of the little children of the greatest people on earth?

If it is competent authority we want, we have had those who are expert in this question give the most careful considera-tion to this question. This bill has been recommended by the National Child Labor Committee, the National Federation of Women's Clubs, the Conference on Dependent Children, consisting of 200 men and women, the most learned in the world with regard to this particular subject.

Among these distinguished Americans I call your attention to a few, for instance:

His eminence Cardinal Gibbons; Mr. John M. Glenn, director of the Russell Sage foundation, New York City; Dr. S. M. Lindsay, director of the New York School of Philanthropy; Miss Jane Addams, Hull House, Chicago; Miss Lillian D. Wald, of the Henry Street Settlement, New York; Mrs. Florwer, Mrs. ence Kelley, secretary of the National Consumers' League; Mr. Thomas Nelson Page, author and publicist; Mr. Owen B. Lovejoy, secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, and Mr. A. J. McKelway, southern secretary of the National Child Labor Committee; Mr. J. Prentice Murphy, of the Children's Bureau of Philadelphia; Mr. Homer Folks, secretary of the State Charities Aid Association, New York; Hon. Julian W. Mack, of the Court of Commerce; Mr. Hugh F. Fox, president of the Children's Protective Alliance, New Jersey; Dr. Ludwig B. Bernstein, superintendent of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, New York City; Judge Ben B. Lindsey, judge of the juvenile court of Denver; Judge N. B. Feagin, of the juvenile court of Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. Lucy Syckles, superintendent Michigan State Home for Girls; Mr. J. W. Magruder, secretary of the Baltimore Charities Association; Mr. Hastings H. Hart and L. F. Hamner, of the Russell Sage Foundation; Mr. Miles M. Dawson, of the American Association of Labor Legislation; Mr. H. Wirt Steele, executive secretary of the American Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis; Miss Mary Wood, representing the Daughters of the American Revolution; Mr. Bernard Flexner, authority on juvenile court legislation, Louisville, Ky.

Mr. President, the argument has been made that this will cause a duplication of work. That has been most abundantly answered. It was answered a year ago by the head of the Census, Director North. He stated that there will be no duplication in his department; that they were not concerned in the questions which would be investigated by such a bureau as this. Commissioner Neill, of the Bureau of Labor, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, most emphatically said that he thought this bureau ought to be established; and Commissioner Brown, of the Bureau of Education of the Interior Department, the very department where we were proposing by an amendment to send this proposed bureau, also gave his testimony that the child's bureau should be established, and that it will not duplicate his work. These departments, which are said to be concerned in this matter, have already testified in favor of this measure, and the report will be found in the RECORD of February 14, 1911.

So the objections have all been answered. The constitutionality is beyond doubt. The importance of the policy I can not think will be disputed by any humane man. No far-seeing statesman should deny that the preservation of human life and the conservation of the little children of this Nation is one of the most important subjects which can engage the consideration of the Senate.

Let us establish this bureau, and send out bulletins giving reliable information to anxious mothers and fathers, to State authorities, and to all who seek it, so that the knowledge of child preservation shall become the common property of the people of the Republic.

Let us gather the facts and show when and where children are unfairly exposed so that public opinion may protect them.

Let us have publicity so that we may protect the innocent and precious young life of the Nation.

Let our people have the facts and they will verify the words of the Book of Books, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is detained from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. PAGE. My colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is unavoidably detained on business of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My colleague [Mr. Jones] is unavoidably detained on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] having charge of the bill, if he will be kind enough to look at line 9, on page 1, where it reads:

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters.

What has the Senator in mind as to whom this bureau shall report?

Mr. BORAH. I suppose to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then would the Senator have any objection to having the words inserted "to such department"?

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, again, would the Senator have any objection, at the close of section 2, to insert the words I will suggest? I will first read the sentence as it stands:

The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

Would the Senator object to adding the words "in such manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor"?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have no objection to that. Mr. GALLINGER. Then, Mr. President, I move those amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will offer my amendments when the pending amendment is disposed of. The Senator's amendment, however, is a substitute. Would we not have the right to perfect the bill before the substitute is voted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The right to perfect the bill has precedence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I offer the two amendments which I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 2, on page 1, line 10, after the word "report," it is proposed to insert the words "to said department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. It is further proposed, in section 2, on page 2, at the end of line 8, after the word "investigations," to strike out the period and to insert "in such manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the noes The noes have it, and the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, do I understand that the bill is now in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been in the Senate for some time, and is still in the Senate. Mr. THORNTON. Then, Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

Mr. THORNTON. I ask that the amendment be read, and then I shall ask permission to make a few brief remarks in connection with it.

The Secretary. In section 2, on page 2, line 7, after the word "children," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as attempting to authorize the bureau created by it to enter into or remain in any premises in any State without the consent of the owner or occupant thereof.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, on last Thursday, when this bill came up for discussion, I very briefly outlined my opposition to it, basing it upon two grounds: First, that I was opposed to the grant of ever-increasing power to the Federal Government in matters which I thought more properly pertained to the powers of the different States of this Union; and, second, because, under the language of this bill authorizing and instructing the bureau to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, authority was given to permit employees of the bureau to invade the private homes of citizens of this country and to ask just such questions and as many of them as were dictated by the judgment or the inclination of the official. I object to any official having the right to enter my home and to pry into my domestic matters. The object of my amendment is to prevent

I do not say that even if the amendment were adopted the bill would meet with my approval, for it does not; but it would certainly remove a very objectionable and very dangerous feature, in my opinion, of the bill, and indeed it would remove the possibility of what I suggested last Thursday, that the head of a house might be compelled, in order to maintain his own self-respect, to violate the law by forcibly ejecting an agent of this bureau out of his house. However some Senators may be willing to run the risk of having their homes entered by such an official and having such questions asked of them by the official as in his judgment pertains to the welfare of children and of child life, I am not willing, and I sincerely hope that the Senate will not force such a condition upon those who are unwilling. I may add that, law or no law, it is not going to be done in my house. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the ayes

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I call for a division.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon the amend-

The yeas and nays were ordered. -

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the roll is called I desire to say that, of course, the adoption of this amendment would make it impossible for the officials of the department to go into some of the manufacturing establishments and other places where they ought to go, and where it will be necessary for them to go. Such an amendment is, in effect, an invitation for these places to close their doors.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Idaho will attend closely,

I think he will find that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana reads that the officials shall not be permitted to enter over the objection of the head of the house.

Mr. THORNTON. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. May I see the amendment, Mr. President? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment to the Senate.

The Secretary. In section 2, on page 2, line 7, after the word "children," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as attempting to authorize the bureau created by it to enter into or remain in any premises in any State without the consent of the owner or occupant

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I wish to modify— The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. THORNTON. I should like to modify my amendment further by inserting the word "private" before "premises." That is really what was in my mind when I drew the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification as requested will be made. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to hold the floor?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say that that modification proposed by the Senator from Louisiana does not wholly remedy the defect. The bill would be very much weakened, it seems to me. As I have said, it invites parties to shut off investigation.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Louisiana means "residence."

Mr. OVERMAN. "Private homes."

Mr. THORNTON. Then, I will say "private dwelling" to comply with the request of Senators who favor the amendment That was my idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Louisiana modifies his amendment further by changing the word "premises" to "private dwelling."

Mr. THORNTON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will make the modification and then read the amendment as modified.

The Secretary. In section 2, on page 1, line 7, after the word children," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided. That this act shall not be construed as attempting to authorize the bureau created by it to enter into or remain in any private dwelling in any State without the consent of the owner or occupant thereof.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make an inquiry as to whether the words "and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children" were not stricken out?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana ought to come in after the word "Territories," in

The PRESIDING OFFICER That is correct. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say that while the proposed amendment now is not so bad as at first, nevertheless it renders less effective the measure, and it would be very unfortunate for the bill if it were adopted.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fact that I think the word "owner" should be stricken out of the amendment, as it may lead to confusion. The object of the amendment is to protect the household itself, and the word "occupant" is sufficient. The word "owner" might lead to confusion.

Mr. THORNTON. "Owner or occupant." The owner might not be there

Mr. CLAPP. The owner might object, although the occupant might not object.

Mr. THORNTON. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I suggest that the words "owner or" be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified by striking out the words "owner or," and the Secretary will again read the amendment as modified.

The Secretary. In section 2, on page 2, line 6, after the word "Territories," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as attempting to authorize the bureau created by it to enter into or remain in any private dwelling in any State without the consent of the occupant thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

So Mr. Thornton's amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think this is a fit occasion to say a word to emphasize the significance of the vote just taken. By this vote the American Senate either authorizes in a negative way or approves the notion that the home of a citizen may be invaded at pleasure by an official operating under the provisions of this proposed law. The home ceases to be the castle of the citizen. A $900 clerk, "drest in a little brief authority," inflated with self-importance, and puffed with impertinence, can knock at the door of an American and demand admission, and, if denied, can force his way in. I presume he would almost have warrant to kick open the door, and assemble the family vi et armis around the hearthstone to propound such questions as he might think important and within the range of his authority.

Mr. President, this is one of the most dangerous things, the most unregardful of the rights of American citizens that I have known to be done or attempted in any legislative body, and I can not but express my profound astonishment that it has the sanction of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

After the word "Territories," in line 6, The SECRETARY. page 2, it is proposed to insert:

But no official or agent or representative of said bureau shall, over the objection of the head of the family, enter any private family resi-dence under this act.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in justification of the vote which I cast I desire to say that I was actuated by a consideration for the comfort of the household. It would be intolerable, in my judgment, that the agent should stand at the front gate and summon the family out into the front yard in order to ask these questions. I thought it was better for the health of this officer as well as for the health of the family that he be permitted to enter the household. Of course, I am opposed to the whole proposition; but if we are going to enter upon this matter, make it just as obnoxious as possible and it will then receive early consideration at the hands of the Senate in its sober second thought.

So Mr. Culberson's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we have now placed the stamp of disapproval on Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which it might be well to call to the attention of the Senate. It says:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, ad effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be

Mr. GALLINGER. To determine whether it is diseased or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. To see whether the child meets the approval of this clerk; to see whether he is well fed and well clothed.

The wisest men and the wisest bodies of men sometimes go far astray. In voting down a proposition of this kind, which was nothing more or less than an assertion of that principle, the Senate seems to have forgotten that there is a Constitution of the United States. If there was no Constitution the sentiment expressed by the opposition to this amendment would be a violation of human rights, and the Constitution is merely an expression of the rights of a human being under a self-governing system of government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think we would add anything to the strength of a constitutional right by repeating it in a statute?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. I was merely expressing my senti-ment in regard to the vote. If the Constitution should be amended according to the sentiments which have prevailed here to-day, the people would amend it fast enough or abolish it.

Mr. President, I voted against the first amendment more as a matter of satisfying curiosity than anything else. I was curious to know whether or not that principle which has always been recognized, of the sanctity of the home and the responsibility of the parent, would be so lightly voted away.

Just think how intolerable it would be, in the midst of a great social function, with the family assembled in the drawingroom or around the dinner table, dressed for the banquet or the fête, to have an officer come in and say, "Produce the child; I want to see it." [Laughter.] A $900 clerk, it is suggested. He would come in, and those people, who have all they can do to struggle against the adversity of fate, would be required to stop on an occasion of this sort and produce for the inspection of the officer the child or even the adult, as to whether or not they are clothed and dressed within the bounds of reason, as an example to their children which should govern them in establishing their ideas as to what is right and what is wrong.

Just think of inquiring on such an occasion whether this child was subjected to the example of festivity and its incidents, liable, through such an example, to be led into dissipation in later life and become a charge upon the Public Treasury

These thoughts rise involuntarily in one's mind, and one is shocked and appalled. Of course the agent would knock on the door of the ordinary citizen, and he would be met at the door by the proprietor or some of the family, and the agent can get at them readily and push past them and inspect them. But when the agent comes to the statelier mansions, he will ring the bell and run the gantlet of the servants, and be told the folks are not at home or are engaged and can not be disturbed, and notwithstanding this brutal officer will rush in and require an inspection.

We are going astray in this matter. We are forgetting there is such a thing as individual right. We are forgetting there is such a thing as the right of a home and the things pertaining to the home. We forget that it is from the very class-I use that word in no invidious sense, but merely to distinguish one class from another-that is being held up as requiring rigid governmental inspection that four-fifths of the men and women of worth in this country come.

Such legislation as this, as I said on a former occasion, would have taken a man like Abraham Lincoln from the custody of his parents, because they lived on the earth floor in the log cabin, surrounded by what would be termed, in the poetic language of the reports of the officer, squalor and poverty and misery, and yet with all the inate ambition which animates the great man, lying on his face on the floor, studying and developing character and mind by the firelight of the log in the fireplace.

The best men and the best women in the world have come from humble surroundings. There is something about such a life that seems to develop character between lines of safety as distinguished from those conditions that surround the child with luxury and laziness, resulting in proficiency in the con-sumption of cigarettes and other things.

Mr. President, I still have hope that the last thought upon this measure will develop the fact that some wisdom has been gained by the protracted consideration of this question, and that the whole measure will be defeated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted in the same place at which the other was offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 6, after the words "States and Territories," insert:

Both no official or agent or representative of said bureau shall, over the objection of the head of the family, enter any house used exclusively as a family residence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. THORNTON. The yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if Congress has the power to pass this bill, and to collect this information, then it has the power to employ any means necessary to its collection, and the officers appointed under it can enter the homes of these people, unless some amendment like this is made a part of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to dissent from the view expressed by the distinguished Senator from Texas, as well as against the view expressed by the Senator from Idaho. I have voted constantly against this amendment on the theory that there is not a word or line in the bill which authorizes the invasion of any man's home.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I had intended from the beginning to vote for this bill, but when these amendments offered by the Senator from Texas drew out the expression that it is, at least, in doubt whether the officers created under this bill shall have the right to invade the homes of the citizens in enforcing the terms of this bill. I determined that unless some such safeguard as these amendments propose can be thrown around it I shall vote against the bill in toto. I was under the impression that the purpose of this bill was to take this service out of the several departments where the same work is now fractionally done and concentrate it into one bureau; and that these officers, benefiting by the experience that has been given by the Senator from North Carolina, would collect and collate from whatever source available the information necessary for the proper conduct of this work and for the benefit of the people without ruthlessly entering the homes to obtain this information.

But it is a different question if it is to assume an inquisitorial form. I want to say right here that there is not a man on this floor who does not know that the most sensitive of all the citizens of our country are the very poorest. The man whom adverse circumstances has brought to a condition of poverty-circumstances over which he perhaps has no controlshrinks from having his home invaded and its condition exploited before the public.

Surely the agents proposed in this bill could find facilities for gathering all the necessary information that this bill proposes shall be gathered without this obnoxious warrant. There are doctors who go about in the country and towns who are familiar with the conditions; and they could give the facts without exposing the citizen to the inquisitorial service of these officers. And I hope sincerely that the framers of the bill and the advocates of the bill will allow us who are in earnest also about this matter to have this amendment gotten in the best available form, and not put us in the attitude of acquiescing in outraging the sanctity of the home or forcing us to vote against the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do. Mr. SUTHERLAND. What provision does the Senator find in this bill that would authorize any officer to enter the home of a citizen against the objection of the citizen?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What is the objection, then, to putting it in the bill specifically that the officer shall not?
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because it is to my mind a perfectly useless thing to do; a wholly unnecessary thing to do. If we are to write that language into this law, then we ought to write it into every law which authorizes any officer or agent of the Government to gather information, because the information must be gathered from persons, and if it is necessary to negative in this law the right of an officer to go into a home against the protest of the owner or the occupant, it would be necessary to do it in every law. I undertake to say there is not a line in this bill which would in any manner authorize any official or agent to enter the home of a citizen against his protest.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If that be true, there can be no objection to emphasizing the intent not to do it. But by parity of reasoning, if Congress passes an act for a specific purpose, then the officers acting under that act, without specific prohibition, could use all the means in their power to carry out the terms of the act; and when they go to the home of a citizen, the act does not prohibit them from entering it, but it demands that they get the information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If any officer attempts, not under the express warrant of the law, to enter the home of the citizen, he would be committing a trespass, would be not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Constitution says the citizen shall be protected against unreasonable searches and seizures. You have made it a reasonable one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not talking of the Constitution. I say unless there is an express warrant of law for the officer to enter the home of the citizen, if the officer enters it against the protest of the citizen he commits a trespass. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will not the Senator admit that the mere passage of this bill requiring certain officials to do certain things is in itself a warrant to do that thing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. This does not authorize the official to enter the home with the consent-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In a moment. This bill simply authorize the agents to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children, and so on. It does not authorize them to go into any person's home or anywhere else.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Senator from Idaho having charge of the bill said if the amendment was adopted it would destroy the very purpose of the bill, showing that it is contemplated that these officers shall enter private residences if necessary

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Idaho was not talking about the amendment now under consideration, as I recall. He was talking about the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana

Mr. CULBERSON. The purpose of the amendments is the

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the intent of the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, as well as of the several amendments offered by the Senator from Texas, though the phraseology was somewhat different, was the same. All Senators understood that it was the same. It was to guard against any official entering the privacy of a home to make investigations over the protest of the owner or occupant of that home. And the Senator from Idaho said that if it passed it would emasculate the bill, that it would destroy the very purpose of the bill.

I should like to say further that I recognize, as do other Senators here recognize, that new conditions have arisen. Facilities for communications and transportation have become so perfect that, though we have our first allegiance and love to our State, we have become cosmopolitan. Diseases may be spread with infinitely more ease now than they were 50 years ago, and I recognize that there is a disease more terrible than the physical one. If my neighbor's children take smallpox or some contagious disease I insist that the yellow flag shall be put up and they shall be quarantined, but I have no possible way of guarding against immoral infection. And it is largely to the solution of this problem that this applies.

There is in my own city to-day a reformatory school, the first in the history of the State. It is alleged that evil tendencies among boys are being multiplied largely by certain conditions growing out of modern life. Thousands of occupations under modern conditions, taking fathers away almost continually from their families, are forcing the State to grapple with the problem of supplying this lack of paternal rule and control of the home. I was favorable to the bill on the broad ground that from every State in the Union there would be gathered the thoughts and experiences of the earnest, honest men who were attempting to solve the problem of how best to serve the young, the children, of this country-not with the intent of going into States to legislate, but simply to give advise as do other bureaus in reference to our material and financial welfare. I was perfectly willing to vote for the bill; but I hereby enter my protest now that I shall not vote for the bill which, by an expression of the author of it and by the implication of the vote on the amendments, gives any man the power to enter the sacred domain of the home of the highest or the lowest and search there for facts to spread before the public without knowing the causes that brought about the conditions which he finds there.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I could find in this bill any intimation of authority for the agent of the Government to enter the home over the protest or without the consent, if it was made known, of the occupant, I certainly would be in favor of amending it. I do not believe that there is an intimation of that kind in the bill. I do not believe, furthermore, that a man could enter the home of a resident of a State without his consent under this bill. I do not know how he would do it. I know that he would have ample and absolute protection under the laws of the State which this statute could not override, if it in specific terms undertook to do so.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask— Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield, and to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, as he had the floor first, and then I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator, then, what he meant by what he said some time ago, I think while the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] was pending, and which in substance and effect is identical with the one now pending, that if it should be adopted it would practically destroy the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is quite possible-and I will be frank with the Senate in this matter-that my language was too broad, but the idea which I had in mind was that if we put in the bill the limitation, it would invite the parties to shut out the agent and he would have no power to invoke any State authority whatever; that he would be limited and prescribed by this act.

But there was another proposition in the first amendment. It was that if the mere consent of the party was not obtained that foreclosed the action of the agent entirely with reference to manufacturing establishments and other places, which is an entirely different proposition from the one which is presented now.

Now, so far as I am concerned, as I stated, if I thought there was any authority whatever for entering the house without the consent of the owner or occupant I would agree to the adoption of this amendment.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I was simply going to ask the Senator this question: The Senator said the householder would have the protection of the law, if he invoked it. There is a difference of opinion upon the subject as to whether or not this bill would carry such authority, as is evidenced by the amendments which have been offered. Is it not better, in view of what the Senator himself says is the intent, that the law shall instruct those who are charged with this responsibility as to what they have a right to do and what they have not a right to do, rather than to leave it a matter of expense and annoyance, or legal proceedings to settle that question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. Foster's name was called). wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER], with the statement that if he were here he would certainly vote "yea." My colleague is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy] and the transfer of that pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Smrth]. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], but the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] having transferred his pair to that Senator, I consider myself at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). With the explanation already given, I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

So Mr. Culberson's amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the passage of the bill I wish to make a single observation. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] closed his speech to-day with a remark that the probabilities were that the opposition to this bill came from the so-called manufacturing States, where they did not want legislation of this kind. I chance in part to represent a manufacturing State, and I want to say to Senators in all sincerity that I have not received a communication from any manufacturing concern or any official employed in any manufacturing concern in either my State or any other of the New England States. So that my vote has not been influenced because of that consideration.

One other remark, Mr. President. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] in his earnestness observed that while we were willing to pay large sums of money for investigations of almost every conceivable kind we were unwilling to vote a pittance of $29,000 to inquire into the social conditions of the women and children of the United States.

Mr. President, that is not quite fair, and I am unwilling to let it go to the country, so far as my vote is concerned, that I am controlled by any such motive or consideration as that. The fact is that a great department of this Government, engaged in investigating substantially the same questions, has at its disposal $300,000, more or less. That department has not concluded its work. The literature that it has sent to us is part of the literature that is to come from that department, and I apprehend, inasmuch as we recently voted an additional appropriation to the Bureau of Labor, it is for the continuation of the work that bureau is engaged in.

Mr. President, I think we can afford to wait until that great department and that bureau, in which we all have confidence, has completed its investigation. If it then appears that the work has not been well done or that further investigation is necessary, it will be time to establish an additional bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Those are the considerations that govern my action in this matter, Mr. President, and I am quite unwilling that I should be misrepresented by any Senator as to the attitude I have taken on this question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed]. As I have the good fortune to represent a State that has a good many cotton mills in it, I want to say that I have not had a letter from any cotton-mill man or anybody else against this bill, but all for it; and the Senator ought not to have made a statement like that unless he had some proof of it.

My ground was based upon the evidence that was taken not in the cotton-mill section, but in the mountain section, as I stated, and the Senator heard me make that statement. am sure he was not referring to me. I repeat that no man has ever written to me to oppose this bill, but I have many letters from my State asking me to support it. But I am satisfied they did not understand the measure as I understand it.

I base my opposition because of the enormous amount that I believe it would take, and, in addition to that, it is the creation of a new bureau. I believe that all the evidence that is desired and is provided for in the bill is gathered by a different department. I do not think the Senator ought to go and make such a statement as that. Why does he make it? Does it do his case any good to make such a statement?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I made no specific reference to any Senators, and I do not know just why the Senators apply my remarks specifically to themselves. I did say in substance that it appeared that this opposition came from States—I may have used the words from Senators from States-in which there were manufacturing industries. I do recall that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] complained bitterly about some previous report. I do not mean to ascribe to these Senators any evil purpose or motive. I do not think my words can be so construed.

But, Mr. President, what I meant to say, and what I now say with emphasis, is that there is, in my judgment, not a single great manufacturing institution in the United States in which children of tender years are employed that will not be found to have been in opposition to this bill and in opposition to it to-day. I exculpate both the Senators from any evil purpose or motive, and I did not intend that they should take my remarks in a personal light.

Mr. GALLINGER. For myself, Mr. President, I will say that I did not take it as a personal reference, but I felt that I had a duty to perform in stating exactly what had occurred in so far as one manufacturing State of the Union is concerned.

Mr. President, the fact is that under the investigation that is now going on by the Department of Commerce and Labor, through the Bureau of Labor, the agents have been in the State of New Hampshire and have been shown every possible consideration, and they have had full access to the manufacturing establishments of that State. I am very much gratified to know from reading the reports that they have not found the terrible conditions existing there that some of our good people in this country have advertised to the world as existing in the manufacturing States of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would be glad if the Senator from Missouri would read those reports that relate to the cotton mills of North Carolina. I am willing for him to see what those agents I have been criticizing have said about the mills of my State. I do not think even the Senator from Missouri would then complain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], who is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on the business of the Senate. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). As I have heretofore announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Were he present, I should vote " yea."

Mr. PAGE (when Mr. DILLINGHAM's name was called). wish to again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. Du-LINGHAM], who is away on official business. He is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. KERN's name was called). I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. Kern], who is detained elsewhere on business of the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TAYLOR (when Mr. Lea's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Lea] is absent on the business of the Senate. He requested me to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy] to the senior Senator from Mississippi I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I make the same announcement with reference to my right to vote that I have heretofore made. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent from the city, is paired in favor of the bill with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Under the statement already made of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston], I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again anhounce my standing pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Foster], and I wish to announce that I shall stand paired with that Senator for the day upon any votes which

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has entered a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report it back within 20 days.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have consulted a number of Senators, and I am informed that it will probably not be necessary to fix any time when the bill shall be reported. I there-

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 31, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, for Thy wonderful patience and tender mercies. Love waits upon us all. What we might have been we may always become through faith, penitence, and perseverance. Kindle, we beseech Thee, within our hearts the sacred flame and grant that it may burn brighter and brighter until we shall have reached the coveted goal, the perfected manhood. In Jesus Christ our Lord.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY. The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill (S. 3024) to provide for the con- Page, in the chair.

struction, alteration, and repair of the bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts. Under the order made by the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

ADAMSON] is entitled to two hours.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary had not exhausted its call.

The SPEAKER. This arrangement was made, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Alabama, by special order. Mr. MANN. You will not lose your right.

The SPEAKER. And that was the way the Judiciary Committee was reached.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was not present when the special order arose.

The SPEAKER. The special order was that this bridge bill should be the unfinished business, and that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] should have two hours and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] one hour.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. That will give the Committee on the Judiciary the call on next Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. I think it will give the Judiciary Committee the call as soon as we get through with this bill. The call rests on the Judiciary Committee, the Chair will state.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the Committee on the Judiciary had the call, and that if this bill, the Weymouth Back River bill, were taken up to-day and disposed of, then the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce could not call up any more bills until the call had gone around again; and inasmuch as we had a good many uncontested bills, the consideration of which would not consume much time, I really preferred, if the House desired, that the Committee on the Judiciary should go ahead and let the call get around, so that when we take up our business again we can transact what business we have.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refresh the memory of the gentleman by reading from page 1267 of the Record. After the colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Tennessee and various other gentlemen, the Speaker stated the matter this way-

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the Speaker go back of that passage a little and read my proposition, and then read what the Speaker stated?

The SPEAKER. The way the Speaker stated it was what the House agreed to. Here is the way it was stated:

The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that this bill-That is, this bridge bill-which is the unfinished business to-day, go over until next Calendar Wednesday, and be then the unfinished business, and coupled with that that general debate on the bill next Wednesday, or whenever it comes up, shall be limited to three hours—two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, permit me one moment. I would like to read the proposition as I made it, just preceding

Then, Mr. Speaker, I couple with my request, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, the condition that when we resume consideration of this bill on next Wednesday, or at any future time when it is resumed on the call, general debate be limited to three hours.

Then the Speaker, after making the statement that the proposition is that it go over until next Wednesday, stated:

And be then the unfinished business, and coupled with that that general debate on the bill next Wednesday, or whenever it comes up—

Referring, evidently, to the language of my statement.

The SPEAKER. The reason the Chair put that clause in was that the House by a two-thirds vote can dispense with Calendar Wednesday entirely, and if it were dispensed with to-day then this Massachusetts bridge bill would be the unfinished business next Wednesday.

Mr. ADAMSON. It was only as a matter of expediency that I suggested to the House, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on the Judiciary should go on, and that it would be fair to everybody that the call should go on around, and then, when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should be reached, it would not be shut out with the finishing of the one bill, but would have the day, or two days if necessary, to complete unfinished busines

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent to do anything he chooses.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] demands the regular order. The regular order is that the House automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-tion of this bill, with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BRIDGE ACROSS WEYMOUTH BACK RIVER, MASS.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3024, with Mr. Page in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 3024. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3024) to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and pair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of repair of a br Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, under the order previously adopted, the debate is limited to three hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of the Constitution, Congress has the power of control over navigable streams so far as the interests of navigation are affected. It was only in recent years that Congress provided that obstruc-tions to navigation in or over navigable streams should not be made without the consent of Congress. At the time this bridge was built, 100 years ago, the local authorities had the right to build the bridge, even though it had entirely obstructed the navigation of the stream, subject to the superior right of Congress at any time to require that obstruction to be removed.

Probably the most noticeable and notable example of the exercise by Congress of its power was the case of the Chicago River tunnels, where the city of Chicago had constructed under the river tunnels which at the time of their construction did not at all interfere with navigation, which were constructed by the city under the authority of the State Legislature of Illinois. Subsequently Congress exercised its superior right and declared those tunnels to be obstructions to navigation, and ordered their removal, which was done at the expense of the local people of

It is undoubtedly the general rule that where a bridge has been constructed across a navigable stream by the local authorities, under the right of law of the local authorities, it still is within the power of Congress, where Congress has not given its assent to the construction of such obstruction, to order the removal of the obstruction under the authority granted in the Constitution that Congress shall control in commerce. So that in this case there is no doubt whatever of the power of Congress, which power is delegated to the Secretary of War, to order the removal of this Weymouth Bridge as an obstruction to navigation. It is quite certain that as a general proposition, where Congress orders the removal of a bridge because it obstructs navigation, that bridge having at the time of its construction been legally authorized by the local authorities, it is still undoubtedly the rule that Congress is not required to pay damages which may accrue by reason of the removal of the obstruction to navigation. In other words, wherever local authorities have constructed obstructions to navigation in a stream they have done so at their own peril, subject to the power of Congress at any time to order the removal of the obstruction if it proves to be an obstruction to navigation. There are many bridges throughout the United States over navigable streams which have been constructed by local municipalities, by railroads, or by bridge corporations, under local authority, without having obtained the authority from Congress, because that has only been required in the last 20 years, which bridges are ordered from time to time to be removed or reconstructed. In my own district a railroad bridge, constructed many years ago by State authority, has been ordered by the Secretary of War to be removed or a new bridge to be constructed, because that bridge has become an obstruction to navigation. There is no liability on the part of the General Government for exercising its superior authority, and the only question involved in this case is whether there are such special equities as would justify Congress in paying some portion of the damages which are caused by the removal of the obstruction to navigation. I think everyone will concede that cases might arise where it would be inequitable for Congress to order a local bridge removed, without participating in the cost of the construction of a new bridge. Take a case where a bridge had been constructed across a river by the local authorities, where for some purpose or other the Government of the United States had acquired possession of practically all the land in the territory which had originally paid for the construction of the bridge, and it, being declared an obstruction to navigation, was ordered to be removed. A case is easily imagined where the local authorities would be quite without the ability, under the power of taxation, to provide money enough to reconstruct the bridge. That was the case at Moline, which has already been cited, where, because of the construction of the Hennepin Canal, a bridge was ordered to be removed which had been constructed across Rock River by the city of Moline. The Federal authorities ordered the removal of the bridge because of circumstances arising long after its construction. It would be an onerous hardship on the city of Moline to require it to rebuild this bridge outside of the boundaries of the city, which bridge was mainly for the convenience of the farmers at a distance.

A case might arise in any portion of the United States in connection with encampment grounds. Suppose Congress should purchase maneuver grounds of 30,000, 40,000, or 50,000 acres and should order the removal of a bridge which was an obstruction to navigation. The local authorities might be without the power, so far as actually raising money is concerned, to provide the means of reconstructing the bridge ordered to be removed for the convenience of the national authorities.

Now, it seems to me this case brings itself within equitable considerations which demand that Congress should pay a portion of the cost of a new bridge. Here is a bridge across a navigable water, but navigable only a short distance above the bridge. The bridge is amply convenient for the local necessities, and there is no probability that it would ever need to be removed for the convenience of navigation if the Government of the United States had not purchased the property above it for magazine purposes. No one else wants to use the stream for navigation except the Government. No one else except the Government has any reason for removing the bridge.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has any order been made prohibiting the navigation of this stream by individuals?

Mr. MANN. No such order could be made.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Have any steps been taken to prohibit the use of the river above the bridge by the citizens of the country?

Mr. MANN. No order could be made to prevent anyone navigating this water above the bridge; but no person could land, because the land is all owned by the Government of the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Suppose a private corporation had purchased the land on both sides of the river above the bridge and constructed large industries and required the use of the river for the purpose of commerce, would not such an institution have the right to navigate the river for industrial purposes under conditions

Mr. MANN. If my friend from Indiana will have patience I will try and answer that question. Now, this bridge is ordered to be removed purely for the convenience of the Government. While theoretically this water is open to the navigation of the world, as a matter of fact no one else can navigate it to any purpose, because no one can go above the bridge and land.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not until I have finished this statement. Being directed to be removed purely for the convenience of the Government, the question arises whether it is a hardship on the local authorities to require them to remove a bridge wholly suitable to their needs because the Government wants it reconstructed, or whether the Government ought to contribute toward that expense.

If this were a matter in the city of Chicago, I would say that the Government was under no obligation to pay any portion of this expense, because a large municipality ought to be able to meet those expenses. But here is a proposition to require an expensive bridge to be paid for purely by the local authorities and purely for the benefit of the General Government.

Now, it is true that this request might have come from the demands of other people who might have acquired this property. Some large manufacturing establishment might have located on the ground now occupied by this naval magazine. Some shipping community might have acquired the land; warehouses might have been constructed there, and in such case, undoubtedly, it would have been the duty of the Secretary of War to have required the removal of the obstruction to navigation. But it must be perfectly patent to us all that there is no great difference, so far as the local taxation is concerned and the raising of the money from the local people is concerned, between requiring that to be done for the benefit of the General Government, which pays no taxes, and doing it where it is done for the benefit of the local community, which pays a large amount

If this property had been devoted to commercial uses, shipping uses, warehouse uses, it would have contributed not only to the payment of taxes for the construction of the bridge but would have contributed to the payment of the ordinary taxes for the management of the municipalities themselves.

[The time of Mr. Mann having expired, he was yielded five minutes more by the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Adamson.]

These communities are not wealthy communities. The State of Massachusetts has recognized the fact that it would be unfair to the communities to require them to pay the total expense, and the State proposes to pay a portion of the expense. The State of Massachusetts is under no greater obligation to these local communities than we are. The State proposes that these local communities, not having the power fairly to raise by taxation the large amount necessary for the construction of the bridge, has proposed to pay a portion of the cost. It seems to me that where this is to be done for our benefit it brings itself within those exceptional equities which justify the Government in paying, not the whole of the expense, possibly not half of the expense, but, as proposed by this bill, not to exceed one-third of the expense.

We constantly oppose We meet these equities everywhere. bills to give property to this municipality or that municipality where the Government has property, for certain purposes, de-pending in each case upon the equity of each case, without attempting to violate the general principles that it is not, on the one hand, the duty of Congress to give away property and, on the other, not the duty of Congress to pay for the reconstruction of bridges which have become obstructions to navigation.

When this bill first came before the committee of which I was then the chairman I felt as gentlemen do who are now opposing the bill. I appreciate their position, but after a long study of that subject, going carefully into the facts, some of which are disclosed in the report which was made then and in the report which is now made, and some of which are not disclosed at all, I reached the conclusion myself that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the Government of the United States was fully warranted in helping pay the cost of a bridge which we under our superior power had ordered reconstructed, purely for our own benefit and not for the benefit of anyone else, having the power to refuse to pay and to place a hardship upon the local people; but having the right also, if we choose, to deal justly and fairly by all citizens and all localities throughout the country. When we impose hardships we should at least partake of those hardships ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the approximate length of the present

Mr. MANN. I do not recall it at this moment,

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As shown on the map, it would be, I should judge, some hundreds of feet.

Mr. MANN. My impression is it was about 200 feet, but I am not certain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley].

Mr. Curley. Mr. Chairman, it is with considerable hesitation that I participate in the debate on this particular proposition, and my hesitation is because of the fact that this is no new proposition for consideration by a majority of the Members of this body. It is a proposition that was investigated thoroughly by the Sixty-first Congress, and was acted upon favorably by that Congress. The President of the United States, in a communication to Congress, through the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], after a thorough investigation of the facts in the case, went on record positively in that com-munication as being in favor of the proposition. The language of Judge Harlan, which has been quoted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], presents a proposition upon which the justice of this case may securely rest. He said:

It is one to be addressed to the legislative branch of the Government. It is for Congress to determine under the circumstances of a particular case. Justice requires that compensation may be made to a person or corporation incidentally suffering from the exercise by the National Government of its constitutional power.

Mr. Chairman, one not familiar with the neighborhood in which it is proposed this bridge shall be located might be justified by the arguments so well and ably presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cultor], the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], and by many others, in believing that the location of a magazine station in a section was of immeasurable benefit to the entire community. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if that magazine ever exploded it would destroy every human being and animal within 10 miles, or possibly 20 miles, of the station. The land upon which the station is now located did not become the property of the Government because of condemnation proceedings. The Government purchased the property. An area nearly 3 miles square was taken out of the taxable value of the town of Hingham.

The location of the magazine station tended to reduce property values in the neighborhood contiguous to the station. Any man who will study over the chart can get some idea of the condition that obtains there at the present time. He will readily perceive that the extreme width of the Weymouth Back River is in that portion of North Weymouth outside of the confines of the magazine station, and that if the magazine station had never been located in Hingham there would never have been a demand for a 50-foot draw in connection with that bridge; that a 24-foot draw was ample for all commercial purposes; and that the 50-foot draw is not put in for the development of commerce, but put there primarily and absolutely to serve the purposes of the Government. The Government property extends within a few feet of where it is probable this draw shall be located. That 50-foot draw is to be placed there in order that the Government may be permitted to have access to the magazine station by its large barges which carry the high explosives from the point where they are stored in Hingham and North Weymouth to that section of Boston Harbor in the vicinity of Charlestown Navy Yard.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BATHRICK. How many inhabitants of Hingham village are there?

Mr. CURLEY. I can not state exactly; but I should judge that the population of Hingham was about 1,500.

Mr. BATHRICK. Is the gentleman familiar with the ground about this Weymouth Back River and this property?

Mr. CURLEY. I am.

Mr. BATHRICK. Is there much marsh upon it?

Mr. CURLEY. I should say there is very little marsh.
Mr. BATHRICK. About how much—what will be the proportion? Mr. CURLEY. Well, I really could not answer that question, but I could answer it in this way

Mr. BATHRICK. Give us your judgment. Mr. CURLEY. By saying that the soil in that vicinity is largely a gravel and sandy soil. It is not a marshy or clay soil. Mr. BATHRICK. But there is marsh around the bank of the river, is there not?

Mr. CURLEY. You could not avoid having marsh on the banks of a river where it is salt tidewater. There is, I should say, not any great proportion.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. About what is the length of the present bridge, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. CURLEY. The length of the present bridge, I should judge, is about 90 feet and the draw about 24 feet.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. You take it, the bridge is not to exceed 90 feet?

Mr. CURLEY. The present bridge does not, I believe, exceed 90 feet.

One hundred feet. Mr. MANN.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In what manner is the structure now supported, by piles or piers, or how?

Mr. CURLEY. By piles and granite piers in places, and the support of the bridge itself rests on the roadway. If the Government did not require a 50-foot draw there and if it did not require it to be open for navigation, the proper thing would be to put a culvert there, so the only purpose the bridge serves is the purpose of the Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, it must be understood that this section of Massachusetts differs greatly from other sections of the country, and this is more particularly true of North Weymouth, South Weymouth, and Hingham, and that section of Massachusetts located along the south shore. There are no great industries there, there are few opportunities for employment there. The towns are not wealthy towns, and such a burden imposed by this Government upon the two counties and upon that section is a tremendous burden when we consider that an area covering nearly 9 square miles of taxable property is taken out of the taxable value returned for this section. The adjoining property is reduced and lessened in value in consequence of the injury and the danger that results from being contiguous to a magazine station, and I venture to say, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman, who seems to be familiar with local conditions there, if this plant is of any value locally, do these people profit from it in any way? Mr. CURLEY. I should say very little, and I think I might be justified in saying absolutely none, for this reason, Mr. Chairman: A magazine station in Massachusetts is not a new institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. CURLEY. A magazine station in this section of Massachusetts is in no sense an innovation. A magazine station has been maintained for a great many years at Chelsea, which is about 12 to 14 miles from the new magazine station in Hingham. Substantially the men who were formerly employed at Chelsea have been transferred in employment to this section at Hing-The street railway service and the steam railroad service to this point are excellent, so that the majority of those who have secured employment at the new magazine station have still maintained their residences in Chelsea or in Charlestown or in Boston or in some place other than Hingham.

Mr. JACKSON. How many of them are there, can the gentleman tell approximately?

Mr. CURLEY. I should say, Mr. Chairman, approximately not more than 60 or 80, for this reason, that none of the explosives are manufactured at the magazine station. They are simply handled and stored there, transferred from the sows which bring them there from the point where they are manufactured, and then the scows carry them out to the war vessels located in Boston Harbor or to the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Mr. JACKSON. Is it true that eventually these 60 or 80 men will all reside in this vicinity?

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, that is a question that I can not answer. Personally, if I were one of the men, I should not consider such a proposition, because they do not have even a moonlight schedule on the street lighting there. They have no lamps at night. There is no place to which a person can go in that section for amusement. In the winter it is extremely cold, and in the summer time the mosquitoes are extremely vicious.

Mr. JACKSON. What does the gentleman say to the proposition that if it were put up to the people of this locality to let the plant be removed and let the bridge stay as it is, and make the improvement, and pay for it, what would the people say?

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, of course I have no means of knowing what the people in that section would say, but if the proposition were put in this manner, to discontinue that portion of Weymouth Fore River that enters in the land now owned by the Government and maintained as a magazine station, and permit the town, the State, and the street railway company to establish any kind of crossover they saw fit there, I think the people would agree to that proposition.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the street railway bear a part of the expense of this improvement?

Mr. CURLEY. Under the Massachusetts State law they do. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, there has been some confusion created in the minds of many Members of this House with relation to the benefit or the injury that a proposition of this character involves to a community. And it has been so beautifully pictured here that one would believe that a magazine station was as ideal an acquisition to a community as a post office or a Government building of any character; that instead of detracting from property values it rather had added to property values. Mr. Chairman, in the very few minutes allotted I want to point out this fact: The people of Hingham and the people of Massachusetts generally would much prefer that this magazine station were located in the district represented by some of those Members who oppose justice in this matter rather than in some sections of Massachusetts.

Mr. SIMS. Are you willing for the navy yard to go with it? Mr. CURLEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I have too much regard for my colleague from Massachusetts, who is serving his first term in this body, to go publicly on record against a proposition that may be the means of sending him back here. But there is no navy yard, fortunately for me, located in my section. But I recognize that navy yards are necessary, and I do believe that there is sufficient historic tradition attached to the Charlestown Navy Yard to warrant its retention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, before asking the other side to consume some time, I wish to notify Members that, acting on the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] in his speech the other day, that the RECORD fails to disclose a part of the amendment made in the committee, I shall offer the amendment which he says he offered in the committee, and that is: On page 2, line 6, insert the word "fifteen" in place of the word "fifty," so that the possible maximum for the Government to contribute under this bill will be $15,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. SIMS. Do you mean that you will offer that in the bill when read for amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. I mean that I will offer it when we reach the consideration of the bill for amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the merit of this bill has given me some little bother. My original understanding was that the Government had acquired the land abutting the river above the bridge for magazine purposes and had prohibited public navigation of the river. I am informed now that that is not the situation at all. While the Government has acquired the land and owns all the river front within a fixed distance above the bridge the river, theoretically, is open to navigation as much as it ever was. There never was much navigation on the river and probably there never will be. But the question now recolves itself to one should be contained. the question now resolves itself to one pivotal or controlling proposition, and that is when the Federal Government locates an improvement or acquires real estate in any community for the use of the Government the question is, Shall it contribute toward carrying on local administration provided that its location withdraws more from the community in the way of taxes than it brings in the way of trade to the inhabitants? That is a question which is purely speculative and has no legal or

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to an interruption there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is purely speculative. That is all that is involved in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield.

Mr. AMES. Does the gentleman quite fairly state the case? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think so. I think I have analyzed it so that I have reached the kernel in the proposition.

Mr. AMES. The gentleman says the river is navigable and that the Government proposes to keep it navigable in the

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is nothing in the law that prohibits anybody from running boats up and down that river.

Mr. AMES. The committee in their report say that—

As the Navy Department owns all of the abutting land on the river, and it being necessary to prevent any trespassing on the magazine grounds, it is the purpose of the Government to prevent in future any navigation above the bridge.

Does not that make it theoretically not navigable?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it does not make it theoretically nonnavigable. The situation is the same as if that land were owned by a large industrial company, including all the frontage. It could keep trespassers off the premises and exercise all the power that the Government exercises, and no more. The situation would be exactly the same. The amount of money involved in this bill is not large, but-

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BOWMAN. The point having been made that an explosion occuring there would destroy all the property within 5 and 10 miles of the place, and the fact that the Government must, in order to protect the country, prevent navigation above that point, does that not make it not navigable for all practical

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The assumption in the gentleman's question is not borne out by the facts. The Government has shown no disposition to prevent navigation above the bridge at all, and if there is a liability to explosion, it seems to me the prudent thing would be not to pay for an explosion in advance, but wait until the explosion happens. It may never If the Government inflicts any considerable injury upon adjoining property, and there are equitable reasons why it should make compensation, or partial compensation, let us do it then. Let us not be appropriating Federal money now for a Prospective injury that may never happen.

Now, the bill carries a small appropriation, only $15,000, if it goes through as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] says he hopes it will; the $15,000 will be distributed among the street railroad company, the town or city of Weymouth, the town or city of Hingham, and the city of Quincy. It is not a very great burden upon those communities, and if allowed it would set a very dangerous precedent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to have three minutes

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would set a very dangerous precedent, because wherever the Government buys or condemns property for the purpose of establishing an Army post or establishing training grounds—we have a bill pending now authorizing the Government to purchase or to accept donations of land for that purpose-if the Government withdraws from taxation any considerable amount of land, it is not a difficult thing to prove in any community that by the withdrawal of the land from taxation the community loses more than it receives in the way of benefits on account of the location of the improvement or the purchase of the land, and then in equity the Government should contribute something, directly or indirectly, toward the administration of local civic affairs. That is the real question in the case, and Congress, under a precedent like that, may involve itself in all kinds of trouble.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That condition does not exist there.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Where?

Mr. TRIBBLE. At the place you describe. At the time this magazine was contracted for by the Government $75,000 was the amount agreed upon, and did not that plat there cost $200,000, and did not the Government pay $200,000?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I presume the Government in such cases usually pays four times what the land is worth, and I presume the money is in the community, and the results of the sale are reachable and taxable.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then there is something else behind this project in addition to these innocent farmers, is there not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know about that; but I do not think the bill ought to go through, because the principle is wrong. The matter is so purely speculative.

Now, as to this talk about an accidental explosion, can the Congress of the United States appropriate Federal money in cases like this because there might be an explosion and the adjacent property in that vicinity might be injured by it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate, and I think I have heard all of the debate on this question; and not going into the equities which have been so ably discussed by those both for and against this proposition, there is one phase of it which makes it impossible for me under any condition to reconcile my mind to the point where I could vote for this measure. The greatest estimate made by the Government engineers of the damage that will be done to this structure by the changing of this draw is the sum of $20,000. Yet here in this bill there is an estimate for a minimum of $33,000 and a maximum of $50,000 the Government shall pay, or a minimum of $13,000 and a maximum of $30,000 more than the Government estimate of the entire cost. Those who are asking the passage of this bill think this bridge can be built for $100,000, the Government to pay one-third. That will be thirty-three and one-third thousand dollars; but, allowing a maximum of $150,000 for this bridge, that would put the Government in for $50,000, and I am pretty well satisfied that they would use the maximum amount. I can not see how we, as Members of the House of Representatives, can come in here and pass such legislation as this, for it is so patent on the face of it that it simply is asking Congress to help build a fine bridge there, which they, no doubt, need on account of the age of those structures. The only argument I have heard brought up here was that after this expenditure of $20,000 was made the old bridge would not bear the weight of the new structure. I want to say to you gentlemen who know anything about drawbridges that the ends of the bridge are not supposed to hold any of the weight of the draw. All they do is to have a locking device at each end, which holds the ends in place while the load goes over the draw. The pier of the draw is supposed to support the draw itself and all the load that is on it; sometimes it is necessary to move the draw with its load when it has cars, passengers, and teams upon it. We have all seen instances where they have bridges of this kind which swing around, carrying not only the bridge but its load. I can not see that there is any argument here in favor of this excessive appropriation.

Mr. AMES. Has not the gentleman in mind a swinging drawbridge, one that is pivoted in the center? I do not anticipate that this is to be such a bridge. It is to be supported from one

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We have no way to tell by this bill what this draw is to be, but the Government engineer has made an estimate of $20,000, and the suggestion is made in reply that he does not take into consideration anything but the draw. I have no doubt the engineer is thoroughly onto his job and understands his business, and has taken that question into consideration, including the fixing of the ends of this draw so that it will support the necessary load. But I can not reconcile myself to the fact that you are asking from $13,000 to $30,000 more than the entire estimate of the Government engineer. locks as though you are simply asking Congress to help build a new bridge there, and not to make up any damage which the Government will occasion to the present structure.

Mr. AMES. After all, does it not resolve itself down to this proposition, that either the river is navigable or it is not? If it is not, ought the State or the community to be compelled to bear this entire burden?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no question about the navigability of the stream. It is navigable, and I understand this bridge has had a draw in it for many years.

Mr. AMES. Up to date; but the drawbridge which is now there supplies the necessities of present navigation, and the increase in the capacity of the draw is proposed solely for the convenience of the Government of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Even if it is needed for that purpose, what right have you to ask the Government to pay from $13,000 to $30,000 more than the entire estimate of $20,000 made by the Government engineer?

Mr. AMES. But the Government is the party that is insisting that this draw shall be widened.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Government estimate is that when it is widened the expense will be only $20,000.

Mr. AMES. Do you think the State ought to bear any of Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Even if it ought not, what right have you to ask more than $20,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK]. Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said here about the equities of this case, although I believe the discussion of the equities has principally referred to the possible great injury that is liable to be done to the citizens of Hingham.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. I will yield to the gentleman, although I can not lose too much of my time.

Mr. WEEKS. The equity of the case belongs to the citizens of Massachusetts and the communities that are to contribute to the bridge, not to the citizens of Hingham and Weymouth alone. The gentleman will recollect that the State is going to pay 45 per cent of the cost of reconstructing the bridge, and therefore the equity is in all the people of Massachusetts as well as these local communities.

Mr. BATHRICK. Very well; but I will confine my discussion of the equity to the citizens of Hingham. As far as the State of Massachusetts is concerned, I think the State is perfectly able to bear its fair share of the burdens in constructing bridges over navigable streams without calling upon the United States Government to assist it.

Now, the land contained in this site for a Government magazine approximates a little less than 1,000 acres. heard from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] to the effect that a proportion of this land is marsh, and that it is uninhabitable, practically, because of mosquitoes. order to ascertain what the equity of the matter is we want to know what the Government paid for this kind of land, and why the citizens of Hingham should come back and cry for justice from the Government if they did not give justice to the Government itself.

These 900 and odd acres included in this site were sold to the Government for $193,000. How did we proceed to purchase the land? A board was appointed, and that board had no interest in the land whatever nor in the sale of it. They were entirely impartial. They went to the locality and ascertained the value of the land in that region, and came back and declared an appraisal on the whole parcel of $36,000.

The Navy Department went before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House in 1905 and stated that whereas the appraisal was $36,000, everybody knew that when the Government bought any land they could not buy it at a fair price, and they asked for $70,000. It seemed in all justice that that amount of money, both the original appraisal or the $70,000, would certainly be enough to satisfy the greed of the people of the community that had the land for sale. But, notwithstanding this, the Government was held up by these citizens and paid over $193,000. I have a list of the people that sold to the Government the land included in the site, and there are nearly 200 of them. There are 1,500 citizens in Hingham. The people who sold the land to the Government at a price far in excess of the real value, included all the citizens of Hingham; in other words, Hingham as a village or a town itself sold land to the Government, and while the appraisal was originally about $40 per acre, the sum asked for before the Naval Committee was only $77 per acre, the Government was obliged to pay $214 an acre on the average. But the average was entirely too small for the village of Hingham when they sold, and the average price it received for its land was $236 per acre to the Government.

We find that the land that was sold to the Government for the enormous average of $214 an acre, and by the city of Hingham for $236 an acre, is part marsh and all of it is so beset by mosquitoes that it is impossible for people to live there. withstanding this enormous price paid by the Government for this land, the people of Hingham come to this House and ask that equity and justice shall be given to them. I have not heard anything on that side of the question asking that full justice be done to the Government in the matter.

Let us look into this a little further. We find that one person sold for $700 per acre. Further on is a sale at $80 per acre-all these sums far above the average price of the appraisal, an average that was thought to be fully sufficient and ought to have been satisfactory to the people of that community.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. For a question.

Mr. WEEKS. Is it not possible that that seven or eight hundred dollars an acre land contains something besides the land? The gentleman will note that there were some buildings on this property.

Mr. BATHRICK. If there were any portion of that land that contained buildings it might explain the proposition; but does it explain the appraisal of $40 an acre for the buildings and whole piece and the final payment of $214 per acre?

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman should look at the map.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does the map explain the estimate of $40 an acre for the whole piece?

Mr. WEEKS. As long as the gentleman has asked me that question, I want to ask him if he ever knew the Government to buy any land at its appraised value?

Mr. BATHRICK. There is the crux of the whole question. The question is whether the Government can receive justice from any community. If it does not receive justice from the community, then the question arises whether that community has the right to come into this House and cry equity when it has received two or three times the value of the land.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio if, in his investigation, he found any evidence of where any of these citizens of that locality at the time protested against this magazine being located there?

Mr. BATHRICK. I have seen nothing of protest in these investigations, and, furthermore, on the question of whether it is a benefit to the community, I wish to state this: There are 60 to 80 employees engaged in taking care of that magazine. They still live in Chelsea, because of this bad land which is infested by the mosquitoes. They come down on the railroad and railroad fare, and then the railroad comes in here as one of the beneficiaries of this bill, if it passes, although the railroad is the recipient of the benefit derived from these people traveling over it. Then the stores are the recipients of the benefit given by the larger population which buy goods there. Still we hear talk about equity. I might go on and show through this whole list of 200 people who it was that sold their land to the Government, including all of the people of Hingham. I might show comparisons here of prices that are apparent on their face, almost prima facie evidence that this Government did not buy this property at a fair price; that one person after another succeeded a little better than his neighbor in getting a higher price than his neighbor got for the land.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman know that the sellers of this land were residents of Hingham or Weymouth?

Mr. BATHRICK. I do not know where they were residents. can not see that it is material.

Mr. WEEKS. Could they not be residents of Rhode Island or of New York?

Mr. BATHRICK. It might be possible that some wise man who lived in New York City got an option from some of these people and that he succeeded in getting the greater portion of

The citizens of Hingham lived in Hingham.

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes; the citizens of Hingham lived in Hingham, and sold the town land for over $10,000-at the high-In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say est price of all. this, that the facts which I have presented are authentic. received them from the Navy Department but a few moments ago, and this evidence I submit to the House for its consideration in the determination of the question of equity and whether the people of Hingham or the vicinity or the citizens of Massachusetts owe the Government or whether the Government owes [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Covington]

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the discussion on the bill now under consideration has seemed to me to take a range far from the actual situation. The bill provides that one-third of the sum necessary to reconstruct the existing bridge across Weymouth Back River shall be paid by the Government of the United States. It is not disputed that the existing bridge as maintained by the towns of Weymouth and Hingham and the city of Quincy is adequate for highway purposes and the draw is of sufficient width to accommodate all navigation on Weymouth River except that of the United States Government. It is admitted that the land on both sides of the river above the bridge has been acquired by the Government for a place for a naval magazine. The War Department has notified the towns owning the bridge that it must be rebuilt so as to make the draw therein 50 feet wide. In other words, a new bridge will practically have to be built solely to suit Government boats. No business interests will be benefited by the widening; no local navigation will be aided; no commerce will be increased. The Government is, in fact, putting a burden upon small towns which get no benefit, for a purpose wholly apart from trade and commerce.

It makes very little difference whether or not the citizens of the community affected sold land to the Government. makes very little difference what prices were obtained for that There is involved a more serious proposition, the proposition of the equitable treatment by the United States Government of a locality when it arbitrarily exercises a power under the Constitution for purposes not strictly within the true purview In the controversy over this bill we have lost of that power. sight, and particularly those who oppose the bill have lost of the sole purpose of the power of the Government of the United States to control the navigable waters of the United It was accurately stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that there was a long period when the Federal Government possessed no power to control the navigable waters of the country. Until a comparatively recent time-I think, in 1882-there was no act of Congress which gave to the Federal Government the power to control or regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, and a landmark was placed in the constitutional law of this country when the great Blackbird Creek Marsh case was decided by Chief Justice Marshall in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1822, Willson v. Blackbird Creek Marsh Co. (2 Pet., 245), wherein he announced the doctrine that in the absence of some congressional legislation expressly by virtue of the power of the Federal Government to regulate commerce a State legislative enactment controlling absolutely the navigable waters within the State was not open to successful attack in the Federal courts. Therefore, in the absence of the existing laws controlling navigable waters of the United States for the protection and regulation of commerce, the Government would have to condemn and pay for the bridge over Weymouth River if it desired to destroy or alter it.

Now, the gentlemen who antagonize this measure do not seem to have grasped the reason for the favorable report of the bill by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee recognized the fact that the Federal Government in arbitrarily requiring the bridge to be changed was exercising a power that was unusual; that it was seeking, under the guise of its constitutional right, to regulate commerce, not to control a navigable stream for the benefit of trade purposes, but to withdraw an area of land from all future commercial development and to take a private bridge for public use without compensation. If the Government in acquiring its land in this locality had acquired a continuous area over which there was no water, it would not be seriously urged that it would not have to exercise its power of condemnation and payment to the citizens or to the municipalities whose land was taken; and yet the mere act of crossing a navigable stream does enable it, under the guise of the constitutional power to regulate commerce, to compel the owners of the bridges to make improvements of an expensive character when, as a matter of fact, the improvements do not help commerce but totally destroy it. Simply because the United States has the flat-footed right to do this under existing acts of Congress, it is idle to say that there is no equity in the failure to do it in a just manner. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that whenever the Government puts a heavy burden on a community for its sole use it is fair to cause it to share that burden. It is true that a street railway company uses a part of this bridge, but the question of whether or not an instrumentality of municipal public service, a corporation engaged in the transportation of passengers for pay, ought not seriously to weigh with gentlemen when they are discussing the question whether or not this Government ought to deal squarely with local governments,

The present Chief of Engineers, a man careful in safeguarding the interests of the public, in transmitting his letter to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has stated that if the Congress shall believe that the expense of this burden should be apportioned and placed a part of it upon the public, the amount appropriated should be not greater than one-half of what is actually expended. The committee, in apportioning this equity, has gone further than that in protecting the interests of the public. It has provided that only one-third of the amount should be paid out of the Treasury, leaving two-thirds to be paid by the citizens of the burdened towns of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. SIMS. Is not the gentleman mistaken? It is one-third of the cost of constructing the new bridges.

Mr. COVINGTON. One-third the cost of constructing the new bridges, a construction compelled entirely by the action of the Federal Government for its naval purposes wholly apart from commerce. In reality there is no commerce above the bridge to be controlled. I say to you, gentlemen, such action is too harsh an exercise of Federal power.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. COVINGTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The engineer from whom the gentleman quotes said that the Government ought not to pay more than one-half the amount required to make the changes, and then he proceeds to say that the draw could be changed from its present width to 50 feet at a cost not exceeding $20,000.

Mr. COVINGTON. If the gentleman will permit me to answer him, I will say that there was testimony before the committee that the cost will be much greater, and, moreover, it is my contention that the Government at this time is engaged in the forced exercise of a constitutional power for a purpose wholly apart from what was the intention of the Constitution which conferred upon Congress the regulation of commerce. Those of us who live in the tidewater States of this country recognize that there will always be present the power of the Federal Government practically to confiscate the land of municipalities by taking them for Government purposes, such as forts and magazines, and if there is also recognized the right of the Government to compel the destruction of all manner of bridges over navigable waters without requiring compensation to the local communities the power to regulate commerce will, indeed, be totally perverted to the lasting detriment of the communities affected. I have in mind one locality which gentlemen of this House ought to be familiar with. It is that county in the State of Maryland where the Naval Academy is situated. If this Government were to condemn the land above the Severn River bridge at Annapolis and withdraw it from occupancy and decide that on the headwaters of that river there should be a training station where battleships should be moored for the naval cadets to train on and all commerce on that river stopped, it would require the construction of a bridge of such a cost that the county treasury could not stand it, and at the same time it would destroy and not control an existing commerce. I believe no man here will seriously contend that the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States was ever intended to be used for any such an end.

And I ask the gentleman seriously whether he would urge that that sort of burden ought to be placed upon a municipality under the guise of the constitutional right to regulate commerce? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not apprehend the gentleman expects me to answer his question. If he does, I suggest that the cases are not parallel. The Government, in this instance, has simply demanded the removal of an obstruction to commerce, the placing of a 50-foot draw in the place of a 24-foot draw, and has made no demand for the remodeling of a bridge 90 feet long, which I understand this to be.

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman will understand that prior to the existence of the naval magazine that river was to some extent open to commerce.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is now.

Mr. COVINGTON. Wait a moment until I finish. The gentleman understands certainly, if he is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that at the hearing held on this bill it was expressly shown that there will no longer be so much as a rowboat for commerce to go above that bridge.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. COVINGTON. I think I am right. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] if my statement is or is not correct?

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman is practically correct. The Government has posted notices on both sides of this stream forbidding anyone to land. The upper end of the tidal basin, even at high water, is bare ground, and it is impossible for anyone to land above the bridge.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Under the law, with which we are all familiar, anyone has as much right to use that water as the Government has, and it can not be prevented by any number of notices.

Mr. WEEKS. For what possible purposes can it be navi-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Covington] has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. COVINGTON. The Government owns the land above Weymouth Bridge for the purpose of making it impossible to have commercial development upon it, and it has already taken steps, as shown in the hearing, to prevent the land being used by posting notices to all persons to keep off, and it can not be seriously contended that above that bridge there will be any longer any commerce of a character that will require a drawbridge. If the gentleman knows aught about the construction of bridges without draws, he knows it is vastly less than the construction of bridges with draws of the size that will permit naval tugs and other vessels to go through and serve that naval magazine.

In conclusion, I simply say that, without regard to the question of whether it is a wealthy community or one that is limited in its resources, without regard to whether it is in Massachusetts or in Texas, whether it is in Maine or California, we are dealing here with a greater principle than many realize. We are dealing here with a question of whether the Government of the United States, seeking to exercise a power arbitrarily, a power never given to it for any other purpose than to benefit the whole people, can place a burden upon a few of its people and give them no commensurate return. The failure of this bill means simply that you throw down the bars to the brute legal power of the Government to open or close the navigable waters of the tidewater section of America, without regard to the fact that commerce is benefited or destroyed and in spite of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the power of Congress shall at no time be used to destroy commerce, but solely to regulate it for its benefit. I shall support this bill with great pleasure, because of its establishment of that equitable dealing with citizens which should characterize the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Martin] 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, although I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and have listened very carefully to the discussion of this bill before that committee, and voted favorably upon it, it was not my intention to say a word in this discussion. The fact of the matter is that I have neither listened to nor read the discussion that has proceeded here on this little bill from Wednesday to Wednesday ever since it has been reported. And if I had prepared to say anything with reference to it, I would have been in danger of preparing to discuss a feature that I understand to be, under strict parliamentary procedure, out of order.

It must be mystifying to some of the brethren to see a bill reported with apparent unanimity from a committee, and then almost as unanimously opposed on the floor by members of the

But I want to assure the brethren that it is no less mystifying to them than it is to me, and I think it is to be regretted-if I may endanger myself by a transgression of parliamentary procedure to that extent—that these members of the committee did not give their benighted brethren on the committee the benefit of the voluminous information which they have demonstrated they possessed by the length and vigor and scope of the arguments which they have made against this bill for the last three or four Calendar Wednesdays in the House. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; the gentleman may

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has referred to those who oppose this bill now, and indicates that they were derelict in not opposing it when it was before the committee. The gentleman will remember that in the committee I stood up and made a speech in opposition to this bill, but I could not persuade the gentleman to adopt my way of thinking.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will, in fairness to the gentle-man from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], admit that he did make some brief remarks in committee and reserve the right to oppose this bill when it came up in the House, although apparently the gentleman did not think this a matter of sufficient importance to warrant him in filing a minority report on the bill, as is usual in such cases, and give the House his views in the regular

Mr. SIMS. The report shows all the facts in the case, and the report of the engineer, upon which I base my opposition, is embodied in the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I did not need to add anything to what is stated in the report.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That may be, but-

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the gentleman from Colorado read the report?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have read the report; I have it right here

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman started out by saying that he had not given any attention to the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I said I had not given any attention to the discussion in the House, but that I had given the matter careful attention in the committee. I will say to the gentleman that, being a landlubber and not knowing much about these matters of navigable streams, I listened all the more attentively to the discussions before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is a fact, is it not, that this bill has been reported twice by the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is; and I want to say, while it is in my mind, that to a man from the arid regions it seemed to me that it was somewhat of a fiction and rather a strain upon the term to refer to this stream as navigable water. may be navigable to tadpoles and turtles, and things of that sort, at high tide; but, aside from the fact that it has a tide-water connection with the ocean, there has not been anything whatever developed before the committee to indicate that this is really a navigable stream.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not a bit excited about this bill. In fact, there is a consoling side to the development in this case—a sort of secret satisfaction in seeing how our New England brethren get a lesson in conservation—the spectacle of this great Congress fighting here, Calendar Wednesday after Calendar Wednesday, everybody knowing that there is pending before this Congress far more important legislation than will ever be reached for consideration, while we are wasting every Calendar Wednesday here from week to week merely to determine whether or not this Government will be fair and just. That is all that is involved in this case, in my judgment—whether the Government will be fair and will contribute $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 to help pay the cost of a condition that is being brought about wholly and solely by it and for its benefit.

Mr. Chairman, I passed on this matter in committee merely as a juror. I did not propose afterwards to come before the House as an advocate of the proposition. I proposed to leave that to those who are interested in this matter or to those who are at least interested in the matter of navigable waters generally. have been advised that the controversy has raged over this bill principally around the legal question that the Government is not legally obligated to contribute any part of the cost of putting in this new bridge. Mr. Chairman, I never proceeded in the committee upon the theory that the Government was legally liable. The sole and only question that determined me was whether, under the particular circumstances existing in this case, it was fair and right for the Government to make this contribution, and thought it was.

We seem to have three standards of conduct in this countryone for the individual, and that is a pretty rigid standard; one for the corporation, which is rather loose; and one for the Government, that will permit it to do things that would be absolutely unjust and immoral in an individual; and not only that, but which would absolutely destroy his standing in the community. Nobody would claim for a moment that either an individual or a corporation would dare to undertake to work to a community the injustice that is sought to be perpetrated upon these people in these little towns in this case.

Now, what are the facts which have been gone over to you repeatedly? Here is this little neck of backwater [indicating map] up from the Atlantic Ocean, where these villages built a bridge sufficient for their needs and all the needs of navigation forever, so far as could be foreseen. As has been pointed out, they built this bridge there almost half a century before this Government ever asserted the powers that it has undertaken to exercise in this case.

Now, the Government comes in and buys all the land for 2 miles above that bridge on both sides of that stream and, in effect, practically closes that stream to navigation absolutely to everybody but itself. I say, under the facts, and I defy contradiction, that the Weymouth Back River, from the bridge clear up virtually to where any kind of navigable water ceases, is just as effectually closed to the use of any other individual as though there were a statute written upon the statute books against it. The Government is to be the sole user and the sole beneficiary of this stream.

Now, let me carry my illustration a little further. I will admit, and it can not be denied, that the Government could also have taken the land at each end of the bridge. It could have taken it all and have destroyed the bridge completely. It could have created such a situation there that a bridge could not be built at all. But would it be fair and right? Is the Government too big to do the right thing in a situation like

But not only has the Government taken all this locality for its own use, as it appears to me; not only has it forever closed this stream to navigation, to all practical intents and purposes closed it to everybody else, but it has rendered it henceforth nonnavigable; and I say now that to all practical intents and purposes the Weymouth Back River above that bridge is nonnavigable water. It is just a basin which the Government has taken for its own purposes, and has shut everybody else out of the use of it. Not only that, and whether it was objected to by the town or not, the Government has established there an institution that is a positive detriment to that community.

Mr. AMES. A nuisance.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Government has established an institution there that will absolutely prevent further growth and development there or thereabouts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like just a minute more. Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In addition to that it has taken all of this property out of taxation.

Is there a Member here who would want the Federal Government to build a great naval magazine like that in the vicinity of his property? Would he want it within or near the boundaries of a city in which he lived and had his home?

So, to sum up, leaving out the legal question-and I am frank to state that there is no legal liability on the part of the Government-I am simply telling you what appealed to me as a member of the committee, having no interest in this matter one way or the other. What caused me to make a favorable report on this bill was the unusual combination of facts that the Government had gone in there; had bought all the land on both sides of this stream for 2 miles; had closed it forever to navigation by anybody but itself; had built there a plant which was a menace, a detriment, and a damage forever to that community; had caused an expense that will run somewhere from $25,000 to $100,000, solely for its own benefit, the entire burden of which cost was to be placed on the community, and I thought that was not fair and that the Government should contribute one-third of this cost. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell].

Mr. Mondell. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, when this matter was under discussion, I interrogated the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Richardson], who, I believe, at that time had charge of the bill, relative to the theory on which the committee had reported it. At that time I had some doubts about the wisdom, propriety, justice, and equity of the legislation.

The answers then given me and the information I have received since have convinced me that the committee was entirely justified in reporting the bill; that it proposes an act of justice and equity, and that the legislation should be had. We should remember that the situation which we have to deal with is a complicated one. We are met here with the presence of the Federal Government in two capacities: First, as a sovereign; and, second, as a landowner and an organization engaged in industrial affairs.

The Government as an industrial organization desires to have the channel widened, and it appeals to the Government as a sovereign to require that the bridge which now obstructs the widening of the channel shall be removed. There is the question in the first place, whether if the Government was not interested in the land above the bridge the authorities could have been prevailed upon by the landowners to compel the removal of this bridge. But as the Government as a corporation engaged in industrial affairs there desires it, the Government as a sovereign commands that it shall be done.

The question is, What are the equities thus presented? No one proposes to use this new channel except the Government. The Government's needs alone require the enlargement of the channel. The Government will alone be benefited by the enlargement of the channel. The Government has acquired a large amount of land which, except for that fact, would be subject to taxation, not only for the reconstruction of this bridge but for the support of all local institutions. But as the Government as a corporation engaged in industrial affairs requires that this work shall be done, the Government, as a matter of fairness and equity, should assume at least the burden that any other landowner, that any other party engaged in industries there, would be called upon to assume; that is, to pay a part of the cost of the reconstruction of the bridge. is all that the Government is asked to do in this case-to bear its fair and just proportion of a burden that arises by reason of its necessities and not by reason of the demand or request or necessities of anyone else in the community. Therefore, it seems to me that under the circumstances the bill should pass.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has consumed 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is never a gracious task to oppose legislation that Members are seeking to apply locally to their own communities, and especially when a bill is supported by one who always accords the membership of this House the courtesy and fairness that is accorded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks].

I have already, early in this debate, stated the grounds of my opposition to this measure, and I shall confine myself in these concluding words to a statement of such facts as I think all members of the committee ought to have for a correct understanding of the case.

It certainly states the proposition very mildly to say that this bill at present is in a very crude, if not in an entirely inoperative form, and I would like the attention of the members of the committee upon that subject. This bill passed the Senate July 26, 1911. It provides for an appropriation which may be as high as $50,000 to aid in the reconstruction of these bridges.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota, no doubt, misses the fact, as did also the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which I stated, that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens], offered in the committee an amendment to strike out the $50,000 and make it

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I. understand, but what I am saying has no bearing on that. Six days before, on July 20 last, before the Senate passed the bill, the Massachusetts Legislature had acted in this matter, and I have that act before me. That act provides that this bridge should be reconstructed at a maximum cost of not to exceed $80,000, and the Senate was in the attitude six days after of passing a bill in a form that might bind the Government of the United States to pay within $30,000 of what the State of Massachusetts had fixed as the entire cost of the reconstruction.

But, beyond that, the bill we are called upon to pass and which we have been debating off and on for a period of some weeks is not in accord or agreement with the statute. This weeks, is not in accord or agreement with the statute. This bill provides that whenever the Legislature of Massachusetts shall determine what proportion of this expenditure is to be am not willing to admit, we should proceed and put the draw paid, relatively, by the Old Colony Street Railway Co., the in at our own expense, which would not cost over $20,000; or we towns of Weymouth and Hingham, and the city of Quincy toward this public improvement, the Government shall be called upon to appropriate not to exceed one-third of the amount.

The act of the legislature, passed on the 20th of July, calling for the reconstruction of these bridges, provides that they shall be reconstructed under the supervision of a board of bridge commissioners, to be selected, and the manner of their selection is named; that the primary expense of this construction shall be borne—one-half by the county of Norfolk, one-half by the county of Plymouth, or $40,000 each; and that ultimately the expense shall be borne—45 per cent by the State of Massachusetts, 20 per cent by the county of Norfolk, 20 per cent by the county of Plymouth, and 15 per cent by the railway company. The act also provides that whatever appropriation may be made by Congress shall be paid as follows: To the State of Massa-chusetts 45 per cent, to the two counties 20 per cent each, and to the railway company 15 per cent.

But here is a bill stating that whenever the Legislature of Massachusetts shall say how much shall be paid to the town of Hingham, how much to the town of Weymouth, how much to the city of Quincy, how much to the railway company, then this appropriation shall be made. Let me ask of the gentlemen who are supporting this measure, What will be the effect of this bill if we should pass it to-day or at any other time? When would it become operative? To whom will this money be paid in the face of the act of the Massachusetts Legislature? evident that the bill was passed through the Senate without knowledge of or with indifference to what action had been taken six days earlier by the Massachusetts Legislature, and it would be perfectly idle for us to pass this bill in this form at the present time.

Fundamentally, to state again my main objection to this legislation, as a precedent, I will say that here is a bridge built 100 years ago. As near as I can learn, its length is in the neighborhood of 400 feet.

Mr. ADAMSON. One hundred feet, I think,

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] informed me that in the gallery to-day thusetts [Mr. Weeks] informed me that in the gallery to-day he noticed the city attorney of the town of Weymouth, who is fully familiar with these subjects; at my request he obtained from him his statement as to the length of the structure, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, with his usual frankness, has told me that the city attorney of the city of Weymouth tells him that this bridge is 400 feet long.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the entire structure; approaches and all.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is the structure which we are asked to contribute toward rebuilding. Here is an obstruction to navigation which the Government orders removed, and all it does order removed is a draw which is 24 feet wide, which shall be replaced by a draw 50 feet wide. We have not instructed them to take down that 400-foot bridge, or any other bridge. All we are interested in and all we will ever be interested in is the widening of the draw. They have been notified to widen that draw. The Chief of Engineers of the Army reports that it would cost in the neighborhood of $20,000 to widen that draw from 24 feet to 50 feet.

Mr. SIMS. And to make it of steel instead of wood, as it is now.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And to make it of steel instead of wood, as it is now.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. What is the value of this present structure, which was erected a hundred years ago? That question was asked of a witness before the committee, a man named Barnes, appearing on behalf of the bill, and he stated that originally it had cost from $35,000 to $40,000. It is a structure built by putting down wooden piles and then placing upon them a wooden superstructure. Yet from the mere fact that the Government orders the removal of a 24-foot draw and the widening of it to a 50-foot draw, which our own Army engineers say can be done, and made of steel instead of wood, for $20,000, we are asking as a Congress to contribute to the cost of a monumental structure 400 feet long, in which we are not interested. It is setting a precedent that, in my judgment, would rise up to embarrass the Congress in the future. If the taking out of that draw and the putting in of a larger one, which is all the Government has directed to be done, ought to be done by the Government, a question which I ought, as the Army engineer says, if we are to bear any portion of that reconstruction, to bear not more than one-half.

That, in a nutshell, is the case; and, believing that a good deal of mystification and misunderstanding has grown up about the case, I thought it my duty in these concluding words to state the facts as to what this bill asks us to do, and what is the position of the Government upon the subject.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to know who it is that is asking that this monumental structure should be put up there when the Government only asks $50,000?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The bill asks for it. The bill asks for the reconstruction of both of these bridges at a cost not to exceed $100,000, and the legislature directs it to be done at not exceeding $80,000.

Mr. HARDY. Well, who changed the program?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It comes simply by this:

That the Government directs the removal of the present draw and we are asked to build new bridges that we are not interested

Mr. HARDY. Where did the idea come from that a bridge 400 feet long be constructed?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Because the bill of the legislature and this bill which we are asked to pass asks us to contribute to the reconstruction of those bridges, and the bridges are 400 feet long.

Mr. HARDY. And the gentleman's position is that that is not in response to the demand of the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That that is not in response to the demand of the Government, and this is seeking to make us partners in the building of a permanent structure there to take the place of the wooden structure built many, many years ago.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman used his entire time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 1 minute remaining. The Chair will say that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has 55 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee has 24 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the Chair to say there was 75 minutes remaining

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mistaken when he stated that he had 75 minutes remaining.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has used 65 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has now 55 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee 24.

Mr. WEEKS. As the gentleman has that much time remaining and the gentleman who wants to speak on this side is not in, I would ask that the gentleman use some of the time on that side, if anybody wants to use it.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have two speakers left, and I do not ropose to use but one in conclusion. I would like to sandwich

Mr. Weeks in between the last two.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] is one of the gentlemen to speak, and he is engaged in the Appropriations Committee room.

Mr. ADAMSON. Could not the gentleman go on? Mr. SIMS. Why, I could; I wanted him to speak and give him such time as he desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the time is passing.

Mr. SIMS. Not to come out of this time. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum in the committee. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The point is well taken, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER resumed the chair, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [Mr. Page] reported that the committee, finding itself without a quorum, the Chairman had caused the roll to be called and 279 gentlemen responded to their names, and the Clerk had recorded the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that, the committee finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called and that 279 gentlemen responded, and that the names of the absentees were noted. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining. Mr. SIMS. Then I ask the Chair to notify me when I have used 10 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to say anything further on this bill. I expected the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] to close, but he tells me that he only wants to occupy 15 minutes. Therefore my 10 minutes will be used in trying to get the Members of the House to understand the real facts in this case.

It is true there is no minority report made by the members of the committee who voted against the bill, for the reason that the majority report, both in the last Congress and in this, made as a part of the same the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting the letter of the Chief of Engineers, which gives all the facts necessary for anybody to know, it seems to me, to cause them to vote against this bill.

I want to call your attention to what those facts are. Remember this is an officer of the United States Government who is authorized to make a report. And he does make it. This is not my work; it is not somebody's hearsay; it is not anybody who is interested, but a sworn officer of the Government. And he says:

In my judgment the proposition is not a commendable one, and the consideration upon which it is based is not sound. Weymouth Back River is a natural highway capable of a useful navigation, and for many years its navigable capacity has been obstructed and diminished by the existence of these bridges.

If the Navy Department did not put a magazine there, did not put a dollar of property there, nor never expected to, the Secretary of War had the authority, and could exercise it, to have that obstruction to navigation removed.

A great deal has been said here because the Government has storage magazine there, and that therefore we must pay something for having it located at that point. In other words, that the bridge would not have been widened; that it was not necessary to widen it so far as commerce existing at the time the Navy Department located its storage magazine there.

The Chief of Engineers tells us that this natural highway has been obstructed for many years by these bridges. Do you wonder there is no navigation there when practically these bridges prevented navigation? Suppose, as I said before, some private individual or corporation had built this magazine or any other kind of an industry. It would have been the duty of the Secretary of War to make the order he did. Then do not forget that the Government represents all the people of the United States. That magazine belongs to you; it belongs to everybody. I submit that the whole is greater than any portion of the units that it takes to make up the whole, and because the Government uses it it is simply preposterous to say that the Government should pay for this widening of the draw.

What else does the Chief Engineer say? He says:

What else does the Chief Engineer say? He says:

The Federal Government has always had the right of way through the structures, and their owners have maintained them subject to the exercise and assertion of this right. As the widening of the draw openlugs is necessary to provide for the navigation of which the river is capable, it is within the power of the Secretary of War, as the instrument of Congress, to require such widening at any time.

The fact that the Navy Department is the chief complainant against the bridges and will benefit immediately by the action of the Secretary of War in ordering changes in the structure is immaterial.

He further says:

Such fact is not essential to his action nor can it affect the duties and obligations of the bridge owners. The latter are simply required to abate an obstruction created by themselves and to partially restore the ancient navigable capacity of a public highway.

Now, can any gentleman in this House, knowing these facts and knowing that they are stated by the department whose duty it is to make a statement upon the bill being submitted to you, vote for this contribution-for that is all it is? Putting in the bill that the Government should superintend the construction of this bridge was only done to make it appear that it was a Government requirement or necessity.

Why, they could have ordered that bridge removed absolutely, and not used it at all, and prevented those cities from ever using it, and still the order would have been valid.

Now, the town of Hingham received, according to the reports from the Navy Department, for a part of this land the sum of $10,622.60. Yet the town of Hingham is here asking charity of this House after having sold its marshes and its swamps-for such they were-for a much larger price than they could otherwise have obtained for them.

Now, let me read to you what was said by a distinguished Member of this House then and now, a gentleman from Massachusetts—and that is a guaranty of ability and respectability—when this proposition was first proposed in an appropriation bill in 1994. tion bill in 1904. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], always alert and watchful, made a point of order. I want to read to you what Mr. Roberts, of the State of Massachusetts and a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, said in reference to that point of order. This is not my statement. I will have to read it:

Mr. Roberts. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will reserve his point of order until an explanation can be made.
Mr. Bartlett. Mr. Chairman, if it is desired by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the point of order be reserved that he may be

Mr. Bartlett. Mr. Chairman, if it is desired by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the point of order be reserved that he may be heard, I will do so.

The Chairman. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. Roberts. Mr. Chairman, I trust, after the explanation which I shall give, the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his point of order entirely. The facts in this case are as follows: There is a small naval magazine in the city of Chelsea. It is in a very thickly settled territory. Within perhaps a square mile of this magazine there are from forty to fifty thousand people residing. In addition, a large coking plant—an establishment costing $2,000,000, running day and night, manufacturing coke and gas—has been located within 1,200 feet of the magazine; so that to-day the magazine, as at present existing, and the only one which the Navy Department has on the New England coast north of Cape Cod, is a source of imminent and grave danger to a great many people. Not only that, the magazine is small, it is obsolete, and it is entirely inadequate to the needs of the Navy Department. By previous legislation this Congress has authorized an examination of and a report upon a new and suitable site; and in pursuance of that report this provision has been inserted in the bill.

The gentleman from Georgia will note a provision here that the land inclosing the present obsolete magazine shall be sold as soon as a new magazine has been provided. I am not an expert on land values, but, in my opinion—and I have some familiarity with the location of the old magazine—that land will bring almost, if not fully, enough to pay for the entire cost of the new magazine.

Not merely the land, but the entire cost. I read further:

Not merely the land, but the entire cost. I read further:

The board that has looked into this proposition has done its work with great thoroughness; has made a report to the Secretary of the Navy and to Congress that the site selected is inclosed by a range of bluffs, isolating it from the surrounding country, so that in case of explosion the safety of the people and property in the neighborhood will not be endangered. The location is secure from attack by armed vessels, and is far enough from sea to render bombardment futile. Its area and boundaries forbid the proximity of dangerous or objectionable neighbors.

But more than that, Mr. Chairman, it is a grave question whether the Navy Department can secure anywhere else on the New England coast a suitable site that will combine all the elements of safety and desirability that this site presents for the amount of money with which this site can be purchased at the present time. And it is a matter of business economy for the Government to take steps at once to secure the site that this board has reported upon. That site can be secured at not exceeding $70,000 at the present time. If time is allowed to run on, there is no telling what speculators may do in the way of enhancing the value of the land. I trust the gentleman from Georgia, after this explanation, will withdraw his point of order.

That is what the gentleman from Massachusetts, speaking on his honor as a Member of this House-and no man will inquire beyond it-stating that this place was in the midst of bluffs which protected the people against damage, either to life or to property. In the town of Chelsea it was threatening the lives and property and the health of 50,000 people in the State of Massachusetts. They were anxious to get it away from there, and they ought to have been. Yet because, forsooth, on account of this public requirement and public necessity this bridge is ordered to be opened, which is an admitted obstruction and an ancient obstruction, and one that has long prevented navigation, the people of the wealthy State of Massachusetts come here and ask you to give 45 per cent of the cost that will be imposed upon her to build this bridge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time and yield it later to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

SHERLEY], and then there will be no further speakers from this ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. [EEKS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, if an observer in the gallery had watched the proceedings of this House during the past week he would have been a good deal mixed in his judgment as to the relative importance of legislation. This House devotes five hours of debate to the steel bill, which directly affects hundreds of millions of capital and tens of thousands of men, and any number of people indirectly, and yet it devotes three days to the consideration of a bill which, under no circumstances, can cost the Government over $30,000

Mr. ADAMSON. Fifteen thousand dollars— Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman from Georgia suggests only $15,000. I would not have any Member think that it is the importance of this bill which has delayed its passage or prevented its passage earlier. There is something else in the minds of those who are working and speaking against it-quite likely something on the calendar which they may be fearful of, to prevent the consideration of which they might wish to consume time rather than allow this legislation to be considered on its merits. However that may be, we have seen various gentlemen, especially members of the Appropriations Committee, come in here and use an unusual amount of time, not entirely discussing the facts relating to this bill, but apparently with the purpose of delaying action as well as to defeat this legislation. They have been agitated especially about the question whether this is establishing a good or a bad precedent. I am as averse as anyone to establishing a bad precedent or voting for a bill which has not merit. But in such matters you will not find a precedent that will exactly fit such legislation as this. You may find something that is comparable to it in some degree, but there are never two cases which are exactly alike. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens] the other day instanced 14 cases similar to this in every respect, but not exactly like it, where appropriations have been made through the War Department for similar purposes.

The War Department is not alone in this respect, for appropriations have been made for the Navy Department to assist a local community in matters in which the Government had some direct or indirect interest. I have a list of several prepared for me by the Navy Department. I am sure that it is not a complete list, but I want to read two or three of them to show you the kind of legislation which has been favored by gentlemen who are opposing this bill.

For instance, on March 2, 1907, there was appropriated for a sidewalk on Flushing Avenue and Navy Street, in front of the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., $10,800; an appropriation of $10,800 for building a sidewalk on a street in the city of Brooklyn outside of the navy yard.

That provision came in the form of an amendment which was adopted on the floor of the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Calder] proposed it. The other gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] who is especially responsible for the Brooklyn Navy Yard was present on the floor, for he took part in the discussion immediately before and immediately after, and presumably was in favor of this legislation. Yet he objects to the bad precedent which he says is going to be made in this case, the Government helping to reconstruct a bridge, when the reconstruction is entirely for Government purposes, and for no other.

Let me take another case relating to the Brooklyn Navy Yard. There was appropriated, on March 3, 1857, for the construction of a sewer under Flushing Avenue, in Brooklyn—though I can not charge the gentleman from New York with that—and under Vanderbilt Avenue, the sum of $60,000, because presumably this sewer was going through Government property and was to empty into the harbor from Government land. There was no other possible reason for it.

I have half a dozen other similar instances in which appropriations have been made, not because the Government had any direct interest, but because indirectly either the improvement was put across Government land, or, as in the first instance I gave, the appropriation was made to assist a local community when the Government was to derive no advantage from it.

This question is not one of precedents. It is a question of Nobody contends that we come here asking for this money as a matter of right, because the law is explicit that the War Department may order the removal of any obstruction in a navigable waterway. This is not a river. In fact, it is a tidal basin. There is no substantial flowage of water above that upper bridge. Even at high water there is no water above this point [indicating] where the Government has taken the land. The Government has taken all of the land inside the red line [indicating]. The point has been raised whether navigation in that section of the river has been stopped. Navigation has not been absolutely stopped, because that could not be done; but, as a matter of fact, even at high water, there is no water above the Government land, and the Government has posted notices, as it has a perfect right to do, prohibiting any landing on either side of the stream between the bridges. And we have the affidavit of the draw tender at the lower bridge that only about one boat, except a Government boat, has gone through that draw during the past year, and that was a small catboat. As a matter of fact, as I stated the other day, there has not been and is not now any navigation for commercial purposes which can have any bearing on this case. The question is just as was enunciated by Mr. Justice Harlan in the Supreme Court, whether there is an equity in this case or not.

The Government bought this land, and, as far as this question is concerned, it makes no difference whether it paid more or less for it. Ordinarily the Government does pay more for land than would a private purchaser. In this particular case it paid twice as much as the estimated cost when the building of the magazine was undertaken. The location of the magazine was decided by a board of naval officers, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, who considered it the best place adapted for magazine purposes along the Massachusetts coast, it being necessary to remove the magazine from the city of Chelsea.

The land was bought-all of it-at private sale. paid for it has no bearing on the question. It is not a question whether some individuals were paid more than they should have received for this land; it is a question whether the local communities and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are to be put to an unusual expense when they receive no direct benefit from it and whether the Government should not bear some part of the expense when the expenditure is made entirely for governmental purposes. That is all there is to this question, and it is up to members of this committee to determine whether we have shown here that there is an equity in this case.

There are all kinds of appropriations made from time to time by Congress. I notice since this bill has been under consideration that there has been a convention in the city of Washington to agitate the question of good roads. A large number of Members of this House attended the convention, or at any rate they gave to it the dignity of their presence even if they are not in favor of the large expenditures advocated for road building. The leader of the majority of this House is quoted as being in favor of large expenditures for building "post roads" throughout the country. Is not that assisting local communities and has it any other purpose? I do not mean to say that I am in favor of it, but that is what it amounts to-to assist local communities to build good roads.

This is a post road, probably more important than those which would be constructed under any law that would be passed by the Members who are agitating against this bill. It is not an unusual thing for the Government to be of assistance to a local community as a matter of equity, and this case carries, in my judgment, a larger equity than any similar case I have investi-The debate has dragged along so long that I have investigated every possible case that might have any bearing on the subject.

Now, I ask members of the committee to determine in their own minds whether the Government shall be put in the position of demanding this burden of a local community for purposes that are essentially governmental and yet at the same time shall mot pay some part of the expense relating thereto.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEEKS. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. Do I understand the gentleman to be arguing from precedents, that the precedents have been that such appropriations as these should be made?

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly there have been precedents made, and in many cases they should have been made.

Mr. JACKSON. If this is established as a precedent, does not the gentleman think the result in a few years would be quite adverse to the gentleman's position, expressed by him in the House, as to economy?

Mr. WEEKS. I assume that subsequent Houses will determine similar questions on their merits. We can not de-termine what our successors will do. If a case of this kind comes up and is debated as long as this has been, the Members certainly will be supposed to have brains enough to determine whether in such case equity requires what the Government

Mr. JACKSON. If we should adopt this precedent, might not similar cases come from the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers demanding the same kind of assistance?

Mr. WEEKS. You will not be likely to find other cases for which this is a precedent, because it is not possible that the Government can own all the land above a certain point on the Mississippi or Missouri or any other river; and even if it were, it is not possible that it is likely to take the land for military purposes alone. That is a point which the gentleman does not want to lose sight of—that this is for military purposes.

Mr. JACKSON. But if I understood the gentleman's position the other day on the pension bill—and I do not say this to be unkind—I understood it was a matter of economy, in order to keep down appropriations.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, the gentleman from Kansas has confused me with somebody else, because I did not say a word on the pension bill.

Mr. JACKSON. As I understood it, that was the gentleman's position and that of his people on this question.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman from Kansas may understand hat he likes. I have made no statement about the pension what he likes. bill, and that is not in controversy at this time.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman and a few of the delegations would not vote for the pension bill, on the ground that it was increasing appropriations.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman may make that statement, but it has no bearing on this question, and it would not have any bearing, even if it were true, because that is entirely a different proposition. That involves from fifty to seventy-five millions of dollars and this involves only $15,000.

Mr. JACKSON. That is what I am getting at, that it would be but a short time when this would involve more.

Mr. WEEKS. I just said that you can not have a case comparable to this, because the Government probably never will again buy all of the land surrounding a river or a part of a river.

Mr. JACKSON. According to the gentleman's own statement the Government has already paid money into this community to an amount more than it will cost to build this bridge.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know that the Government has paid more than the land is worth. I simply said the property was assessed at $75,000, and when the Government came to buy it it had to pay more for it. It may have been worth more.

Mr. JACKSON. I understood some gentleman here to state that it cost $200,000.

WEEKS. The Government paid $193,000, but I do not think that has anything to do with the case.

Mr. JACKSON. After all, the difference between this appropriation and the pension appropriation is one of locality. Mr. WEEKS. Not in any sense, and the gentleman is going out of his way to make any such statement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Was some portion of the purchase price of this land paid to the municipality?

Mr. WEEKS. About $10,000 was paid to the town of Hing-ham because the town owned land there that was taken for this magazine purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. What part of the whole price paid for the land was paid to the municipality?

Mr. WEEKS. About one-twentieth.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Can the gentleman give us an estimate as to the assessed valuation of that property, or what it would be assessed at for the purpose of taxation, if it had not been taken by the Government.

Mr. WEEKS. I presume the assessed valuation was the valuation that was placed on the property by the board which made the original report, which was about $70,000; but unimproved, wild lands in Massachusetts are very seldom assessed for their market price, provided there is a market. Frequently lands will be assessed for 2 or 3 cents a foot in suburban communities when sales of the same land are made at 10 cents a foot. The bulk sale of such land is at a rate much less than the lot sale.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was not this what the board recommended, that the land was worth $36,000 and it would probably take $70,000 to buy it, whereas, as a matter of fact, it actually took $193,000 to get it?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I have a statement from the Navy Department on that subject, giving a list of the sellers of the land. The amount paid was $193,000. It is stated in this report that the board estimated the cost at $70,000. I did not see anything in it relating to $36,000, and I do not know whether there was any such amount stated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is there any force or truth in the statement made by one of the gentlemen representing the State of Massachusetts upon the other side of the aisle that the municipalities that will receive this appropriation are poverty stricken panties that will receive this appropriation are poverty stricken and need the help that this appropriation would give?

Mr. WEEKS. I am not prepared to say that. These are well-to-do communities and, in my judgment, are not poverty stricken. They could bear this expense and will if necessary.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think that statement was made sneeringly by a gentleman on the other side.

Mr. WEEKS. Quite likely.
Mr. McLAUGHLIN. No; that was made in good faith, seemingly, by a Representative of the State of Massachusetts who was arguing in favor of this measure.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman was in error in saying these towns are poverty stricken, or possibly the gentleman from Michigan misunderstood him, because they are certainly not poverty-stricken communities. They could and will bear their proportional part of this expense if it is imposed upon them.

Mr. ADAMSON. What I referred to was the statement made by a gentleman arguing on the other side, in which he inquired if that be the fact they are in no need of charity.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. To whom, in the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, would this appropriation be paid in the event the bill passes?

Mr. WEEKS. If the $15,000 which the gentleman from Georgia proposes to offer as an amendment to this bill passes, 45 per cent will be paid by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent by the town of Hingham, 20 per cent by the town of Weymouth, and 15 per cent by the Old Colony Street Rail-

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I notice that the bill we have before us provides that whenever the Commonwealth of Massachusetts shall determine what proportion of these ex-penses is to be borne by the town of Hingham and the town of Weymouth and the city of Quincy and the Old Colony Railroad Co. the appropriation shall be made. Would not the natural interpretation of that bill be that the money was to be paid to these towns and the railroad company?

Mr. WEEKS. That bill was introduced before the State of Massachusetts had acted in the matter. The State has now acted and has apportioned the expense for building the bridge.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Would it not be idle, then, to pass the bill in its present form, if those towns are in no sense beneficiaries?

Mr. WEEKS. Those towns are the beneficiaries.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Do I understand the gentle-man proposes—the Massachusetts Legislature having acted, directing the construction of this bridge and having apportioned 45 per cent to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent each upon the two counties, and 15 per cent upon the railroad company-does he now expect to pass this legislation to pay this money to the certain towns?

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman has not read the Massachusetts statute carefully.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think I have. Mr. WEEKS. It provides that the counties shall proceed with the building of the bridge, and when the bridge is constructed they shall be reimbursed by assessing the State 45 per cent of the cost, each of those towns 20 per cent of the cost, and the Old Colony Street Railway Co. 15 per cent.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it provides the money shall first be paid, 50 per cent by each of those two counties.

Mr. WEEKS. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Secondly, that that expense shall ultimately be borne, 45 per cent by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent by the county of Plymouth, 20 per cent by the county of Norfolk, and 15 per cent by any street railway company that may apply for and receive the right to run a railroad line across the bridge.

Mr. WEEKS. The railway is located now. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Then it is further provided that this money, if any shall come from the United States contributed toward this general enterprise, shall be paid 45 per cent to the State of Massachusetts, 20 per cent to certain counties, 15 per cent to the railroad company, and none whatever to the towns of Hingham, Plymouth, or Quincy.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his version of the Massachusetts law. The money shall be paid first by the counties, and in the final settlement it is paid back to the counties in the proportions I have named.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do not desire to take up time unnecessarily, but-

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman is taking some of my time unnecessarily because he is wrong in his proposition. Now, I want to say one word more to the members of the committee, and that is this: This bill passed the Senate and the House in the last Congress. It received practically a unanimous report by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It reached the President on the last day of the session. The President, seeing an adverse report by the Chief of Engineers on technical grounds, did not sign the bill, but since that time, as I said the other day, that matter has been taken up by the Chief of Engineers and myself, and the President has stated in and I have his letter here—that he was in error in not signing the bill; that he believed the equities were sufficient and he would sign it if the bill were passed again. The bill has again been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce without any minority report. It has been as carefully investigated as any similar legislation since I have been a Member of this House, and I believe that the equities are sufficient to warrant the bill being passed to-day as they were at the last session. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. How much time has the gentleman used? The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes. Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Richardson] would like to occupy five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I have Mr. RICHARDSON. been very much surprised at the developments of this debate. And why am I surprised? This bill was thoroughly investigated in January, 1911, in a protracted, exhaustive hearing, and all phases of the question were carefully considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. After that hearing was over the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee took up the bill for consideration and made a favorable report on it, and, so far as I recollect, without dissent. Certainly there never has been a minority report. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] has just explained somewhat the history of the bill. It passed the House and likewise the Senate and went to the President, and he failed to sign the bill on account of the pressure on his time, and, merely glancing over it in the dying hours of the Sixty-first Congress, and seeing the recommendation made by the Chief Engineer of the Army, Gen. Bixby, he simply withheld his signature. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], the author of the bill, believing and realizing that great injustice had been done to these two towns, went with Gen. Bixby, the Chief of Engi-neers, to the President, and the result of that visit was the note that the gentleman from Massachusetts has put in the Record from the President of the United States, who is surely and certainly an eminent lawyer and a talented judge, saying that if he had known the facts of the case as they were he would have signed that bill. Gen. Bixby, the Chief Engineer, was present and made no objection. We have heard here a variety of views expressed during this protracted discussion.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has pictured in glowing and fervid terms the banks of that stream as covered with flower beds and meandering, shell-covered walks. He indulged in touching sentimentality—yea, indeed, poetic pathos—and we thought we saw canary birds there in their multicolored, swinging cages, caroling their enchanting songs. The able and vigilant chairman of the great Appropriations Committee has engaged in that kind of rhetoric in opposing this bill, which is to take from the Treasury of the country $15,000 to discharge a just and equitable obligation of the Government. And another gentleman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson]. has said on the floor of this House, as I understood him—and I can not quote him literally—that he is opposed to the Government being in copartnership with any individual or corporation, vet he was gently and kindly reminded that in his own State the Federal Government had contributed immense sums of money in partnership with the farmers in Mississippi to maintain and sustain the levees which protect not the navigation only but protect the crops of the Delta and save that country from destructive inundation. And yet the gentleman proclaims against Government ownership. The counties bordering on the Mississippi River have done their part well in meeting their share of this copartnership obligation with the Government.

Now, the question is asked, Mr. Chairman, seriously asked, in this discussion, What the real question is before this committee? Is it a question of the condemnation, that the Government paid a larger price for that land on either side of the banks of that stream or arm of the sea than was proper and right?

The Government has unquestionable authority, and nobody disputes it who is informed on the matter at all, that when it locates a naval magazine it has the right to buy the necessary land surrounding that magazine. It is not a question as to whether or not the Government made a bad trade when buying that land, or that men sold the land at a higher price to the Government than its assessed value. After having given a careful study to this bill when it was first before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I say that that has really no bearing upon the justice of this case. The question is not whether the Government made a good or bad trade in buying that land, but the real question is, as I understand it, that when the Government exercised its arbitrary and lawful and constitutional power to order that draw extended, it was bound to do equity and justice to the people of those two cities. If the draw was altered from 24 feet to 50 feet alone to accommodate the transportation facilities of the Government and not to benefit navigation, and thereby places a burden of taxation on the backs of the people of those two towns, without a shade of benefit to them, then I those two towns, without a shade of benefit to them, then I say the Government ought to bear its just part of the expense.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. You base your right to ask the Government to contribute any part of this on equity?

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that is the only question which is in this case.

is in this case.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman think because the Government orders a draw of 24 feet widened to 50 feet it ought to pay the entire cost of a bridge and convert it from wood into steel, 400 feet long? Does the gentleman think that is equity?
Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the Government must be placed in such a position as to do justice and equity to the citizens on whom it places an unjust burden in the exercise of its arbitrary power. That is this case, and my judgment is if there ever was a case that I have come across in my experience in Congress where the Government is called upon to do justice and equity to the people it is this one.

Mr. HAMLIN. But are we not to do equity to the other people of the United States? And does not the gentleman think we have a right to make them build a new bridge entirely?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is not the question.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is all there is to it. Mr. RICHARDSON. The question, in a nutshell, is whether those people are entitled to relief on account of the imposition of a burden upon them by the Government, not to their interest, not that they asked for it, but to the interest alone of the Government. That is the whole question.

Mr. Chairman, I desire once more to say that gentlemen in this discussion have read the strong and adverse terms of Gen. Bixby in opposing the proposition to have the Government pay a just proportion of the expenses of altering the length of the draw of this bridge. No one can possibly, in view of the law, deny that the Government can, over all navigable streams, order the removal of any obstructions on or across that stream that interferes with navigation, and going one step further, the Government expects those that brought those obstructions into existence must remove them at their own expense. But the question we are trying now is, If the Government does that really not in the interest of navigation, but because it has established a naval magazine above that bridge, which the people did not want, and the draw was too narrow for the Government boats to get through, and the people of those two towns are required to enlarge the draw, which enlargement does not help those citizens, not one iota commercially, socially, or otherwise, ought not the Government to pay its part of the expense and not arbitrarily throw all on the citizens? But let me call the attention of the committee to what Gen. Bixby, Chief Engineer, says in his report:

The existing law contemplates that the cost of making alterations in obstructive bridges when thus ordered shall be borne by the parties responsible for the maintenance of the structures. The proposition embraced in the bill is therefore distinctly at variance with the intent of the statute as interpreted by the department and by the courts, and should not be adopted unless some good reason exists therefor.

We concur in the correctness of the statement made by the Chief Engineer, but the Chief Engineer does not make his statement without qualifications—absolutely without any possible conditions. He says "unless some good reason exists therefor." We are seeking to bring this bill within that reasonable qualification made by the Chief Engineer.

Again, along this line of thought I call attention to the opinion of that great lawyer and judge-Judge Harlan-who to the date of his lamented death was accepted as one of the ablest justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. He said in the case of Union Bridge:

Some stress was laid in the argument upon the fact that compliance with the order of the Secretary of War will compel the bridge company to make a very large expenditure in money. But that consideration can not affect the decision of the questions of constitutional law involved. It is one to be addressed to the legislative branch of the Government. It is for Congress to determine whether, under the circumstances of a particular case, justice requires that compensation be made to a person or corporation incidentally suffering from the exercise by the National Government of its constitutional powers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the rest of my time, 15 minutes, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sher-

LEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this very long-drawn-out debate has now reached the point where the proponents of this measure undertake to prove that Congress has in the past done something equally culpable, if not more so, and therefore it should now commit such an offense. Precedent after precedent is cited here—precedents that are not in any sense on all fours with this case—to show that the Government has been more than liberal in the past and should not be a stickler now over a little matter of this kind.

The question is really very simple. There is no right, no vested interest, anywhere that has been interfered with by anybody. The bridges that were over this navigable stream were there simply by permission, and the right of the community to the use of those bridges was always subject to the superior right of the Government to obtain, on behalf of itself or any of its citizens, the navigability of that stream.

But we are now faced with two propositions. One is that inasmuch as the particular demand for the removal of this nuisance came from the Government, because of a Government arsenal there, therefore there is a particular equity; and, secondly, that inasmuch as certain land has been taken out of the taxable property of the State, an equity has again been created. To put it in another way, we are faced with the proposition that wherever the Government performs a governmental action which may not be of benefit to a particular community the Government should then pay that community.

Now, if that is coupled with the proposition that whenever the governmental activity is of peculiar benefit to a community the community should pay something for it, we would consider there was an opportunity for the balancing of equities, although it might require a master in chancery to arrive at a just decision. When Massachusetts got, as she has gotten, her full and complete share of the benefit from establishments of the Government, there was no disposition on the part of that great Commonwealth to come to the Federal Government and donate something for the benefit conferred. But now that she is required to bear something of the burden that is incident to government she insists that we must recompense her. recompense is to go, 40 per cent of it, to the State.

This arsenal was already in the State of Massachusetts, and at the instance of Massachusetts and the people of Chelsea it was removed from there and put in another part of the State. If anything is to be paid to this community, it seems to me it ought to come from the community of Chelsea, which urged the removal of the institution not for the benefit of the Government but for its own benefit.

Now, the fact is brought out here clearly that the land was originally assessed by the Government officers at $36,000, but knowing the greed of men when they come to sell to the Gov-ernment, knowing the disposition on the part of individuals to mulct the Government, they said it would take probably $70,000 to get the land, and when it came actually to getting $10,000 to get the land, and when it came actuarly to getting it it took $193,000. Now, $193,000 has been put into that community for land that could not possibly have been sold for more than one-fourth of that sum; certainly not for more than one-third of that sum.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. SHERLEY. I know it because I am willing to take the statement of the officers that this land was worth only $36,000. Mr. WEEKS. Has the gentleman himself seen that statement?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Mr. WEEKS. Whose statement was it?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was the statement made by the officers of the Navy, and, knowing the disposition to mulct the Government, they said it would probably take $70,000 to get it.

Mr. WEEKS. How does the gentleman know that that land would not have been sold for other purposes?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know it, but I am willing to accept the statement of disinterested officers of this Government, who would have no disposition and no reason to make a false statement.

Mr. WEEKS. What has all that to do with this?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am coming to that right now. It has this to do with it: One of the members of the committee claimed that there had been taken out of the community property that would otherwise have been subject to taxation, and that the burden of taxation was thereby removed from this section and placed upon the rest of it. I show you that instead of the wealth of the community having been abstracted from, it has actually been added to by the transaction. And yet because of the absence of taxation of this particular property you claim to base your equity

Mr. WEEKS. No; I beg pardon. Mr. SHERLEY. You may not have claimed that, but the advocates of the bill have been claiming it; and while I appreciate the fact that the gentleman is the head and front of this offending, he must not take exception if I undertake to answer the arguments of some others than himself.

The fact is that this is navigable water; that a Government engineer has stated that these bridges have long interfered with the navigability of it. But we are told that because the navigability is desired by the Government, which represents us all, it creates a different situation than if the navigability was desired by only a part of the whole. If a demand had been made, as it could have been made by anyone using that waterway, to have that obstruction removed, the War Department would have compelled the removal of it, and these men would not have had the face to come here and ask at the hands of Congress a contribution; but because the Government itself is the initial mover in the transaction, you have a situation so unique as to warrant us in paying for the new bridge. That is the claim made by the advocates of the bill.

Mr. MURRAY. May I suggest to the gentleman that the reason no private party did ask for the removal of the obstruction is because, in fact, it is not an obstruction. There is not enough commerce on that backwater to require any larger draw than the present one, and therefore the Government is imposing a burden from which we are trying to get some relief

Mr. SHERLEY. The fact is that this is navigable water and that it is used to some degree.

Mr. MURRAY. How much of a degree? Mr. SHERLEY. Just wait a moment, if you please.

Mr. MURRAY. But let us get the facts right. We can not get correct conclusions unless we get the facts right.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no hope of convincing the gentleman, but I have hope of using my time in this discussion.

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly; but I thought the gentleman yielded to me.

I did; and I want to answer the gentleman's question and I want to be given an opportunity of doing The fact is that the department states that it is navigable water and that it is used as such. The fact that it is not used more has resulted simply in giving you people a permissive right to maintain a nuisance longer than you ought to have had the right. It does not give you an equity when the occasion arises to abate that nuisance. Your whole predicate is wrong. It proceeds upon the idea that something has been taken from you which belongs to you, when in point of fact you have been permitted for years to maintain a nuisance that you had no real right in law to maintain in the first instance. [Applause.]

Will the gentleman permit one more question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

WEEKS. What has the gentleman to say as to Mr. Justice Harlan's opinion that Congress should determine the equities in each individual case similar to this?

Mr. SHERLEY. What Mr. Justice Harlan said was this, when it was urged that there was an equity: "This court can not consider that question. If there be such a question it is for Congress to determine." But there was not a line, there was not an intimation in that whole opinion that there necessarily was an equity. There was simply this statement: That if an equity existed it could not be considered in that court of

I say to you that we can not afford to let a community determine, or let this Congress determine, the particular harm that may come from a governmental agency, and then undertake to repay the community where the governmental agency happens to be located. That is one of the burdens that all communities. like all citizens, ought to bear as an incident to the Government. Has it gotten to the point that you are willing to accept, aye, to come and beg for all of the benefits that a great and glorious Government bestows upon you, and your patriotism is so small that it hesitates from assuming the slightest bur-den that that Government may impose? [Applause.] I am not willing to take any such position.

Oh, the matter is small; there has been much time wasted on it, the gentleman says. That may be true, and yet I notice that the gentleman considers it so important that he spent more time debating it than he did the great steel schedule that he says was put through the House with only five hours of debate. Whether a small matter or not, it is simply a question of bestowing a pure gratuity upon these people or doing our duty toward the rest of the people of America.

The very form of the bill-and I do not mean it in an offensive sense—is deceptive. Anybody reading the title of the bill would think it was necessary that Congress should take some action in order that this bridge might be reconstructed. The fact is that Congress does not need to move one iota in order to have the nuisance removed. What is asked here, under the guise of building a new bridge under the direction of the War Department, is a direct gift-45 per cent of it to the State, 20 per cent to each of two towns, and 15 per cent to the railroad company. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay this committee longer; the matter has been thrashed out in its entirety. It is plain. The whole question is whether we shall make a gift of a sum that may amount to $15,000, or run to much more than that to these different municipalities, to a State sovereignty and this railroad company. To my mind it establishes a really dangerous precedent, though I have no bugaboo notions about precedents. I believe that future Congresses are able to take care of themselves pretty well. I think we need not hesitate simply on that ground, but we ought to hesitate because the facts of the particular case make it wrong, irrespective of what influences it may have on legislation that is to come hereafter. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I assure my eloquent friend from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] that it is through no fault of mine that this debate has been drawn out as he complains.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not complain; it is the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not the fault of the gentleman from Massachusetts. For reasons that I did not understand, the opponents to this measure, who grew up rapidly, profusely, eloquently, and surprisingly, evinced a disposition to kill time in debating this bill, and we repeatedly stated that we had no disposition to cut them off or abridge their liberty, and we let them debate it two solid Calendar Wednesdays. On last Wednesday when their distinguished leader, the able gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], proposed to bring an end to the debate and put on a time limit, we had to beg and insist that the author of the bill [Mr. Weeks] and the chairman of the committee be allowed to be heard first, and he agreed to it; he conceded the justice of our demand by acknowledging that they had used the most of the time, and proposed that we use twice as much time to-day as they consume,

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed the eloquence of these distinguished gentlemen. I commend their professions of patriotism. I love their protestations of economy, and I am sure they are sincere. I can not deprecate or disparage anything of the sort, and I really hope and believe that when these eloquent and economical gentlemen "hear the watch dog's honest bark bay deep-mouthed welcome as they draw near home," with fat and juicy appropriations, they will prove their sincerity and consistency. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am not the champion of this bill. I am not its father, legitimate or putative. I did not intend to argue it here at all. I had no idea of such a thing. If I had supposed that gentlemen would make it the buffer of such prolonged showers of patriotism and eloquence I would not have called it up. I would have gratified the desire expressed indirectly by some of the gentlemen and put it off until after election, so that they might realize less excuse or necessity for profuse patriotism and economy and might not have fought the bill so lustily. [Laughter and applause.]

Now I am glad that my eloquent and distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. Bathrick] in his speech declaimed all right of any appropriation to carry home unless it is already in the law. If it is already in the law it will not be necessary for him to ask it of Congress. I assure my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] that when I first read this bill and Gen. Bixby's report I went off halfcocked just as he and others have done. At first blush, and without any consideration, I scented something wrong—awful, ruinous, unpatriotic, uneconomical, outrageous. I saw the word "Mass." [Laughter.] I had never outrageous. I saw the word "Mass." [Laughter.] I had never been educated to believe that "Mass." had been slighted by the Congress or neglected by the balance of the country. I also saw the word "railroad," and it rose up in terror and horror, with the features of robbery, and, with its clutches around my throat, was about to steam up and carry away the Treasury; and I said, "This is a bad bill, and I do not want it." [Laughter.] Then I did just what my distinguished friend Gen. Bixby and the President of the United States did.

I looked through it and said, "It is not in the law, and we can not do it "-just like some of these gentlemen did on first flush. But, Mr. Chairman, I looked into the matter further, and I found that although Massachusetts did not always do to suit me, yet that a Massachusetts Yankee would skin a Massachusetts Yankee as quick as he would skin me. I then went home to Georgia and from there to Kansas, bleeding Kansas, and I found there that some of my neighbors and the neighbors of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] would skin him and me as quickly as they would skin a Massachusetts Yankee [laughter], and all sectionalism went out of my heart. I assure the gentleman from Kansas that he is mistaken about this presenting a question of locality. It is a question of our willingness that our Government shall do right. When I looked into the fact further I discovered that that dreaded octopus was a little bit of a sickly, weazened, puny trolley railroad, trying to accommodate three or four country towns, and it could not build a whole bridge by itself, but it had to hang on to the public highway bridge as an appendage, and when the Commonwealth of Massachusetts undertook to apportion the percentages of interest in the entire cost of the bridge, found that it represented 15 per cent of the entire concernthe smallest, little, puny, weakly, insignificant octopus that ever was in the world. I then decided there was no use in my nursing prejudice any longer. Then I did what the President of the United States and Gen. Bixby afterwards did. I listened to the facts and heard the truth and had the courage to recognize and declare it.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be polite to my friend, but I am not a champion of this bill at all. I have yielded to everybody who wanted to debate it, and, ex necessitate, as chairman of the committee that has twice reported this bill, I am making this speech, not as a lawyer for or against the bill, but as a juror who has passed upon the case, and had his verdict unjustly assailed and criticized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, when I looked further into the matter I found what this very distinguished lawyer from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], whom I have held up here as a hero and as an idol, as a lawyer approaching as near perfection as anyone in this House, failed to discern the equitable character of this meritorious case. He, with that zeal acquired from long experience on the kicking end of the Committee on Appropriations [laughter], has lost sight of his legal acumen as an equity lawyer and he has failed to see the case. His task has been not so much to discern what ought to be paid as to find a way to avoid paying anything, if possible. I saw what he and the other gentlemen and the President and Gen. Bixby failed to see at first but the President and Gen. Bixby failed to acknowledge afterwards.

I found there was an equitable case, not a legal right. I found what any lawyer ought to have known, that if the law had said to pay it, we would not need this act of Congress. I found it was within the equitable jurisdiction of Congress, just as it is within the equitable jurisdiction of Congress to sit here and pass special pension acts for cases not provided for by general law, but which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Jackson] is never going to vote for any more, because they are not in the law. [Laughter.] If they were in the law, they would not have to be put into the law. Every lawyer and layman knows that "equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient." Therefore, equity looks into cases that are not covered by exact expressions of law, and wherever hardship has been inflicted by the harsh application of the written statute a court of equity—and Congress, sitting here as such—will grant relief and consider that done which ought to be done.

We find here that of late years the Secretary of War has the right to order the removal of obstructions in navigable streams. Up here in Massachusetts we found a little backwater marsh which, when the tide runs up, is large enough to float a ship and which by courtesy or long habit, good or bad, Massachusetts has got to calling a river, a dignity absolutely unjustified, in my judgment. We found, further, an old road across the upper end of that so-called river, and that ever since 1812, for exactly a century, there had been a bridge there. We found, further, one day a magazine situated down at Chelsea, a decent, respectable place, where good people live and do business. The magazine was a nuisance to them, and they instituted a propaganda to get rid of it. They thought they could find some little backwoods place, where it would be out of the way and disturb nobody, where they could unload it. They went up there above that bridge, where no ship but a little sand sloop had ever navigated. Even that little navigation had quit. Nobody ever sailed upon it but moon-struck lovers in boats and canoes seeking pleasure.

The Government placed that magazine there, and now gentlemen complain we ought not to help reconstruct this bridge because we paid for the land a goodly sum. I do not blame those people for asking a high price to locate that nuisance there. I would not have let it be put near my town for a million dollars. That is the reason it cost so much; it was obnoxious and objectionable. No boy or girl, unless they wanted to take a volcanic joy ride straight to heaven from a powder magazine, would ride up there. Now, it would be tempting fate by sailing into the jaws of danger and destruction. [Long laughter.]

The very character of the occupation, without any law, makes the naval magazine the sole occupant. The Navy Department went and built that. There was a draw in the bridge. It is acknowledged that the draw was big enough for the tugs that they were using, but it is stated that they could not haul as heavy loaded lighters as they wanted without a wider draw. They have taken the headwaters, which never were navigable for any business whatever, and they insisted that a bridge be reconstructed that never would have had to be done under any other circumstances, and the proposition is that our Government do something in the way of equity. Oh, the gentleman from South Dakota said if a private person had done that you would not. No; a private person could not have done it, either; a private person has not the power of the Government.

The Navy Department and the War Department represent the same thing; it is the Government of the United States. It puts out one arm and says, "I am run away from Chelsea. will impose myself on these people, even if I have to pay a high price for it, but then I will make the other arm of the Government remove this obstruction and fix this bridge, so that we can have it all to ourselves," and the same Government does it, The Secretary of War did not intend to perpetrate all the outrage. The Secretary of War said, "Just widen the draw." did not do what in late years he is authorized to do, order the removal of the obstruction. He did not take the extreme theoretical position assumed by some gentlemen, that we are entitled to have it opened regardless of everything and every-"No," he said, "widen your draw and continue to use your bridge, as you have done for a century." But those people said, "The bridge is so constructed that we can not increase the width of the draw to 50 feet without destroying the bridge. The bridge is so constructed that it will fall in if we widen the draw, and it will cost $100,000 to rebuild it." The Chief of Engineers said, "$20,000 will do the work." Your committee decided that in the difference of opinion between the War Department and the people interested in the bridge, a difference of $80,000, considering the circumstances that the Government had gone to a place unused and unoccupied by habitation, production, or commerce above that bridge and excluded everybody else and rendered the reconstruction of the bridge necessary, that the Government ought to pay something to help sustain the

When we look for precedents in equity we do not look for a case on all fours, as the lawyers say. If it was, it would go on the books and become a law. The precedent would become We simply look for analogous guides within the limits of which we will dispose of those cases where equity and good conscience demand some relief. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we look to the facts and learn the truth about it, what are the The unanimous report from our committee came into the Sixty-first Congress; that is, there was no minority report. The bill passed this House and went to the Senate and passed there. The President, reading the opinion of the Chief of Engineers superficially, without looking at the equity of the case as it was presented to the committee, allowed it to fail for lack of signature. He and Gen. Bixby and the author of the bill have had a conference, in which they have acknowledged their error and said it should have been signed and would be if it should be passed again. It came again before our committee. Being in the majority, my conscience was just like it was when I was in the minority, and my sense of right is just as acute and my courage just as strong before election as after. No man who feels that way and has faith in the intelligence and integrity of his constituents need grow hysterical about supporting this bill now any more than he would next fall,

If any Member finds himself in a different frame of mind no reflection on him is intended. He has the right to change. I have not changed, and may be a fool for not changing, but the facts are the same and the immutable principles of right and justice are the same—before and after election, whether in minority or majority. I am not afraid of any precedents. There can not be any precedent in equity, but if this Government ever again goes to a place where it is not needed and wanted because of the character of its work, and thereby imposes an unnecessary hardship upon communities or towns or little struggling corporations; if it does a wrong in the exercise of power under the law, let it do like an individual does, let it do right; and if the strict letter of the law does not provide for substantial equity according to good conscience, let Congress, in the exercise of its prerogative, do equity and say what shall be paid, and let justice be done though the heavens fall—whether in Massachusetts, Kansas, of even Georgia, where we sometimes think it proper for Congress to do something not already provided for by strict law. [Loud applause.] Mr. Chairman, I gave notice of an amendment which I wish to offer at the proper time. Let it be read under the five-minute rule. There is not much of it to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that under the rule when the debate is closed the bill will be read for amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Let the bill be read. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever there shall be fixed by the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts the proportion of the total expense toward the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, on Lincoln Street, in the town of Hingham, in said State, made necessary because of the erection of a naval magazine and for other governmental purposes, to be paid by the Old Colony Street Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, the town of Hingham, in Plymouth County, in said State, and the town of Weymouth and the city of Quincy, both in Norfolk County, in said State, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount not exceeding $50,000, and not, in any case, to exceed one-third of the sum necessary to reconstruct, alter, and repair said bridge as may be ascertained by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ADAMSON and Mr. SIMS rose.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a preferential motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not entitled to recognition

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "fifty" in line 6, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not couple the two motions together.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move, then, to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the enacting clause be stricken out. Mr. ADAMSON. Are we not entitled, Mr. Chairman, to perfect the bill before the Chair entertains that motion?

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 50, noes 80. So the motion was rejected.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WEEKS and Mr. SIMS as tellers.

So the motion was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that there were some committee amendments that will likely have to be considered first.

Mr. ADAMSON. They are both committee amendments, but y a clerical omission the one I offer now was not reported. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to have the other committee amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. WEEKS. 'Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Massachusetts," in line 1, page 2, insert "the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the counties of Plymouth and Norfolk."

Mr. WEEKS. In place of the words commencing with "the," in line 1, page 2, and down to and including the words "Norfolk County," in line 3.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is the committee that votes on this question, and nobody has heard his amendment or his explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Massachusetts," in line 1, page 2, insert the words "the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the counties of Plymouth and Norfolk."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is quite sure the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to offer that amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to add the words in place of the words commencing with "the town," in line 1, and down to and including the words "Norfolk County," in line 3 of page 2. Strike out one and insert the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, in relation to that amendment, that the payment as provided for in this bill would not go to those who are furnishing the money for the reconstruction of the bridge. From a reading of the original bill which was proposed in the Massachusetts Legislature, and which I have before me, and which I stated during my remarks provided that the town of Weymouth and the town of Hingham should each bear 20 per cent of the cost, I find I was in error when I attempted to correct the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Martin] in his statement regarding the communities that were to furnish the money. It is the county of Norfolk and the county of Plymouth, 20 per cent each, instead of the town of Hingham and the town of Weymouth, and that is the reason I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire on what page and line the amendment begins?

Mr. WEEKS. After the word "Massachusetts,' in line 1 on page 2.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, when I was debating this question on the floor of the House this afternoon, when there were very few Members present, I called attention to the fact that the bill in its present form would, in my opinion, be absolutely idle, because it proposes to appropriate money to municipalities that have nothing whatever to do with the construction of this bridge under the Massachusetts statute. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], in his closing speech, when I questioned him on the same subject, undertook to correct me, and stated that my version of it was incorrect. He has found now, I think, that it is as I said it was at that time.

I now have to say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment he proposes would not conform even now to the statute of Massachusetts. The statute of Massachusetts, passed July 20 last, appoints three men as a board of bridge commissioners and directs that they shall tear down these old bridges and build a new bridge at a cost not exceeding $80,000, the one-half of which expense shall be advanced by each of these two counties. It also provides that ultimately 45 per cent of the expense incurred shall be paid by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent by the county of Norfolk, 20 per cent by the county of Plymouth, and 15 per cent by any street railway company that may apply for and be granted a location on said bridge by the towns of Weymouth and Hingham; not 15 per cent to the Old Colony Railway Co., but to any such railway company as shall apply for and receive the right of way to run a railway over there. It is a very peculiar provision in this act, which suggests, to my mind, that this Old Colony Railway Co. expects to go out of business, so far as the transportation of passengers across that bridge is concerned.

Section 4 of this Massachusetts act reads:

The said bridge commissioners are hereby authorized to take in fee simple, or to acquire by purchase or otherwise, any lands with the structures thereon and any property or property rights, including the location of any street railway company, which, in their judgment, may be required in the building of said bridge.

In other words, as a part of this expenditure involved in tearing down this bridge and building a new one they are authorized to acquire the right of way of a railway company; and when they get the apportionment of the cost, the apportionment is 45 per cent to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent to the county of Norfolk, 25 per cent to the county of Plymouth, and 15 per cent not to this Old Colony Railway Co., to which the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to appropriate 15 per cent of this money, but 15 per cent is to go to-

Any street railway company that may apply for and be granted a location on said bridge by the towns of Weymouth and Hingham in the manner provided by law.

In other words, with a part of the fund that we are asked to contribute, the commissioners are authorized to buy new approaches and assess other property, including the rights of way of railway companies, and to make payment for this expense.

This Old Colony Railway is to pay no part, but 15 per cent is to be paid by such railway company as shall obtain a right of way to run a line of cars across that bridge. Then the act of the Massachusetts Legislature provides:

That any sums that may be received from the United States in reimbursement of these expenditures shall be distributed as follows: Fortyfive per cent to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 20 per cent to the county of Norfolk, 20 per cent to the county of Norfolk, 20 per cent to the county of Plymouth, and 15 per cent to the street railway company—

Referred to in this section which I have already read, which is the street railway company which may apply for and receive a right of way over the bridge.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course we are not bound by the act of the Massachusetts Legislature. The gentleman does not understand that this bill is an appropriation of money.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It authorizes the appropriation of money upon the happening of certain contingencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think we are quite competent to protect ourselves against paying any money to the Old Colony Street Railway Co. if that company does not contribute toward this bridge? We have to make the appropriation hereafter, and can do as we please about making the appropriation. We certainly will not make an appropriation at any time unless we have facts before us indicating to whom the money should go.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is very true; and when we do come to act on the appropriation the law authorizing the appropriation is the law that will govern that appropriation, unless it be changed; and I suggest that it is very poor legislation to provide for an authorization that probably may have to be amended in form before the money is appropriated.

Mr. WEEKS. May I interrupt the gentleman from South Dakota to say that the street railway company which now has a location there is the Old Colony Street Railway Co. It is not the policy of the State of Massachusetts to grant locations to companies that are in competition, and I assume that that would be the company that would make application for this location. If the gentleman thinks that the Government will be better protected by substituting the words "the street railway company that makes application and contribution for this pur-

I have no objection to that change.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think that would be better legislation; but I should like to ask the gentleman, who is familiar with these circumstances, for what purpose it is provided that the bridge commissioners, as a part of the cost of tearing down and rebuilding this new bridge, may have authority to buy new land and structures, including, as the language says, the location of any street railway company?

Mr. WEEKS. I assume that the bridges, being entirely different structures, situated side by side, and as the street rail-way company is to use the bridge which is to be constructed, and that bridge alone, it may be necessary to purchase additional land. I do not know about that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The street railway company has been notified to remove its obstruction to this channel?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that if my recollection is correct, if the street car company goes upon the bridge, it will have to be wider than the present highway bridge, and will be over on the land now owned by the street railway company, for the abutment of their bridge. The gentleman understands that there are two bridges, side by side.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I understand that thoroughly. Mr. MANN. And when they construct the highway bridge they will probably have to make an arrangement by which, if street railway company goes upon this bridge, they will acquire the street railway company's property for their own

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. This all illustrates to what length of absurdity we are asked to go in going into partnership with various municipalities to rebuild two new bridges across a stream, one of the existing bridges being now a hundred years old, made of wood and 400 feet long, when the Government has only notified them to change the draw from 24 feet in width to 50 feet in width.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it is wholly within our power not to make any appropriation for the Old Colony Street Railway Co., if they are not to be the ones, and that we could not make an appropriation under this authorization to any other railway company? And that being so, how are we injured by it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will throw out for the gentleman's consideration this query: If we pass this legisla-tion and these parties act upon it and remodel these structures according to this authorization, will they not have a stronger equity than is here now, and will we not have a great deal of difficulty in refusing to follow up this authorization by an appropriation, if the conditions are fully met by the parties?

Well, they could not be fully met under the gen-Mr. MANN. tleman's position. We expressly provide by name for one company, and the gentleman says that company may not be the one. No one else can get it. We will not appropriate unless they do the work. It is perfectly plain.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Much has been said during the debate by the gentleman from Massachusetts and others about the hardship done by the order of the Secretary of War to the towns of Hingham and Weymouth because it has deprived these two towns of taxable property amounting to about $700 a year. As I understand, from hearing the reading of the Massachusetts statute, that State has not required these two towns to assume any part of this responsibility.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. These two towns have not been required to assume any responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more. He has made a study of this question. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to this request, but I propose, if possible, to see that this day is not spent without having a vote on this bill.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina ob-

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. From the time when this bill was first brought up for consideration, on Calendar Wednesday two weeks ago, and frequently since, we have been told that the two towns of Weymouth and Hingham were to be deprived of property, the taxation of which amounted to about $700 a year, and were also to be compelled to pay for the bridge; and I suppose that it is for this alleged reason that these two towns are specifically named in this bill as recipients of some of the money which it is proposed now to appropriate. But the statute of Massachusetts read by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] shows that these two towns are not made to assume the burden, for that statute does not mention them, but, on the contrary, specifically puts the burden of paying for the bridge upon the State of Massachusetts, the two counties of Norfolk and Plymouth, and the railroad company. Thus it appears that these towns of Weymouth and Hingham are not to be called upon to pay for the bridge, despite the language of the bill and all that has been said here by its friends.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And, if the gentleman will allow me, the act of the State of Massachusetts defining who shall pay for these bridges was passed July 20 last, six days before the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. And yet the Senate passed and sent over here a bill which gave the House to understand that these two towns of Hingham and Weymouth were to be made to pay a very considerable part of the cost of this bridge, although, as a matter of fact, a law had already been passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts requiring only the State, the county of Norfolk, the county of Plymouth, and the railroad company to pay for it. The bill now before the House, like the one which passed the Senate and the House at the last session, though not intended to deceive, does nevertheless deceive any man who reads it unless, like the gentleman from South Dakota, he has made a study of the question and unearthed that Massachusetts statute.

This is not all. The distinguished officer of the United States Government authorized to investigate this subject for us and for the people of the United States, whom Congress represents as trustee—the Chief of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army-officially reports that this bill ought not to pass.

The committee which reported the bill says, in its report, that good engineering requires that the bridge be torn down and a new one constructed in its place. But has any Government engineer so reported? On the contrary, the Chief of Engineers reports that the only thing which the Secretary of War has ordered to be done is to widen the draw from 25 feet to 50 feet. Presumably the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War investigated this subject and knew what ought to be and could be done. Presumably the Secretary of War did wisely in ordering only the widening of the draw from 25 to 50 feet and in not requiring the construction of a new bridge.

The Chief of Engineers reports that the total cost of widening the draw as ordered would not much exceed $20,000. But this bill is brought in here, proposing that because of some sup-posed equities of the railroad company and of the two towns of Hingham and Weymouth, that the United States Government shall appropriate not to exceed $50,000 as its share of the money to be paid, not for widening the draw, but for constructing a new bridge.

I can not vote for the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that we can not enjoy the soothing consolation of the support of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper]. not care, however, to thrash over old straw by replying to that part of his speech which rehashes all that has been said by gentlemen opposed to this bill for three Calendar Wednesdays. I do not understand his argument that it vitiates this bill because under its provisions the money goes to two counties instead of to two towns. I do not know but that I like a good, substantial, honest yeomanry population in a county as well as I like to see them huddled up in little towns or cities, where they carry their provisions home daily in paper sacks. I do not see how it hurts this bill if the money does go to two counties instead of to two towns in those counties.

As to the ignorance of the Massachusetts Legislature, I want to assure the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have heard Massachusetts people accused of everything in the world except ignorance. If the Massachusetts Legislature is not astute enough to prepare by statute to receive what Congress is willing to authorize as a matter of equitable right in this case, it will not be our fault.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 and insert:
"That whenever the Secretary of War shall report that the board of bridge commissioners, appointed by the General Court of Massachusetts, by act of July 20, 1911, for the purpose of constructing a new bridge over the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts, has so constructed the said bridge as to leave a suitable draw therein at least 50 feet in width, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to one-half of the cost of the construction of the said draw, not to exceed the sum of $10,000, the said appropriation to be paid as follows: Forty-five per cent to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. 20 per cent to the county of Norfolk, 20 per cent to the county of Plymouth, and 15 per cent to such street railway company as may apply for and be granted a location on said bridge by the towns of Weymouth and Hingham in the said State."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that from the time this bill was pressed in the Senate it has developed a comedy of errors. It was passed on July 26, 1911. On the 20th day of the same month, six days previous, the Legislature of Massachusetts had already taken action regarding the reconstruction of these bridges, and had required them to be constructed at a cost of not to exceed $80,000 and appointed three commissioners for that purpose, and had said from whom the money should come by which to construct the bridge and to whom any money that Congress might appropriate toward the enterprise should be paid.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes,

Mr. MANN. This bill, as I understand, was reported without a minority report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] is a distinguished member. Why did not the gentleman have the changes made before the bill was reported to the House's

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the question that the gentleman from Illinois asks me has already been answered in full detail in the earlier stages of this debate, and I do not deem it necessary to make further statement regarding either my own position or the position of any of the other members on the committee.

Mr. MANN. I think we are entitled to know.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the gentleman had been listening to the debate he would have known. It is in the

Mr. MANN. It may be that I did not listen to all that my friend from South Dakota said, although I usually listen with more respect than he is showing now.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman has been told privately by me the same information, practically, within the last 30 minutes, in this room.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has told me that he was not there, and I wondered if the committee always had a comedy of errors when the gentleman was not present.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentle-man, in my time, has, contrary to the rules of the House and without justification, told the explanation that I made to him privately within 30 minutes, and which I made on the floor of the House apologetically, as to why I with other members of the minority are opposing this vicious legislation. I want to say that this bill came out of the committee last summer at a time when the House was adjourning for three days at a time, awaiting the action of the Senate on tariff legislation. This was during the special session, when it was generally understood that committees would not act on general legislation; and not anticipating any public measures of this kind I was about other business, excused, as I had a right to be. Mr. Chairman, I have now had to take two or three minutes to meet what otherwise would be misunderstood by the interruption of the gentleman from Illinois, contrary to the rules Now, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the of the House. amendment which I have prepared conforms precisely with the requirements of the statute of Massachusetts and the legislation which has been passed upon this subject and makes the same parties beneficiaries. All that we have asked of these municipalities and counties in regard to this bridge of over 400 feet long is to change one span from 24 feet wide to 50 feet wide, and the Chief of Engineers of the Army reports that a span 50 feet wide could be put in there at not exceeding $20,000, and-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I ask for one minute more. Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. One minute is all I desire. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for one minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Now, the Chief of Engineers of the Army, in making that report that this could all be done for $20,000, stated that if Congress was to pay anything at all it ought not to pay to exceed one-half. The amendment which I have offered authorizes the payment of one-half the cost of the construction of that new draw, a steel draw 50 feet wide, not to exceed $10,000, and is in exact accordance with the statute as to who are the beneficiaries and is in exact accordance with the report as to what would be the cost.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has offered this amendment certainly gives to these people infinitely more than any sort of equity could possibly entitle them to. Here is a wooden structure 100 feet long, 24 feet wide-

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I obtained from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] a statement that he got from a gentleman in the gallery, saying that the length of the bridge is 400 feet.

Mr. SISSON. That the bridge is 400 feet long! If that is true this report is not the truth. If it is true that we have got to ask the opinion of people in the gallery, then we ought not to pass this until we do get the facts. [Applause.] Now, the statement we have before this House is that the bridge is not Now, the worth, in its present condition, more than $10,000. That is the full value of the bridge. Now, what is proposed? That you take out of the Federal Treasury $15,000 to pay on this wooden bridge, the entire value of which is not more than $10,000. In other words, you are asking the Federal Government to pay $15,000 as a gift or graft or gratuity. You put that amount in this bill and it goes to another body, and it goes in conference, and the amount may get to be $33,500 or $50,000. There is no justice, no fairness, no equity-even if we admit the contentions that these gentlemen make that there is an equity in this case against the Government-to give them more than one-third of the present value of the present structure, which would be $3,333.33. I deny that there is equity even to that extent. have some information that there are other bridges that will come into this House if this passes, and they will demand that they be treated just like the Weymouth people have been treated, and that will make the Weymouth proposition look like 30 cents if you begin thus to loot the Treasury for the benefit of private citizens and corporations in the States. want to establish a precedent, then pass this bill; but when you do, it will rise up to haunt you in the future. [Applause.] There can be no equity here that would possibly give these people more than one-third of the present value, even if an equitable condition existed as is advanced here by the proponents of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. ADAMSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield? Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, who rose first

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the gentleman think we have spent about enough time upon this bridge proposition and we had better defeat it here and be done with it?

Mr. SISSON. I would like to defeat it and be done with it. but if you do not spend some time now to defeat this one you will spend many hours in the future on other propositions that will be infinitely worse than this. You need not tell me that when a railroad shall build a bridge across a stream in accordance with the plans and specifications of the War Department and a few years after that navigation should be such as to demand a change of the structure, if they build it according to the instructions of the War Department, they would not have infinitely more equity than exists in this case. They would. This the proponents of this bill know. Every railroad company in the United States knows it. Thus this strong support.

Mr. THOMAS. Why should we talk along in this manner?

Why not vote and defeat it, and be done with it?

Mr. SISSON. For no other reason than to give expression to my individual opinion, and I can only delay it a minute or two longer, as I had only five minutes to start with. But if delaying this bill on every Calendar Wednesday from now on to the close of the session could accomplish the defeat of it, we ought to do it. I do not believe in voting for this proposition because some Member comes to you and electioneers with you for it. I do not believe this Congress ought to permit that sort of thing to control them. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] is a popular and a good man, and his popularity is doing this bill infinitely more good than the merits of it. On its merits it could not get a dozen votes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, having heard a five-minute speech from a proponent of the amendment and five minutes from an opponent, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Martin].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That said work shall proceed under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that section 2 be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that section 2 of the bill be stricken out. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 2 of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that as soon as the gentleman from Tennessee has been heard for five minutes that we have a vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. That motion is not in order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I hope Members of the House will notice what this section is. This will not affect the payment of the money that is provided for in the bill at all. The Secretary of War, by the letter of the Chief Engineer, says under no circumstances ought the construction of this bridge be placed under the War Department. I hope the gentleman from Massa-chusetts himself will not insist on that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. SIMS. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Is not the purpose of section 2 to give the Government of the United States control over the character of the bridge to be built? Is not that essential?

Mr. SIMS. This is not a bridge to be used by the Government.

Mr. MANN. It is the bridge where the Government wants to get through the draws, and it is very essential that the Government have control.

Mr. SIMS. If they do not make it 50 feet wide, it will not conform to the order of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that under the general bridge act all the Government does is to pass upon the plans for the bridge. It does not superintend the construction of it.

Mr. SIMS. The Government does not want to have anything to do with this bridge. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] has introduced a bill to build a bridge of a certain kind, and asks for a certain amount of money to be contributed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that the only authority to rebuild this bridge is section 2.

Mr. SIMS. Not to rebuild at all. There is no order from the War Department to rebuild the bridge at all, but to widen the draw to 50 feet, and all they have to do is to comply with the order.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will yield for a moment, I think he misapprehends the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Unless you comply with the general bridge act, the bridge would not be a lawful bridge, however you have constructed it. It is necessary on account of legality that section 2 be in there, and the plans approved by the War Department.

Mr. SIMS. Why does the Chief of Engineers say the Government has nothing to do with it, and asks that that part of the bill be stricken out?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, that section was inserted by the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee when the gentleman was present, and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee, including the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], at the time. If the structure was authorized at all, the plans ought to be approved by the War Department, and ought to come under the general bridge act.

Mr. SIMS. Not this identical bill, but one just like it, was pending then, having this identical clause in it, before the general bridge law was passed that the gentleman referred to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken. When the proposition came before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce section 2 was not in it, and after that section was inserted the gentleman joined in a unanimous report thereon.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will answer my question I would be glad.

Mr. SIMS. I thought I had answered the gentleman's ques-

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman asked why the Chief of Engineers had made such a report as that. The Chief of Engineers in his report takes the position that the Government does not need that bridge there, and does not use it, and does not want it, and does not know what to do with it, and advocates that we brand this with the word "charity."

The committee disregarded that view of the subject, and in order to make a legal structure of a bridge that had already been condemned by the War Department, that bridge must be constructed in accordance with the provisions of the general bridge law, and therefore we put that section in, and the gentleman assented to that action.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes in which to finish.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill proceeds on the idea that the Government ordered a new bridge.

'Mr. ADAMSON. No; it ordered them to correct the old bridge by widening the draw. They find that they can not do that without building a new bridge, and they had to get authority from the Congress and from the War Department to build that new bridge; otherwise it would not be a lawful structure. Therefore we put in the section providing that it must be built in accordance with the general bridge act. In order that it may be lawful it is necessary to build it so.

Mr. SIMS. If the bridge is built in accordance with the act of Congress directing it to be built in a certain way, it certainly would be lawful.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger]?

Mr. SIMS. I will yield in a moment. The object of the bill is absolutely and clearly to get money out of the Treasury of the United States, and it is not necessary at all, in order to get that money, to have governmental supervision of this bridge. The order of the War Department was to widen the draw from 24 to 50 feet; and if, in widening the draw, they build a new bridge instead of merely widening the old bridge, why in the world should the Government supervise the building of that bridge any more than is required to see that the draw should be 50 feet wide as required? I think the section should be stricken out.

Mr. BERGER, Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; I yield.
Mr. BERGER. Just for a question on economy. I want to ask this question of the gentleman from Tennessee. It costs about $6,000,000 to run this Congress annually-

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh. no!

Mr. BERGER. And it costs about $30,000 a day, counting 200 working days in the year. Now, we have spent three days in the consideration of this bridge bill, and at that rate it makes $90,000. Those people in Massachusetts are asking for $15,000 as the Government's share in the building of this bridge, and we are spending enough time on this one bill to build six bridges at that rate. I ask this question, Is that good economy? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that the reason why the gentleman from Wisconsin is wasting still more time?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it takes much less time to vote on this amendment than it does to talk about it. I move to strike out the section for the reasons I have given. I regard that section as superfluous and useless, and I have founded my opinion and my statement upon the statement of the Secretary of War in reporting upon this identical bill-a statement which is made a part of the report in this case. If that is not good authority I am not responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims]. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with all amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The question being taken, Mr. SIMS demanded a division, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3024) to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and amendments be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and on that I demand the yeas and nays

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

Mr. ADAMSON. I make the point of order that there is no such committee as the one named by the gentleman. The gentleman said the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THOMAS. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair corrected the gentleman's motion in his statement of it.

Mr. THOMAS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 13 Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

The question being taken, the motion to recommit was re-

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it. Mr. ADAMSON. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 83. Mr. CULLOP, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. SHERLEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bills (8. 4463 and 8. 4922) which authorize the appointment of Shepler Ward FitzGerald and Alden George Strong to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army, reports them back to the Senate with the recommendation that action upon them be indefinitely postponed, and offers the following report in explanation of the bill herewith, which is submitted in the nature of a substitute for the two bills above referred to. Mr. FitzGerald and Mr. Strong were regularly examined for appointment from civil life to the grade of second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, under a provision of the Army bill approved March 3, 1911, which reads as follows:

"Provided, That hereafter vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant occurring in any fiscal year shall be filled by appointment in the following order, namely: First, of cadets graduated from the United States Military Academy during that fiscal year; second, of enlisted men whose fitness for promotion shall have been determined by competitive examination; third, of candidates from civil life between the ages of 21 and 27 years. The President is authorized to make rules and regulations to carry these provisions into effect."

However, in both cases the age limit of 27 years was passed between the time of taking the examinations and the time the War Department announced the names of the successful candidates, Mr. FitzGerald having reached the age limit on November 11, 1911, and Mr. Strong on January 1, 1912. In the case last mentioned the President's nomination for the young man's appointment had actually been received by the Senate, but, owing to the holidaty recess, confirmation did not take place until January 8, 1912. The War Department, therefore, has held that commissions, in these cases can not issue, the Judge Advocate General, in deciding the earlier of the two cases (that of FitzGerald), having said:

"The value of a commission, as evidence, will be serfo

Another case similar to that of Mr. FitzGerald is that of Mr. Alden George Strong, who was examined in September and whose nomination was sent to the Senate on December 21, 1911, but who was not confirmed until January 8, 1912. In the meantime, on January 1, 1912, Mr. Strong had become 27 years of age, and it is now held that a commission can not be issued to him.

LEASE OF SCHOOL LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2577) authorizing the lease of school lands for public-park purposes by the State of Washington for a longer period than five years, and I submit a report (No. 271) thereon. It is a bill of a few lines, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING HEARINGS AND RECOMMITAL OF THE PRINTING BILL.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 199, submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Richardson] January 30, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as fellows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Printing, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to send for persons and papers, to administer eaths, to employ stenographers from time to time to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittees thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator in charge of the resolution what is the emergency or the necessity for this inquiry? Mr. BRIGGS. I will let the chairman of the Committee on Printing answer.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say

Mr. CULBERSON. I addressed my question to whoever has charge of the matter. I did not know who presented the reso-

Mr. BRIGGS. I made the report. The urgency consists in the fact that hearings have been asked on the proposed new printing law. The committee, I understand, have already had hearings, and they desire prompt action in order that they may proceed with their work.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the resolution, with that explanation.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to the resolution, but I should like to inquire from the chairman of the Committee on Printing as to the hearing that is provided for in the resolution, Is it supposed to furnish a basis for the bill that he brought into the Senate the other day and tried to get the Senate to

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Nebraska, I will state that the Plate Printers' Union desired a hearing on the printing bill before the Committee on Printing. that hearing and we held our first meeting. We did not expect that the witnesses would be sworn, and the committee had no authorization to swear them, but the attorney for the plate printers desired that the witnesses be sworn. We simply came into the Senate with a resolution and asked the Senate for which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse re- authority to swear witnesses and to pay the expenses of the stenographers for reporting the hearings out of the contingent fund of the Senate. That is the only item that we have in mind.

Mr. BROWN. I congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Printing in at last providing for an agency by which they may investigate the facts on which to rest the bill. I was surprised the other day to find my good friend from Utah insisting on taking up the bill when there had been no hearing at all on the proposition. I do not yet understand how it was possible for the chairman of the Committee on Printing to bring in a bill with a provision which revolutionizes the entire system and policy of the Government without having had a hearing and without his committee having had some authority to summon witnesses and take testimony.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Utah if the bill which has been reported to the Senate, and which he now proposes to investigate, has been recommitted to

Mr. President, it has not been recommitted, but Mr. SMOOT. that would not preclude a hearing if the committee desired it. It is upon this question that the hearing will be had.

In answer to the Senator from Nebraska, wherein he states that there has been no hearing, I do not want to have any mis-understanding with him or with the country, and I will state that if the Plate Printers' Union had asked a hearing of the committee it would have been granted to them just as willingly at any time before the bill was reported to the Senate as it was granted after the bill was reported here. I am not going to find any fault or make any criticism. I stated at the opening meeting the other day to the representatives of the Plate Printers' Union that they could have all the hearings they want, and that there should be no one excluded from giving whatever testimony he wants, and, Mr. President, I feel that way now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it strikes me as an anomaly to have a bill reported to the Senate and, while the bill is pending in the Senate, for the committee, which is in duty bound to pass upon the merits of the bill, to then take evidence, with the bill no longer before the committee.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Mr. GALLINGER. Missouri permit me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir. Mr. GALLINGER. I chance to be a member of the Committee on Printing. I have felt all along that it would have been better to have had these hearings in the first instance; and I feel so now. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri, so far as I am concerned, and I think the other members of the committee will agree with me in this matter, that the bill may well be recommitted to the committee for further consideration. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the chairman will make that

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be recommitted to the committee. The committee has no desire whatever to do other than to give every man a hearing who wishes to be heard. Mr. President, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REED. I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri retains the floor.

Mr. REED. I merely want to conclude my remark. What I wanted to say is that I was not in the least attempting to criticize the committee, but in view of the fact that they are going to have hearings, they ought to have the subject matter before the committee upon which the hearings are to be held, and it ought not to be prejudged by a report already made. was about to say that I thought the proper course would be to have the bill recommitted, and I think that request would be properly made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that this is a proceeding which is constantly had in the Senate, and I have no objection to a recommittal of the bill. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that Senate bill 4239, Order of Business 173, be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous' consent that the bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BROWN. I do not make any objection, because I understand by the motion of the Senator from Utah the bill is to go back to the Committee on Printing. The bill as reported is entitled "A bill to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications." My recollection is that subject was intrusted to a joint committee to codify and revise the printing laws of the country and never was committed to the efforts of the Printing Committee of the Senate.

I will suggest further to the Senator, so long as he seems willing now to have things take their proper course, why should not this subject with reference to the engraving and printing of the currency be referred to the Committee on Finance? That is the committee that always has had jurisdiction. The Printing Committee never on earth before investigated that subject. Reports on it heretofore have been made always by the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House and by the Committee on Finance here. It seems to me that that part of the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that this bill has not been reported without consideration, nor investigation or hearing. months past the committee has been engaged in investigating the matters involved in the bill. The bill is the result of their investigation and has had consideration. The committee had experts before it and went into the whole subject of public printing, and it is a mistaken idea of the Senator that the bill was reported without any sort of investigation or hearing. have been practically for six months or more engaged in that work.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that no testimony had been taken on this subject of currency printing. He comes in here now and confesses by his motion to recommit that his committee has had no power to summon witnesses or produce papers, and he now asks that power from the Senate. Of course he ought to have it, and he ought to have had it before.

Mr. SMOOT. As I stated before, we have had hearings on this question, but the witnesses were not subpenaed. They were not under oath, but they gave their testimony to the committee. The representatives of the printers' union wanted to have the witnesses sworn before they testified, and the committee granted their request. It is for that purpose that this resolution has been brought before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

Without objection, the resolution reported by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] is agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 181, submitted by Mr. Root January 11, 1912, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Industrial Expositions be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 192, submitted by Mr. McCumber January 22, 1912, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oath, and to employ from time to time a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

ATCHAFALAYA ENTRANCE CHANNEL, LA.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4367) to provide for the establishment of aids to navigation in Atchafalaya Entrance Channel, La., to report it without amendment and submit a report (No. 267) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton] to the report.

Mr. THORNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $35,000 to establish aids to navigation in Atchafalaya Entrance Channel, La., at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & PUGET SOUND RAILWAY CO.

I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4301) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 265) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to make and execute a lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Washington, of a tract of land lying in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, containing an approximate area of 40 acres, lying northerly of the right of way now owned by the railway company, granted by the act approved May 11, 1906, and also a right of way not exceeding 50 feet in width extending from the present right of way at a point near the westerly boundary of the reservation in an easterly and northeasterly direction to the tract, a distance of approximately 3½ miles, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. THORNTON. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2654) providing for the appointment of an additional professor of mathematics in the Navy, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 266) thereon. I will state that a similar bill passed both Houses in a previous Congress, but too late to be signed by the President. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one additional professor of mathematics in the Navy, who shall be an extra number in the corps of professors of mathematics, and who shall, when appointed, take rank at the foot of the list of officers in said corps. Such appointment may be made when the proposed appointee shall be found mentally, morally, and physically qualified therefor, and shall also establish professional fitness, in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, as an instructor in the Spanish language, and the appointment authorized shall be held and considered as filling the next vacancy among the regular members of the corps when such vacancy occurs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the Volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) for allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 12), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Mr. JONES submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 13), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to submit, as early as practicable, an estimate of the cost of dredging a strip of land separating Padilla Bay from Saratoga Passage, so as to obtain a suitable channel for navigation, as well as an estimate of the cost of improving the Cap Sante waterway, at Anacortes, Wash.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the resolution I send to the desk. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 202), as follows: Whereas the Finance Committee of the Senate as at present organized is not in harmony with the views of the Senate regarding tariff legislation:

*Resolved, That two additional members be added to the Finance Committee, one to be selected by the Progressive Republicans and one by the Democrats.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is liable to give rise to debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply desire to announce that I would like to have the resolution lie on the table, and that I will bring it up for consideration at an early date.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of us were taken by surprise when

Mr. NEWLANDS. For the word "legislation" substitute "reduction." I had the impression that the copy I sent to the desk was all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will again be read. The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the Finance Committee of the Senate as at present organized is not in harmony with the views of the Senate regarding tariff reduction:

Resolved, That two additional members be added to the Finance Committee, one to be selected by the progressive Republicans and one by the Democrats.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks that the resolution be printed and lie on the table. Without objection, that course will be taken.

REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Mr. PENROSE. I submit, for reference to the Committee on Printing, a resolution authorizing the printing of extra copies of the report of the Postmaster General.

The resolution (S. Res. 204) was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Printing, as

Resolved, That there be printed and delivered to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads 20,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Postmaster General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911.

STREET CAR LINES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 200), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to communicate to the Senate, at as early a day as practicable, their views as to the necessity of establishing additional street car lines in the District, the routes over which they should be built, and whether they should be extensions of existing lines or independent companies, with blue prints accompanying.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. DIXON. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to submit to the Senate as early as practicable, a statement of the number of acres of public land withdrawn by Executive order or otherwise in the State of Montana under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 22, 1910, and June 25, 1910, and for what purposes such withdrawals have been made; also what amount of land so withdrawn for classification, if any, has been classified and restored to entry; and when, in his judgment, the remainder of these withdrawn lands will be classified and restored to the operations of the public-land laws. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 201), as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that the Secretary has already submitted such a report, and he will find it in Document No. 317, House of Representatives. It covers not only the lands in Montana, but in all the other States of the Union.

Mr. DIXON. My attention has just been called to the letter of the Secretary, under date of December 8, and I notice that in the statement submitted by the Secretary there is included only a list of lands withdrawn. The resolution I have just submitted calls on the Secretary for information as to lands that have been classified. We know the amount of lands that have been withdrawn. This document conveys no information that was not open to practically every Member of the Senate before. The resolution I have submitted asks the Secretary to submit information regarding the State of Montana alone. This document shows that about 18,000,000 acres have been withdrawn, but it does not show the number of acres classified. Eighteen months have elapsed since then, and, as we understand, no classification has been made. But all these lands have been withheld from entry.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the Senator from Montana if he has any objection to including North Dakota?

Mr. DIXON. I should be very happy to have North Dakota

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that no Senator objects to the present consideration of the resolution, and the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "Montana" insert "and North Dakota."

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the consideration of the resolution, but I simply want to understand it. I understand that the resolution is based upon the withdrawal act, wherein the Secretary was instructed to make reports annually of the lands withdrawn.

Mr. DIXON. We know how much land has been withdrawn, but we want to know how much has been classified.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the resolution. Mr. BORAH. I should like to suggest an amei I should like to suggest an amendment to include Idaho.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Strike out "and," before the words "North Dakota," and insert, after "North Dakota," "and Idaho."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GAMBLE. I offer an amendment to include also the State of South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Insert, after "Idaho," the words "and South Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands suggests that the resolution be amended so as to include all the public-land States.

Mr. SMOOT. All of the States that have lands withdrawn? Mr. DIXON. All of the States that have lands withdrawn. I will include that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suggest how he wants to have the resolution amended?

Mr. SMOOT. So as to include all of the States that have public lands in them.

Mr. DIXON. That will include many.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. After the words "South Dakota" insert the words "and all other States in which public lands have been withdrawn.'

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the amendments presented are agreed to and the resolution as amended is agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. The resolution should be further amended. I suggest that we simply strike out all of the enumerated States and make it general.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none. The resolution as thus amended is agreed to.

The resolution as agreed to is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to submit to the Senate, as early as practicable, a statement of the number of acres of public land withdrawn, by Executive order or otherwise, in all the States in which public lands have been withdrawn under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 22, 1910, and June 25, 1910, and for what purpose such withdrawals have been made: also what amount of land so withdrawn for classification, if any, has been classified and restored to entry; and when, in his judgment, the remainder of these withdrawn lands will be classified and restored to the operation of the public-land laws.

EVERGLADES OF FLORIDA.

Mr. BRYAN (for Mr. Fletcheb) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 203), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there shall be printed 4,800 additional copies of Senate Document No. 89, Sixty-second Congress, second session, entitled "Everglades of Florida," 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 2,800 copies of which shall be placed on sale by the superintendent of documents.

CLAIMS OF PONCA INDIANS.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move that the bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States, being Order of Business 196, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

UNIVERSAL PEACE MOVEMENT (S. DOC. NO. 289).

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have in my hand a speech delivered at the peace banquet held at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, December 30, 1911, by Hon. Charles A. Towne, formerly a mem-ber of this body. Mr. Towne is one of the most erudite and accomplished gentlemen I know, as well as one of the most forceful writers and eloquent speakers. I do not agree with some things in this speech, but it is a very forceful presentation of the views of those who are advocating the movement now being made in favor of universal peace. I ask the Senate to allow the speech to be printed as a public document. I will not ask that the speech be printed in the RECORD, for I understand that it has been pretty generally determined that speeches made on the outside are not going in the RECORD, and hence I have not asked it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a good understanding, if it has been reached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12623. An act to incorporate the American Numismatic Association was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WEYMOUTH BACK RIVER BRIDGE, MASS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3024) to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts, which were, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Massachusetts," to strike out all down to and including the word "County," in line 13, and to insert "the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the counties of Plymouth and Norfolk"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifteen"; on page 2, line 3, to strike out "one-half" and insert "one-third"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "bridge," to insert "as many he accordained by the Scandard William. may be ascertained by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, after the completion of the routine business, I shall seek to address the Senate on the pending arbitration treaties.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the arbitration treaties as in open executive session. I do not know whether or not any Senator is prepared to go on to-day, but I wish to ask the Senate to fix a day for a vote on those treaties. There are many Senators who desire to speak upon them. They are very important measures; and while I have not the slightest desire to press unduly for a vote, unless some agreement is made as to time, the speeches will not be made-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, allow me-

Mr. LODGE. And therefore, representing the committee, I shall be forced to ask the Senate to remain in session, and to press the treaties from day to day as a bill is pressed, which it seems to me is not a desirable method.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.
Mr. HEYBURN. I rose merely to say, as a point of order, that this motion is not properly presented in legislative session. Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaties in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, I renew the request. I ask the Senate to fix a day on which a vote shall be taken on the treaties. It is the only way I know of by which speeches can be made and the treaties brought to a vote.

I do not wish to discommode Senators by pressing the matter day in and day out and thus preventing adjournments over.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on one of the last days of next week.

Mr. STONE. Do you mean a vote on the peace treaties?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.
Mr. STONE. I think that is rather sudden.
Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator that he himself suggest a date.

Mr. STONE. I think there are several Senators who desire to be heard.

Mr. LODGE. I know there are.
Mr. CULLOM. I do not know who they are.
Mr. STONE. I am in sympathy with the effort to bring the matter to a vote.

Mr. LODGE. Let the Senator from Missouri suggest a day. Mr. CULLOM. I made the request for unanimous consent merely to bring out a suggestion as to a day. I do not know whether anybody wants to speak on the treaties.

Mr. STONE. I think, Mr. President, since the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Senator from Massachusetts, who signed the majority report, have made the statements they have made before the Senate this morning, it might be well for us to leave it where it is, without attempting just now to fix a date, for enough has been said to call the attention of the Senate to the desire of the Committee on Foreign Relations to bring these treaties to a vote at an early

Why would it not be well, therefore, to let the matter day. run a few days and then try to fix a day?

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I have observed, the longer we let a subject run the less anyone takes an interest in it. What I want to do, and what my colleague on the committee wants to do, is to call the attention of the Senate to the situation in the hope that we may come to some definite understanding as to when we will take a vote. That is all either one of us wants to do, I think. If the Senator from Missouri will say that the 20th of this month or the last of this month will suit him, we will agree to it.

Mr. STONE. Personally, I am not very particular. I desire to say something myself; but I can do that at almost any

Mr. CULLOM. What would the Senator think about Thursday, the 22d of this month? That is Washington's Birthday.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not on that day.
Mr. GALLINGER. Say, Wednesday the 21st.
Mr. LODGE. I suggest the 21st.
Mr. CULLOM. What does the Senator think of either the 21st or the 23d of February?

Mr. STONE. That is satisfactory to me.
Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Why not the first week in March—any day in the first week in March? Any day the Senator from Massachusetts may select in the first week in March will be satisfactory to some of us.

Mr. LODGE. I will then substitute the 5th day of March. Mr. CULLOM. Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. STONE. It is satisfactory to me.
Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the treaties be taken on Tuesday, the 5th of March, before adjournment on that legislative day, and on all amendments pending or to be offered, of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to say on that legis-

Mr. LODGE. I said on that legislative day. I think it is a very bad way of arranging it, but I do not suppose I can get it otherwise.

Mr. HEYBURN. It occurs to me we ought not to include a vote on amendments, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding this treaty, on the same day we are required to vote on the treaty. There are a number of Senators who will be governed as to how they will vote on the treaty by the fate of the amendments.

Mr. LODGE. There is only one amendment pending to the treaty. The amendments are to the resolution of ratification, and thus I make it that we shall vote on the resolution of ratification and all amendments pending on that day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will inquire, Does that preclude the voting on amendments to the resolution before that time?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would under the ordinary rule of unanimous consent, because under the ordinary rule of unanimous consent you can not vote on an amendment or the subject to be voted on until the time fixed for voting.

Mr. LODGE. I have said all amendments pending and to be hereafter offered. That is part of my request. But the amendments to the treaty are one thing and the amendments to the resolution are another. Of course, the only vote on the treaties is the vote on the resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that. Mr. LODGE. When I said amendments I meant amendments to the treaty or amendments to the resolution, of course, and I supposed that was understood.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was attracted by the statement of the Senator that the vote would be on the treaty and then that there was only one amendment pending. If my recollection serves me, there are five amendments to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I had them on my desk this morning.

Mr. LODGE. There are five.

Mr. HEYBURN. Each of those amendments is of some importance.

Mr. LODGE. Of very great importance. Mr. HEYBURN. And if they were disposed of in one way then Senators might want time enough to gather themselves together and determine what they would do in the next step. The amendments to the resolution change, if adopted, the entire character of these treaties. There are three of them to which you might apply the statement that if they are adopted they change the character of the trenty. The others are of minor importance. After disposing of the first amendment that may be voted upon there should be time enough to consider what action a Senator should take before being compelled to vote upon another. The last vote will be upon the resolution as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Unquestionably.

Mr. HEYBURN. There should be a lapse of time between the disposal of the amendments and the time when the vote is to be taken. It is too important a question to put through without anything less than the most thorough and careful consideration. I am speaking for myself. I have it in my mind that if those amendments were not adopted I would pursue one course of action. If those amendments were adopted, I would, perhaps, take an entirely different stand in the matter. I hesitate to be foreclosed against the discussion of the treaty, should it not be amended, by the brief time and the conditions under which one must dispose of the question in his own mind.

In my judgment, the amendments to the resolution should be disposed of a week prior to the time when we vote on the If this were an ordinary matter of legislation resolution. which we could repeal to-morrow it would be easy. In my judgment, it is the gravest crisis that has arisen in the civil affairs of this Government in its history.

I feel strongly enough about it to justify myself in saying that unless we can arrange it so that a time may elapse between the disposition of the amendments and the vote upon the resolution, I would decline to give my consent to fixing a time. I am ready to go on with this matter now, so far as I am concerned, but my observation in this body has been to the effect that when you fix a day to vote there will be very scant consideration given to the question in the meantime. would rather have the Senator hold us right up, if he may and can, to the consideration of it, and we might vote within a week.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massa-chusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Iowa. Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the unanimous-consent agreement, if made, should differentiate between amendments to the treaty and amendments to the resolution. It is obvious that the proposed amendment to the treaty should be considered and disposed of first, because the conclusion we may reach with regard to the amendments to the treaty or treaties might very greatly change the character and form of the resolution of ratification.

I shall offer before the time comes certain amendments to the treaties themselves, for I stand for a plain, simple, and unqualified resolution, when we have amended the treaties as I think they ought to be amended. I hope, therefore, the Senator will propose the unanimous-consent agreement so that the amendments to the treaties will be voted upon before the resolution of ratification.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I will propose that the vote on amendments to the treaty be taken on February 29; that the vote on amendments to the resolution be taken on March 5; and that the vote on the treaty be taken on March 6.

Mr. President-Mr. BACON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I do. Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator in that to exclude the feature involved in the former proposition during the legislative day?

Mr. LODGE. No; the legislative day in each case. That is I was trying to get the dates to satisfy Senators. understood. Mr. BACON. I want to call attention to what appears to me to be a very serious objection to that proposition. It involves

Mr. LODGE. I think there are objections to every proposition, but I am trying to find one there is not objection to.

Mr. BACON. I was about to say it involves necessarily the proposition, I suppose, that no amendments should be offered after that time—after the amendments were voted upon.

Mr. LODGE. I do not suppose any amendments could be offered after the vote was taken on the ratification.

Certainly there would be no amendments after Mr. BACON. that, and no other action after that, unless it was one of reconsideration.

Mr. LODGE. Under no possible system you can devise can you offer amendments to a treaty after the resolution is submitted to a vote, that I see.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator in all earnestness if he understands either myself or anybody else to propose a proposition so ridiculous as that?

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely the proposition I understood the Senator to make.

Mr. BACON. I must have been very unhappy in my expression. All I can say to the Senator is that I have not made any proposition, and all I was trying to do-but the Senator did not give me an opportunity

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator was trying to make a proposition.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not give me an opportunity.

will wait until he gets through.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator. I am waiting for him to proceed.

Mr. BACON. I prefer to go on in my own time. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the treaties be taken up on February 29; that a final vote on all amendments thereto be had upon that legislative day; that the vote be taken upon all amendments to the resolution on the legislative day of March 5; and that the vote be had upon the passage of the resolutions as they are then amended on the legislative day of March 6. Is there objection?

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. LODGE. I will say—

Mr. BACON. I hope we may be allowed to be heard on this question before-

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask-

Mr. BACON. Before it is summarily disposed of-

Mr. LODGE. Objection is made by the Senator from Idaho, and there is no use wasting time in trying to reach an agreement now

Mr. STONE. I did not know—
Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Idaho will withdraw his objection for a moment, I want to present something which may possibly lead to an understanding.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. I have no desire to preclude

Mr. BAÇON. I want to say that I think the Senator from Idaho is mistaken as to the embarrassment which would result from not having the amendments voted on in advance of the day when the main proposition is to be voted upon. The Senator would be correct if this were a proposition to vote on a certain day or at a certain hour. I have frequently seen such embarrassment arise as the Senator from Idaho now antici-pates where a certain time is fixed and where right in the last moment of it some development is made which makes it very desirable that there should be some other amendment, or that something should be said upon a pending amendment; but upon a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at a certain time everything is cut off; there is no opportunity for it.

If there is, as was first proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, simply an arrangement by which we will come to a vote on a certain legislative day, that gives ample opportunity for the debate of every proposition and for offering counter propositions whenever one proposition may have been disposed of in a way not satisfactory to any Senator. I have forgotten the date suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to say to him that the first proposition was entirely agreeable to me. I think it was a very proper one.

Mr. CULLOM. The date suggested was the 29th.
Mr. BACON. For instance, if we should agree that on the legislative day, the 29th of February, there should be a vote upon all amendments to the treaty and all amendments to the resolution of ratification, as soon as we entered upon it of course we would be committed to the continuation of its consideration to the end; there would be continuous debate.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me interrupt the Senator. I wish the Senator would make a specific proposition now to the Senate so that we may see whether we can not reach an agreement.

Mr. BACON. I am in favor of the proposition offered by the

Mr. BACON. I am in favor of the proposition Senator from Massachusetts in the first instance.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I want.
Mr. BACON. I think that is a proper one, and I am quite sure if that is adopted it will not result in the embarrassments supposed or anticipated by the Senator from Idaho. I think an agreement to vote on a given proposition on a legislative day is the best disposition which ever can be made in the Senate on an important measure. It brings the Senate directly to its consideration. It necessitates a continuance of consideration without interruption. At the same time it gives full opportunity for the discussion of the main proposition and of every amendment; it gives full opportunity for counter propositions, whenever any one is made; and there is no possibility that there can arise a situation where something is presented immediately before the vote and Senators are cut off from the opportunity either of debate or further amendment. It gives full opportunity both for amendment and for debate, but it does bring the Senate finally and within a very reasonable time to its con-

We had an illustration of it yesterday, where the vote was to be taken on the legislative day of Tuesday. If the word "legislative" had not been used in the agreement, we would have been kept here on Tuesday until late in the night, and there would have been no advantage in it whatever. But by making it the legislative day every opportunity is given for debate, every opportunity is given for amendment, and there is no possibility of anything being concluded without the opportunity to be heard or to consider some proposition which may be advanced immediately before the vote is taken. In other words, the vote can not be taken until every Senator is through, but it puts him in a position where he has an opportunity to get through within a reasonable time and without interruption.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask a question for information. marked the calendar as the request was being made. I may not be correct, but I understand the first vote is to be taken on amendments upon the 29th of February. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amendments to the treaty.

Mr. HEYBURN. Amendments to the treaty.
Mr. GALLINGER. On the legislative day.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; the legislative day. Now, I will call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to this fact: With only two calendar days intervening-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Three.

Mr. HEYBURN. With only three calendar days intervening we would be compelled to conclude any discussion that might arise. We-may utterly destroy those intervening calendar days; the space is short; and we would then be without a unanimous consent, because the unanimous consent could not be set forward to another day.

I understand the vote is to be taken first upon the amendments on the 5th of March. Am I correct in that date? That is not the final vote, as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the vote on amendments to

Mr. HEYBURN. The vote, then, is on amendments to the There is not the slightest doubt but that the discussion on that day would extend over perhaps for several It might last for 10 days. We would find ourselves again blocked by the intervention of a calendar day that would be obliterated by protracting the discussion of the legislative day beyond it; and we would again be without a unanimous consent; we would be again without a day. We must find a better arrangement than that or we will destroy our unanimousconsent agreement by the lapse of time.

We are in somewhat of a hurry this morning, but I think we have time enough to do this right. It is not provident to fix a vote upon one calendar day and another vote upon the next on the supposition that the first legislative day will expire before the second calendar day begins. We had that experience here We lost a legislative day during this week by the other day. reason of the calendar day intervening before the legislative day had expired. We had the experience this week. There are two opportunities and two probabilities, but that would occur under this proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator understands that if the Senate is going to do a thing like that it is impossible to make any unanimous-consent agreement. It is to be assumed that the Senate will act fairly and reasonably; that if it wants to take three calendar days on the proposed amendments by making them one legislative day, it can do so; but that after the Senate has agreed-supposing it agrees-to take a vote on the treaty amendments before the end of the legislative day of February 29 it would extend that day so as to wreck the subsequent agreement to take a vote on the amendments and the resolution on the 5th of March, I do not think is probable. I do not believe the Senate will do that.

Mr. HEYBURN. We did it within a week.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. We did not wreck any second agreement by extending the legislative day on the children's bureau bill. The Senator assumes not only that we shall carry the legislative day of February 29 over for three calendar days, but he assumes that we shall carry it over a fourth day, and wreck the agreement to vote on the amendments to the resolution. I do not believe the Senate would do that.

I am perfectly willing to extend the time and make it a further day, and that will give the same margin between the votes on the amendments to the resolution and the final vote as there now is between the vote on the treaty amendments and the resolution, making the final vote on the 8th or 9th. Make it on

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if any Senator is laboring under the impression that I am trying to postpone this vote he is mistaken. I am speaking and acting in the interest of an early disposition of this question. I should like to see the Senate stay here and discuss this treaty and the resolution every day, if possible, or practically so, and we would have a vote not on the 5th or some other day in March, but we would have it within 10 days. That is my purpose. I should like to see the interest in this discussion kept right up to the top notch until the matter is disposed of. This will be the fate of it: If we fix a time to vote, Senators will go away until the time arrives, and if a Senator desires to speak on the measure he will speak to the galleries and to the Vice President. I have seen such a condition before. We are admonished by experience in this matter. I am in favor of staying here and staying in our seats, and discussing it and giving respectful attention to those who may speak, whether we may agree with them or not. In my judgment, that is the way to conduct the business of the United States Senate, and not to fix a time to vote, so that Senators will feel under the obligation either to speak or to listen to those who do speak.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think I can make a suggestion that will meet the difficulty in the mind of the Senator from Idaho, and I recognize it to be a real difficulty. Suppose the unanimous-consent agreement was so expressed that on February 29 the amendments to the treaties are taken up and are to be disposed of on that legislative day, and then, upon the third or fourth or fifth legislative day thereafter the resolution should be taken up and amendments to the resolution or resolutions disposed of, and then, upon the next legislative day thereafter, there should be a final vote upon the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. On the 3d?

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, if there should be a long debate, as has been suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] we would not suffer the consequences that he has so well pointed out.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me right there, I have not anticipated or suggested a long debate, but a short one. If we have a short debate we will keep Senators right up with their work.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator to say—and I anticipate that might happen—that the legislative day, of February 29, beginning then, would be carried past the calendar day of March 5.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would be because of the unanimous-consent agreement delaying a vote until that time; but let us commence now and we will have forgotten the treaty by the time proposed for a vote.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not attempting, of course, to meet that objection on the part of the Senator from Idaho, but only the conflict between legislative days and calendar days. can easily see that the whole trouble will be avoided by adopting the suggestion I have made.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see the reason of the Senator's remarks. Now, I want this to appear plainly. I am not speaking in the interest of delaying a vote on this measure; I am speaking in the interest of the immediate consideration and disposition of it by a vote when Senators have finished discussing it. is what I am speaking about, and I want no Senator nor any one else to charge me with having stood in my place to-day for the purpose of deferring this vote, for it is not true. I am here merely in the interest of an early and intelligent consideration and disposition of this question. I would suggestand that was my reason for objecting to unanimous consentthat we go to work upon this treaty, discuss it now, and vote upon it when no longer any Senator desires to speak.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, during the past 10 days I have brought this up repeatedly. I have asked Senators if they were ready to speak, and no Senator has been ready to speak. The matter has gone over without any attention at all. I have tried the system proposed by the Senator from Idaho, and tried it faithfully. The only alternative to that is what I shall now be obliged to do. Owing to the objection of the Senator from Idaho, I shall be obliged to give notice that I will bring the treaty up to-morrow and the next day and every day and try to press it to the inconvenience of Senators, and make it impossible for them to tell when the vote is to be taken. It is idle to suppose that you can compel Senators to sit here and listen to a debate if they do not want to do so. That must depend upon the speaker. If he can not interest Senators, no scheme we can adopt will force them to sit in their seats.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will give notice that on a certain day he will move to take up the treaty and then will proceed in the way he indicates, that would accomplish the same

Mr. LODGE. I have given that notice before, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. No; the Senator does not understand me.
Mr. LODGE. And I have brought up the treaty, and no Senator was ready to speak, though Senators have told me they desired to speak. I did not want to press the treaty as I would

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not understood me

Mr. LODGE. I am very unfortunate in not understanding the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to endeavor to present the proposition in such a way that he will under-

Mr. LODGE. I yield, of course. Mr. BACON. My suggestion is this, not that the Senator shall on a certain day bring the matter up, and then, if no Senator is ready, let it go over, but that he give notice that on a certain day he will move to take up these treaties for consideration, and if no Senator desires to speak that there will be a vote; in other words, whenever a subject has been exhausted or when nobody desires to be heard upon it the thing to be done under that kind of a notice would be to vote. It will have the same effect as a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed on a certain day and it will keep the matter before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, the Senator has been here a great many years; he is as familiar as I am with that method; and he knows precisely what will happen, just as I know what will happen, if I give a notice, for instance, that on Monday I will ask the Senate to go on, and, if nobody is ready, I shall ask for a vote. He knows perfectly well that if not Monday, then on some other day, a Senator will rise and say, "I desire to be heard on this treaty; I am not ready to-day"; and of course I should yield and let it go over. That has been done over and over again.

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President; the Senator, I think, is mistaken about that.

Mr. LODGE. It has been done ever since I have been here.

Mr. BACON. I have seen it here before; I do not recall the particular instance; but the effect of it is to bring the Senate to a consent. I do not ask that the Senator will give that notice for to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. I propose to give that notice for to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. Well, I think, if the Senator gives the notice for to-morrow, it will take the direction which he is now suggesting; but if he will give notice that he will do so at some future time-such time, for instance, as he is willing to name in the proposed unanimous-consent agreement-I do not think it would take that direction.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to keep the Senate from adjourning over until Monday, which they can do perfectly well; I do not desire to interfere in any way with any arrangement of that sort; but, charged with the report of the committee, I have no choice; I have to press it unseasonably and unreasonably.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Unless I have fallen under the same disability as has the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in understanding the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], his proposition is a very feasible one. For instance, he suggests that the Senator give notice that on the 29th day of February he will move to proceed to the consideration of the treaties and the resolutions. That would be perfectly understood as having exhausted the time that was indicated as sufficient by the unanimous consent, saving the objection of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn]. It will accomplish all the purposes that could be accomplished by a unanimous-consent agreement

Mr. LODGE. Then the debate would not begin until the 29th of February?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It would not begin until the 29th of February even under the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes, it would, Mr. President. I think there would be a great many speeches made between now and then if a time were fixed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If they would be made between now and then under the one arrangement, they would be under the other.

Mr. LODGE. But if Senators failed to make speeches, the agreement having been made for the 29th of February, it would be their own fault, of course.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. An announcement of that sort by the Senator from Massachusetts would carry with it the same significance as an agreement to vote on that day, because everyone would understand what its purpose was.

Mr. LODGE. I shall give notice, then, that on Monday next I will move to take up the treaties for consideration, and if no Senator is ready to speak upon them I will ask for a vote.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not fix as early a date as that, because that is manifestly an earlier

Mr. LODGE. I am only giving a notice, Mr. President— Mr. BACON. I know; but if my suggestion were to go for anything, the notice ought to be given in such a way as to make it effectual. If the Senator fixes the date far enough in advance there can be no reasonable objection by any Senator, because he will have ample opportunity. I know, for instance, that certain Senators have to be absent within a very short

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if we are not to have an agreement to vote at some future day, then the motion having been made and the treaties now being before the Senate, I ask the Senate to consider the treaties, and if no Senator is ready to speak, let us vote upon the treaties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will indulge the Chair a moment, the Chair thinks that during the discussion he has worked out a proposition which will meet the objections of Senators, and, if the Chair may be indulged, he will state it to the Senate. It is as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on Thursday, February 29, 1912, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the pending arbitration treaties; that before adjournment on that legislative day a vote shall be taken upon any amendments that may then be pending or offered to the text of the treaties, and that no vote shall be taken upon any amendment prior to that legislative day; that on the fourth day after the expiration of the last-named legislative day, before adjournment on that legislative day, a vote shall be taken on any amendment pending or that may be offered to the resolutions of ratification of such treaties, and that no vote upon any amendment to said resolutions shall be taken before that legislative day; that on the fourth day after the expiration of the last-named legislative day, before adjournment on that legislative day, a vote shall be taken upon the resolutions of ratification of such treaties without further amendment.

If that agreement were entered into, it would be impossible for it to fail.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that covers it perfectly, and, of course, it is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is as skillfully drawn and as accurately stated as I could possibly imagine it to be done. I still adhere, however, to my belief that we should enter upon the consideration of this treaty under circumstances that will result in it being considered. For more than eight years I have been a looker-on at these proceedings. I have seen the Senate practically adjourn by fixing a time to vote on great measures. Then no one would even consider himself under obligations to remain within the District of Columbia, much less in the Capitol Building. He would know that under no circumstances could the vote be taken; but, in the absence of such an agreement, every Senator knows that if a Senator takes his seat after speaking upon the treaties, unless some other Senator is prepared to rise and enter upon their consideration, a vote will be taken. Under such circumstances Senators will be kept at their post of duty until the question is disposed of, whether it be within 5 days or within 50 days. We will know then that when the treaty has been voted upon it has been after a fair discussion. Every Senator is as much entitled as is every other Senator to be heard and to be listened to in this matter, and we will probably arrive at a wiser and more satisfactory conclusion if we really discuss it rather than read essays about it. There should be that sharp interchange of thought and expression in connection with the discussion of this measure that will bring out the points. We have heard many essays in regard to the treaties

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. Mr. BACON. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if the original proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts that the treaties be taken up on the 29th of February, and that a vote be had before the conclusion of that legislative day would not bring the Senate immediately to a discussion of them with exactly the course to be pursued thereafter that is now indicated by the Senator? The discussion would continue; no Senator would know when the vote was going to be taken; and every Senator would necessarily have to remain here in order to be present in case the vote should be taken. It seems to me that what the Senator urges as the proper conclusion to be reached is the one which will be reached by following the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that on a certain day the treaties be taken up. The discussion will be proceeded with, and when the discussion is ended, the time of voting being altogether uncertain, the vote will be taken. It seems to me that that is all that can be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is much merit-Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me further-

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator can proceed.

Mr. BACON. We have been proceeding under this system for I do not know how many years, certainly as long as I have had any familiarity with the Senate proceedings, and it has always worked out smoothly and easily. It is no new thing. The only time there has ever been any trouble has been when a certain hour has been fixed for a vote, and in that way Senators have been cut off from the opportunity either to offer amendments or to discuss anything which might have arisen in the latter part of the discussion which ought to be answered. This removes that difficulty; it does bring up the very continuous sharp discussion which the Senator speaks of, and requires it to be continued until the vote is reached; and that is all there is to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, were I inclined to endeavor to postpone the consideration of this measure, I would adopt that method, knowing that when the time arrived on the 29th day of February, or whatever day might be agreed upon, we would have to sit in continuous session for perhaps a week, have night sessions and continuous sessions, because some Senator would object to a recess. We could not adjourn under that kind of an arrangement and we would meet with that diffi-I object to postponing the consideration of the matter until that time. I see nothing to be gained by it. The Senator from Massachusetts will give notice that on a certain day he will ask to take it up. That requires a vote. The Senate may or may not vote to take it up. Any Senator has the same right to move to take up this measure that any other Senator has. It has been reported to the Senate; the committee reporting it has been discharged of its duty; it is with the Senate; and it is with any Senator to make a motion to take it up.

I make that plain statement, so that there may be no misapprehension as to the status of this question. The unanimousconsent agreement read by the Presiding Officer is entirely explicit, and it obviates the objection I made to the preceding one; and it is only a question now whether or not we will post-pone entering upon this question until the 29th day of February, and then proceed to its consideration, with the knowledge that we will remain or have to remain in continuous session until a vote is taken. That may be 10 days. It may be a weary, sleepless 10 days.

Mr. LODGE. We can take a recess whenever we want to. Mr. HEYBURN. I know, but I have been here long enough to know also that we do not know what we are going to do in that respect.

If to this agreement there could be coupled a provision that we would take up the treaties at that time and then we would, within a given number of days, dispose of them, it would mean only that we would postpone the consideration of them until that time. I will not object to any request for propries I will not object to any request for unanimous consent which postpones entering upon the discussion of this question until the 29th of February, provided provision is made in the unanimous-consent agreement for ample time to finish the consideration of the questions. But I do not propose at this time to run up against a continuous session, with all the hardships it involves, and place ourselves at the mercy of those who think they may force the issue by denying to others an opportunity to sleep and rest.

Mr. CULLOM. How much time does the Senator from Idaho

Mr. HEYBURN. I would want only about an hour on that

Mr. CULLOM. How much time does the Senator want? Mr. HEYBURN. The same plan as represented in this unanimous-consent request, unless it is transferred ahead, would answer so far as I am concerned.

I am ready at this time to take up this measure or any other upon the calendar-

Mr. CULLOM. How much time does the Senator want?

Mr. HEYBURN. If you want to defer it until then and ask time for the present consideration-

Mr. GAMBLE. Regular order! Mr. HEYBURN. There is no regular order.

Mr. LODGE. There is no regular order before the Senate except-

Mr. HEYBURN. The chairman presumably has a motion to make in regard to this matter.

Mr. LODGE. The question is in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. The question is in connection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The Chair has sent for the original. The original is not at the desk.

Year hardly imagine that the Senator from rate at this time Mr. STONE. I can hardly imagine that the Senator from Massachusetts desires to press the treaty to a vote at this time or ask for a vote upon any of the amendments.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I do not. I think that would be an absurd way to proceed. I have no desire to suggest to Senators how they shall argue the question, whether it shall be debated one way or another. My only desire is to make such an arrangement fixing a day to vote on the treaties as would serve the convenience of Senators and enable Senators to debate it to the best advantage.

I think the Senator from Missouri and every other Senator except the Senator from Idaho are in entire accord with me. It is the duty of a Senator in charge of a measure to press it upon the attention of the Senate. Otherwise he is lax in his Of course, I do not expect that we will vote on the matter this afternoon. I called attention-

Mr, HEYBURN. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. The regular order is called for.

Mr. LODGE. This, I believe, is the regular order, and I have the floor, and I am going to occupy it for just a minute.

Under these circumstances the disagreeable duty falls upon me to press this matter. I want to make it as convenient to the Senate as possible, only insuring that we dispose of our duty within a reasonable limit of time. With the present disposition of the Senate, I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. No; I will not yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Massachusetts make a motion? The attention of the Chair has been diverted, unfortunately.

Mr. PENROSE. There is pending a motion to adjourn,

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair asked

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the motion if any Senator desires to speak on the question to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield the floor?

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the motion. Certainly I yield the

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the treaty this afternoon, but I will make a few remarks, which I hope will attract the attention of some.

This, Mr. President, is a great question. The railroading of a great question like this through the United States Senate is not the best method of proceeding to the fulfillment of our duty.

We are beginning to unwind the skein of government. are showing some evidence of forgetting the founders and the principles that they interwove into our Government. We are proposing to appoint monarchs as guardians over a Republic. We are proposing to place the destiny of this Republic at the mercy of the monarchs of the world. We are proposing to take away from the Congress the constitutional power to declare We are proposing to take war-the Congress, I say, and not the President of the United States. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power to declare war, and it does not need the cooperation of the President of the United States. And yet the President and the Senate, independent of the House, which must participate in the act declaring war, are proposing to take away from the House, the representatives of the people, that constitutional

The United States Supreme Court in a case which, I think, I have on the desk before me has announced that you could not by treaty take away any constitutional function or power. You may modify the law, but you can not take away the power that is given by the Constitution; and I want Senators here at this time to take this thought. I shall not protract my remarks this afternoon, but I will give you a text to think about for a day or two. Are you going to disregard the admonition of the founder of this country, who gave his strength, his manhood, and his purse for it, when he admonished the people of this country not to enter into an entangling alliance, and gave as a reason for it the different sentiments that moved and actuated monarchies as compared with the sentiments that actuated the people of this country?

He warned us against entering into entangling alliances with the nations of Europe, because, he said in the great document which is here annually read from the Vice President's desk on the 22d of this month, their sentiments are diametrically op-posed to those of the people of the United States. The relation of the people of the United States is reversed. There the monarch is first and the people are his subjects, while here the people are first and the officeholders are their representatives.

I intend before this question is closed, if I have to speak a solo, to enter more at length into these questions of our rights under this treaty. To me it is a serious question. It is the result of toadying—mental toadying, intellectual toadying—to the glare and the trumpet of monarchs. That is where it origi-

Men grow luxurious and idle in their habits, and they admire the conditions that conform to that situation of theirs, but there is in this country an element of citizenship that will never permit the representatives in the United States Senate to take away from their representatives in the House the right to perform the constitutional function of declaring war.

The people make the Congress—both Houses of it—and they can unmake it. If they find they have unfortunately selected men who trade off their liberties despite the prohibition in the Constitution, they will trade them off for real patriots, for men who know the difference between a monarchy and a republic, for men who would not dream of placing the liberties and the rights of the people under the trusteeship of the monarchs of Europe.

That this treaty does so I am prepared to demonstrate from its own language, and I will do so at a subsequent time when more inclined to do it than I am now.

Mr. President, in order, I suppose, to make good some promises that this treaty could not be discussed under present conditions a vacuum has been created, something abhorrent to nature; but when the people come to read of the proceedings of this body upon this question they will know where men stood. There is nothing in the RECORD to show whether this Senator or that was present. But the American people are present, and when the proposition is made to take away from them the power to assert their rights among the nations of the earth, to protect and defend their rights in controversies that arise in our country as a whole or to its individual citizen, they will know about it.

Now, Mr. President, the discussion of this question has been opened, and I will desist, so that those who have heard my remarks may consider whether or not they will unwind the skein of Government that has been wound tight and firm by the patriots who have gone before us, and whether or not they will place the guardianship of the Republic in the hands of the monarchs of Europe.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator from Idaho had finished.

I beg pardon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not tell whether I have finished or not. Senators have arisen as though I had, and I suppose I have.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that bit of humor having been passed I will now make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business; and I give notice that on Monday I shall ask the Senate to take up these treaties for consideration, and if that motion is sustained, and no Senator is ready to speak on the subject, I will ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the treaties having gone over until Monday, and there being a very large amount of business before the committees of the Senate, I have been requested by Senators on both sides of the Chamber to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SURPLUS LANDS IN STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. On Monday last I gave notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, failed to pass. It is my purpose to call up the motion at this time, but before doing so desire to state that I have amendments to offer to section 3 to meet the objections urged against the bill when it was under consideration, and I think the parties who interposed the objections are entirely satisfied with these amendments. So, if the motion prevails, I will submit the amendments indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks for action on the motion which he heretofore entered to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 109 was defeated. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time is reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is again before the Senate.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have two amendments to offer to the bill. On page 5, line 10, after the word "prescribe," I move to strike out the remainder of line 10 and all down to and including the word "incorporated," in line 17, as follows:

And he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any town site, and patents shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes upon receiving satisfactory evidence that said towns have been duly incorporated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. On page 5, I move to strike out line 21 and all down to and including the word "located," in line 25, as fol-

And he shall cause at least 20 per cent of the net proceeds arising from such sales to be set apart and expended under his direction in the construction of schoolhouses or other public buildings or improvements in the town sites in which such lots are located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there other amendments to be offered to the bill?

Mr. BACON. I understand from the Semator that the amendments just agreed to eliminate from the bill all the provisions which look to setting apart either the 10 acres or the 20 per cent proceeds from town lots?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir. Mr. BACON. I want to ask the Senator a question, not with a view of pressing it now, but simply that it may be noted and possibly elsewhere it may be looked into.

The Senator will remember that when the bill was before the Senate there was something said about the selection of lots in lieu of lots already taken and the payment therefor by the Government. If I recollect aright, the Senator stated that the area involved in the territory which is to be opened was somewhere in the neighborhood of 1,100,000 acres.

Mr. GAMBLE. That is, the area embraced is a little upward of 1,000,000 acres. Now, then, the Indian allotments have, of course, peen taken out of that.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of that at all. I understand about that.

Mr. GAMBLE. I can not state how many acres are affected

Mr. BACON. What I was about to suggest was based upon my recollection that the Senator had stated it was somewhere between a million and a million one hundred thousand acres.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; that is correct.
Mr. BACON. This is the point I want to call attention to, though I do not know that it is important in view of the other amendment which was put on which limited the amount to $2.50 per acre. Was it not?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; I understand that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. That amendment was agreed to, and in view of that fact the suggestion I am now making is not important because no more than that could be used for that purpose. What I intended to call attention to was the fact that the amount appropriated-$180,000, I think it is-would exceed the amount if the estimate of the number of acres made by the Senator is correct, but the limitation on the price, of course, will guard that point.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; and the bill only appropriates so much as may be necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engressed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SULZER, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 289), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I will call this bill up for consideration at the earliest possible day.

JAMES C. ALLEN, OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the privilege of the House this morning to say a few words in honor of a man who served as a Member of this body in the Thirty-third Congress. Judge James C. Allen, of Olney, Ill., was born January 28, 1823, in Shelby County, Ky. He received a public-school education, moved to Indiana in 1843, and studied law and was admitted to the bar, where he was afterwards elected district attorney. The ex-Speaker of this House, Hon Joseph G. Can-Non, was then a young man, clerking in a grocery store in the same town, and knew this young attorney at that time. Judge Allen afterwards moved to Illinois and became a resident of Palestine, which in that day was an important place for the reason it was the location of the land office and is now a thriving city in one of the richest sections of the State of Illinois. Judge Allen was elected to the Legislature of Illinois in 1850. He was first elected to Congress in 1852 from the seventh dis-In that Congress Stephen A. Douglas and James Shields were in the Senate, and Richard Yates and William H. Bissell, who were both afterwards elected to the office of governor, Elihu B. Washburn, John Wentworth, Willis Allen, James Knox, Jesse O. Norton, and William Richardson were in the

There were also in that Congress Thomas A. Hen-House. dricks, of Indiana; Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri; and Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania. These men became famous in the history of our country, and had a great deal to do with the enactment of important legislation many years afterwards. Judge Allen was elected to the Thirty-fourth Congress, but a contest being instituted, the seat was declared vacant; but the office was not given to the contestant, William B. Archer. Judge Allen returned to his home and was again elected, and took his seat on December 1, 1856, showing that the people of that district had faith in him as a man and one fit to represent them in the National House of Representatives. Judge Allen was elected clerk of the House of Representatives in the Thirty-fifth Congress and held that position until February 3, 1860. He presided during the long time required to elect a Speaker, which finally resulted in William Pennington being chosen on the 1st of February, 1860, the House having balloted from the first Monday in December. He then returned to his home and was elected judge of the district court.

Being nominated for Congress at large in 1862, he resigned the office of judge and was elected to the Thirty-eighth Congress, defeating the late Robert G. Ingersoll Ly a large majority, taking his seat December 7, 1863. The record shows that in this Congress such men as Owen Lovejoy, William R. Morrison, James C. Robinson, and John R. Eden were Members from that State, and that William Richardson and Lyman Termulally were Senators. In the House of Representatives were Trumbull were Senators. In the House of Representatives were William B. Allison, Schuyler Colfax, Daniel W. Voorhees, William Window, Francia D. William Window, William Win liam Windom, Francis P. Blair, Samuel S. Cox, George H. Pendleton, James A. Garfield, William D. Kelley, Samuel J. Randall, Thaddeus Stevens, and others who have become eminent in the history of our country. Judge Allen, after retiring from Congress, returned to his home in Illinois and was again honored by the people where he lived by being elected judge of the district court, and served for a time on pellate bench. He was chosen by his party as candidate for governor in 1860 against Richard Yates. In 1870 he was elected as a member of the constitutional convention.

During the Civil War Judge Allen was offered the command of the Twenty-first Illinois Regiment, many of that regiment being residents of Crawford County, his home, but not having had any military training he declined, and he urged Gov. Yates to appoint Ulysses S. Grant, which he did. President Lincoln offered Judge Allen the command of a brigade, but he refused on account of his lack of military training, as stated previously to Gov. Yates.

Judge Allen lived to the ripe age of 90 years and 1 day, and I received a telegram this morning saying he had passed away at his home on January 30, 1912.

I observe that in all the proceedings of Congress while he was a Member he took an active part, showing him to be a statesman and a man of broad views, equal with those with whom he served at that time. Judge Allen always had regard for the views of those with whom he differed; yet he was positive in his opinion, and at all times ready to advocate what he believed to be right in the interest of the majority. as he was able to do so he felt it his duty as a citizen of our country to take part in elections, believing that this Government was a government of the people and that the people must take sufficient interest to express their views upon candidates and issues at the polls.

I am glad to have the opportunity this morning to say these few words in honor of a good man; a man whose heart always beat with the noble impulse for humanity; one who believed that the rights of man were greater than the rights of the dollar; a man who believed that the interest of the masses was paramount to the interest of any one individual. He was one who took a broad view of governmental affairs and looked to the side of legislation in the interest of the greatest number. He was a worker with Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas and others of his time. He never faltered from any duty imposed on him, and was ever ready to do his part for the preservation and upbuilding of our country. It is a satisfaction to his family and friends to realize that he lived such a life and that he was ever steadfast to the last in his views, and that his mind was clear and that he evinced a keen interest in public matters up to the time of his death. Through all of his public career he was a Christian man, dying an honored member of the church of his faith. In his home he was kind and gentle and was always happy with his family. This man lived such a life that the world was made better, and much good was accomplished through him. Many men live long lives, and yet, when they have passed away, the world has not been bettered by their having lived. Unselfishness and devotion to the principles of right and our duty to our fellow men should guide us for better things in this world, and the example of the life of this man should point us to higher and better things and teach us to strive to accomplish something, so that it may be said of us, too, when we are gone, that our lives have not been lived in vain, and that we left the world the better for having lived in it.

Judge Allen has passed from this earth, yet he lives in the hearts of those who knew him but to love him.

I can not say, and I will not say,
That he is dead; he is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It need must be, since he lingers there.
And you—O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return—
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love there as the love of here.

Mild and gentle, as he was brave,
When the sweetest love of his life he gave
To simple things; where the violets grew Pure as the eyes they were likened to:
The touches of his hands have strayed
As reverently as his lips have prayed;
When the little brown thrush that harshly chirred
Was dear to him as the mocking bird;
And he pitied as much as a man in pain
A writhing honey bee wet with rain.
Think of him still as the same I say,
He is not dead—he is just—away.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18985, the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. Booher

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has 10 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has 5 minutes remaining of the time devoted to general debate.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires to use the balance of his time? Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to enter a protest against the abolition of the 17 pension agencies carried in this bill. I do not make any complaint about any of the provisions of this bill except the first section, which carries the abolition of the 17 pension agencies scattered throughout the country. As we all know, this proposition has been before Congress a number of times, and the House, I believe, in every instance, has gone on record in favor of this proposed abolition of the pension agencies; but at the other end of the Capitol the Senate has insisted that these agencies remain. I know that this abolition is proposed with a view of economy, but I think we have demonstrated in previous discussions that it really in fact does not mean economy. When a similar bill was before the Sixty-first Congress a full investigation was made, showing the cost of maintaining these agencies in the country, and at that time we had 472 clerks in the 17 pension agencies, and their average pay per annum was $977.79. Now, the average pay per annum of the Washington clerks in the Pension Department, where this bill proposes to transfer the work now done in the 17 pension agencies, is $1,280.72 per annum, or a difference in favor of economy by the use and employment of clerks in the various pension agencies of $302.72 for each clerk, or a total difference in favor of economy by maintaining the present system of $125,425.60. Now, the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], having this bill in charge, on Tuesday was that it would result in a saving of practically $100,000 in clerk hire by the abolition of the salaries of the 17 pension agencies and an item of $4,500 a year paid for the rental of the agency in New York City, so taking the figures as stated by the gentleman having charge of this bill that there would be a saving of $104,500, we have as against that in economy by maintaining the present system of $125,425.60, so that in reality there is no economy. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, here is a proposition to take from the various States and 17 cities of the country established Government pension agencies that have been in existence practically since 1832. What else, Mr. Chairman? We are called upon to legislate out of office, not in the interest of economy, as the facts demonstrate, 17 brave and gallant Union soldiers who are to-day filling the position of agents in those 17 agencies. yond that; we practically legislate out of office and turn out of Government employment, according to the report submitted two years ago, 472 clerks in those pension agencies. I believe the gentleman's statement on Tuesday was that we would legislate out of office 300 clerks.

Mr. BARTLETT. No. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is mistaken in saying we would legislate out of office any clerks.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then we will transfer those clerks to the Pension Bureau in this city, where Congress later on will be called upon to increase their salaries, now averaging $977.79, to at least the average of the salary we are paying clerks in the Pension Office here, which is $1,280.72. I do not think any Member of the House will controver the proposition that the Member of the House will controvert the proposition that the cost of living in this city far exceeds the cost of living in the 17 cities in which these pension agencies are located. It will not do to tell this House that we are going to transfer these clerks and pay them the identical salaries they are now receiving after they come to Washington City. The Committee on Appropriations and this House will be besieged to increase these salaries and place these transferred clerks on an equal footing, so far as remuneration is concerned, with that received by their fellow clerks in the Pension Bureau. Mr. Chairman, we not only legislate out of office the distinguished ex-Federal soldiers in the 17 pension agencies, but I venture the assertion that at least one-third if not a half of the 300 or 400 clerks now performing duty in the various pension agencies are ex-Union soldiers, and in many instances the wives or daughters or sons of soldiers. Now, take the pension agency located in my town, Knoxville, Tenn. One of the men in that agency, Col. Thornberg, aided in raising an east Tennessee regiment and commanded it and rendered valiant service for more than three years in the Union Army. You are going to force those people there to abandon the public service or remove to Washington City. Mr. Chairman, many of those clerks have homes either paid for or partly paid for, and you are not only going to require them to suffer a loss in the surrender of their homes, but you are going to force them to break asunder their family and social relations in the towns in which they were born and reared and in which they have lived all their lives. Many of those people are old people. You are either going to force them to come here and live on a salary where under the high cost of living it is practically impossible to make ends meet

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for just three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee a unanimous consent for three minutes. Is there objection? Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection, but the time has been limited. I give the gentleman three minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Aus-TIN] is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. AUSTIN. We will force them to come here and face the situation or to surrender their positions and turn them adrift in the communities in which they live, to seek other employment. A man who has rendered long and faithful work in the public service and who, back of that, has an honorable military record in the defense of his country, should not be legis-lated out of office when there is practically no economy in it, Mr. Chairman, and it is asking this House to do an unreasonable, unkind, and unpatriotic thing.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McLAUGHLIN.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Do you believe that we ought to keep men in office when it appears clearly and beyond question that their services are not needed?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, there is not a statement from the Appropriation Committee or in its report, or absolutely none before this House, to the effect that the services of a single one of these clerks in the 17 pension agencies are not needed and that his service is not satisfactory. And this pension work that is now done in the 17 pension agencies must be performed either in the agencies or in Washington City. And to faithfully and satisfactorily render that service, these 472 clerks are necessary in these 17 towns or in the city of Washington. I am not favoring abolishing any of these offices. We are not dispensing with any clerks under this bill. It is simply a transfer of a force from the 17 pension agencies to Washington City, where Congress must afterwards increase their compensation.

Mr. ADAIR rose.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. ADAIR. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions have, on a number of occasions, stated in reports to this House that it would not require all these clerks in these agencies to render this service, and that if the agencies were consolidated it would effect a saving to this Government?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Pensions two years ago stated that he could dispense with the use of a hundred of these clerks out of the total number of 472. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know it has been stated in the discussions heretofore that this service could be rendered at the Pension Office here without any material increase in the force of the Pension Bureau. If that statement be true, Mr. Chairman, then they are carrying upon the rolls of the Pension Bureau in this city, when they make that claim, an unnecessary force of men who have not sufficient to do.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; certainly. Mr. ADAIR. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that a large amount of this work is duplicated, and that the Commissioner of Pensions says by the consolidation of these agencies it will be unnecessary to duplicate this work, and thereby effect a saving?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, there are so many pensioners on the rolls in this country, and there is a certain amount of detail and clerical work in order to prepare to pay these pensions, and that work must be performed in a satisfactory and correct manner, whether it is done in Knoxville, Chicago, New York, or in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. There are only seven minutes of my time left

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer briefly to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. We find that these agencies are used in various places without regard to the needs of the Pension Bureau. We are paying pensions geographically without regard to the number of pensioners in the particular locality of the pension agencies.

For instance, the one at Augusta, Me., paid last year 15,257 pensioners. The one at Topeka, Kans., paid 102,828 pensioners. The one at Knoxville, Tenn., in behalf of which my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] speaks, paid 59,253. There is one at Louisville, Ky., which is not a great distance from Knoxville and embraces about the same territory, so far as the residences of pensioners are concerned. That agency at Louisville paid 24,254 pensioners.

Now, we find from the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions before the Committee on Appropriations that the chief clerk at Augusta, Me., gets $1,500; the chief clerk at Knoxville, Tenn., gets $2,000; and the chief clerk at Louisville gets $1,800. I will insert in the RECORD these tables and this evidence, Mr. Chairman, to show the number of employees and their salaries at these various pension agencies. They are shown as fol-

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, how are these employees at the pension agencies employed? I asked the Commissioner of Pensions

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.
Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I want to offer this to the gentleman from Georgia simply as a suggestion: Is it not true that a great deal of the work at these agencies is caused by senda great deal of the work at these agencies is caused by sending out vouchers ahead, and that this bill proposes to abolish that system, and therefore very much less clerical work will be required at the agencies if this new method were adopted?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so. That is the purpose of it. I was going to read the evidence of the Commissioner of Pensions before the committee to show that these pension agencies are busy only a part of the time; that is, the time during which they have to send out these vouchers.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The greater part of their time is used up in sending out these vouchers?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. They are engaged on that work 15 days previous to the date when they are required to send out these 4,000,000 vouchers. That work will be dispensed with if this provision is adopted. The necessity of the work will be done away with, not alone at the agencies, but everywhere.

Now, the Commissioner of Pensions said, in answer to my question as to whether all the employees at these agencies are occupied all the time:

question as to whether all the employees at these agencies are occupied all the time:

Mr. Davengort. We have a few extra on pay day. We take them in and pay them so much. The civil service allows that. It only amounts to about five days. The regular employees are all in the classified service.

Mr. Bingham. Have you a class of employees who are paid less or lower than they should be?

Mr. Davengort. I think all Government clerks are paid too low.

Mr. Bingham. In all the divisions of employment there is a class paid too low?

Mr. Davengort. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bingham. What is your idea of what should be the lowest class of salary for what might be called the humblest line of work?

Mr. Davengort. I should say that anyone doing clerical work—

Mr. Bingham. (Interposing). Have you in your subordinate force a class of subordinates whom you conclude from your experience are paid less than a living wage?

Mr. Davengort. I think so in the clerical force, but take the charwomen; a charwoman gets $33 a month for working only from 3 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I think they are well paid.

Mr. Bingham. So do I.

Mr. Davengort. When you take a clerk, perhaps, a college graduate and, perhaps, a law graduate, and he only gets $1,000, I think he should have more salary.

Mr. Davengort. There is a $900 class which I call my lowest grade that I put clerks in who are worthless, who are not quite ready to be discharged or who can not afford to be discharged. I put them down in the $900 class and let them work along the best they can.

Mr. Bingham. That you regard as low?

Mr. Davengort. A pretty low salary in these times.

Mr. Bartlett. In reference to the service rendered by the employees at the various agencies, do you say that they are constantly engaged in work, or that there is more work to do at certain times and less at others? Is the force we have is absolutely necessary to carry on the work or is it employed only a short while during the quarter?

Mr. Davengort. No. The force we have is absolutely necessary, to carry on

Now, there is no purpose entertained primarily of dismissing any of the employees, but if this proposed change in the manner of paying pensions is carried out, if the proposition to abolish these 17 agencies which will not be necessary to carry out the law if this provision is adopted as we suggest, this clerical force will be useless. Why should the Government maintain force will be useless. Why should the Government maintain useless agencies if the Pension Bureau here can dispense with the services of these pension agencies by the discontinuance of this practice of sending out 4,000,000 vouchers a year, without injury to the pensioners, but, on the contrary, as all the evidence shows and the report of the commissioner and the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations demonstrate, with an actual improvement in the manner of paying the pensioners? This method of payment will be better and more expeditious, and the Government will be more amply protected than it has been heretofore. If we can put into effect this wise scheme which protects the pensioner and protects the Government and brings about a more businesslike way of paying these pensioners, why should we retain a useless method, involving the unnecessary expenditure of money by the retention in the service of useless officials?

That is the whole question. The question is whether we will permit these agencies, which have been established in the various parts of the country from Maine to Kansas, to continue in operation when it is shown that they are needless or whether we shall abolish them. All the evidence goes to show that they were established in those particular localities not so much by reason of the needs of the service, not so much by reason of the fact that their establishment and continued operation would facilitate the payment of pensions in those particular localities, and where the salaries of the agents are not fixed in accordance with the amount of work they do, but rather that they had been established in those particular localities and the salaries of the employees fixed-as, for example, the salaries of the chief clerks-in consequence of the political considerations and exigencies of the particular localities in which they happened to be situated. And all these things being presented to the committee, the change being recommended by those whose duty it is to investigate and report to Congress as to the improved methods and the saving of money, it occurs to me that it is the duty of this House to reduce these expenditures and abolish these useless offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

From and after July 1, 1912, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident who is not a citizen of the United States except for actual disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon that.

Mr. GOOD. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] moves to strike out the last paragraph read.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the paragraph, Mr. Chairman, in order to have a ruling upon the subject. My point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and not warranted.

In doing that I appreciate the fact that under the Holman rule, so called, it is possible that the paragraph is in order. It is possible that under the rules of the House, adopted by the Democratic Party in the House, it is in order on a pension appropriation bill to change the law and cut off pensioners from the pension rolls. If this be in order, of course any proposition in the bill to restrict the payment of pensions would be in order. I should like to know, through a ruling of the Chair, whether the Democratic Party, in its reform of the rules, has so fixed the rules that it is possible on an appropriation bill to cut off pensioners; not possible to reform the law so as to add pen-sioners, but possible under the rules to cut down or cut off all the pensioners on the pension rolls. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rules in force for many years in a Republican House it would have been in order to withhold pensions to any class of pensioners on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. It would have been in order at any time to withhold the appropriation, but it would not have been in order to provide a permanent law striking from the rolls anybody who was on the rolls.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In what better position would a person be who could not get his pension, through the device that might be resorted to under your peculiar rules or under the method adopted under these improved rules?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; under the old rules if a pensioner was not appropriated for he could file a claim in the Court of Claims for his pension. That is the difference between the rules of the two Houses. If your side of the House propose, through practically the only change of importance that they have made in the rules, to fix it so that the Democratic side of the House can strike down all pensioners but can not add anything to the pension roll, I want to know it from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this provision is subject to the point of order under the rules heretofore governing the House, and certainly not under the rules adopted by this House. But in order that there may not be any doubt as to the precedents about it, I have before me and will present to the Chair a decision upon this identical proposition made by former Representative William L. Wilson, of the State of West Virginia, acting as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on February 16, 1893, when this identical proposition was up, and this exact provision was carried in an appropriation bill appropriating for pensions.

I refer the Chair to page 1708 of the Congressional Record, Fifty-second Congress, second session. The House was considering the pension appropriation bill, and the following provision was being considered:

That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a non-resident who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. Burrows. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order against that amendment, and it ought to be heard.

Mr. Martin. Mr. Chairman, the point of order I desire to make is this: That it is perfectly apparent to the Chair, if my understanding is correct, that from this on all of the legislation, or almost all of it, is new legislation. The paragraph which has just been read is:

"That from and after July I, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

The point I make is that this is not germane to the bill; that it is new legislation, and that an amendment of this character can not be put on an appropriation bill by this committee without jurisdiction of the subject matter. I can not add any argument to what has already been said, except to make this point, and I ask a ruling.

The Chairman. Under the ruling, copied by the Chair, as made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Outhwaite] when this pension appropriation bill was before the first session of this Congress, when he held that an amendment to the pension appropriation bill tending to increase the class of persons prohibited from the benefit of pension law is in order, because its effect will be to reduce expenditures, the Chair overrules the point of order.

That seems to have settled this question, if that precedent is

That seems to have settled this question, if that precedent is to be followed, and I apprehend that it is. Now, Mr. Chairman, in absence of anything to the contrary, with such a precedent aptly in point, covering the identical amendment that was offered and enacted into law by that Congress and repealed in 1905, I think, it seems that there ought not to be any department of the ruling of the Chair. We have the identical amendabout the ruling of the Chair. We have the identical amendment offered, the identical point of order made against it, and to say anything further would not add to the strength of the argument.

This is the precedent I have been able to find. I have not gone into the various rulings that have been made for the purpose of analogy, but having been able to find a precedent exactly in point where this legislation was formerly presented and enacted and having found the ruling of the Chair made by an able Member of Congress, distinguished in Congress and in public life, a lawyer and a parliamentarian, I think I have done all that is required of me, and I ask the Chair to sustain the ruling then made as applicable here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the precedents cited by the gentleman from Georgia, and I could cite him other precedents made by the same Chairman to the same effect in 1893. But that was at a time when, I think, the rulings were wrong-at a time when the Democratic Party boldly avowed its opposition to the pensions. Since then we have the pretense on their part that they are in favor of pensions, and the gentleman will remember that while the Chairman of the Committee at that time, Mr. Wilson, ruled this amendment in order, at the next election the country ruled them out of order and sent the largest Republican majority to this Congress ever seen on the floor of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman from Illinois arguing the question of the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, that is a very potent argument to influence the mind of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be a potent argument to the Chair. If a bad ruling was made by Mr. Wilson in 1893, repudiated afterwards by the country, repudiated by your own side of the House by not including the rule when you revised the rules, it ought to be a potent argument against that ruling now, and turning down the pensioners of the country under a claim that a Democratic Chairman made in 1893 authorized a Democratic House to strike down the pensioners.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to reply to my friend's suggestion, which is sort of a "side-bar" remark. and not his argument with reference to this point of order. Of course, whenever my friend from Illinois can not say anything seriously in opposition to a proposition of this kind he necessarily is forced to resort to that kind of an argument. It is an argument not in support of the point of order, but to some policy that the Democrats at some time pursued with reference to pensions. It is true it is history that in 1894 the Democratic Party suffered the greatest defeat in its history, but I never yet heard that it was any decision of a point of order or any ruling made by Mr. Wilson, or any other Democratic Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, that led to that defeat. It is true also that the gentleman and his party last year undertook to deceive the people by passing pension legislation, and they suffered the greatest defeat in their history in 1910. Now, was it because you were in favor of pension legislation, or because you opposed it? It is true you suffered this defeat, and it is true also it is believed you suffered defeat on account of the way the rules of the House were enforced. I do not know how it was.

I do not care to continue that discussion. All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, is that on this point of order I have presented to the Chair the reasons for the rule and the precedents, and I think the Chair ought not to have any doubt as to how this question should be decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair desires to state that the Chair is not at all concerned with the politics of any gentleman who has occupied this chair and who rendered a decision. If it appears to the Chair that the decision is founded upon the rules and has the support of reason and argument, there could be no good reason why the present occupant of the chair should not follow it. The Chair read carefully the decision of Mr. Wilson and has also read the arguments that were made which lead up to that decision. The Chair is constrained to believe that the ruling then enunciated was the only ruling that could be made under the rules of the House. The Chair is still of that opinion and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, when this provision was first submitted it seemed to me that it had in it some element of fairness, and I was inclined to support the proposition of limiting payments of pensions to nonresidents, to citizens of the United States, or to those who had received actual disabilities in the service; but the more I studied this question, and the history of similar legislation, the more I have become convinced that it is not desirable. When President Lincoln called for volunteers he made no distinction, and the country made no distinction, between the volunteer who was born in this country and the volunteer who was born in Canada, in Germany, in Ireland, or in England. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have just passed a service pension bill. In that bill we made no distinction between the citizen of the United States and the citizen of some other country, but provided that every soldier who had rendered service to preserve this Union should be paid a certain pension without regard to his residence or his citizenship. We only provided that the amount that would be paid to each pensioner should depend on his service. The appropriation act making appropriations for pensions, approved March 1, 1893, contained this provision:

That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a non-resident, who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in service.

It will be noticed that with the exception of the year for which the appropriation is made that provision is the same provision, word for word, that is now proposed in this bill. Commissioner of Pensions, in his report for the year ending June 30, 1893, reported that there were 3,856 persons residing abroad who received pensions, and that the amount received by them was $666,967.04. In the same report of the Commissioner of Pensions—and mind you he was a Democratic commissioner—I find this remarkable statement:

missioner—I find this remarkable statement:

A clause of chapter 187 of the public acts of the second session of the Fifty-second Congress provides:

"That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident, who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

I respectfully ask your attention to this clause, in the hope that you may recommend its repeal. It causes great trouble and annoyance to the excepted classes, who constitute the great bulk of nonresident pensioners, in compelling them to make proof that they belong to these excepted classes. And the final result is that payments under it are withheld from but few, save widows and dependent mothers, who have little else for their maintenance. The saving is too little to offset the suffering inflicted in individual cases. If all nonresidents were refused payments of pension some plausible argument might be made in support of such policy; but none can be urged in favor of this law, which, while giving annoyance to all, strikes only the most helpless.

I should not feel warranted in asking attention to this law, but for the fact that it entails much work on this bureau, in answering communications, and seems to yield little practical results except annoyance and apparent cruelty. I recognize to the fullest extent that my sole duty is to execute and administer the laws as they are enacted—fairly and honestly interpreted.

Very respectfully,

WM. LOCHREN,

Commissioner.

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Last year, according to the report of the commissioner, there was paid out to nonresident soldiers, widows, and dependent mothers, $978,471.98. The year in which we enacted the former legislation we paid out $666,967.04; but did that act, that provision that struck only at the dependent mother, only at the helpless widow, result in economy? I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1905, and I am amazed to find that after that law had been in operation one year, instead of working for economy, it cost this Government $28,368.17 more in the payment of pensions to nonresidents than it had before the law was enacted. It is true the first year after this enactment some pensions were held up and not paid and there was a little saving, but, as the commissioner says, the hardship fell on the dependent mothers and on the helpless widows. These dependent mothers and widows are 15 years older now than they were when you discovered that the act of March 1, 1893, was a failure, and I ask you if you are going to make their burdens heavier by imposing this hardship on them? This provision will deprive those same dependent mothers and helpless widows of their They gave a husband, they gave a son, for the de-I do not care whether that sacrifice was fense of the Union. made to preserve the Union or to forever eradicate in this country the curse of human slavery, for in either case they gave their lives to a righteous cause, and I for one am not willing to cast my vote to make harder the burdens of such widows and dependent mothers simply because they live in some other country. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the policy of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the payment of pensions to nonresident aliens can be very easily explained and justified. In 1894, as the gentleman from Iowa pointed out, there were 3,447 nonresidents of the United States receiving pensions from the United States. Seventeen hundred of those persons resided in the Dominion of Canada. Since that time the number of nonresident pensioners has increased to 5,476, an increase in 20 years of 2,049, and 2,712 of those pensioners are now residing in Canada, or an increase of 1,019. It has been stated to 1,019. in Canada, or an increase of 1,012. It has been stated, I do not know how authoritatively, that many of these pensioners, disgusted with the conditions in the State of the gentleman from Iowa, are taking refuge in Canada, and perhaps he prefers that they should be supported there rather than have them live within the confines of his own Commonwealth. A Republican Congress passed a law much more severe than this, much more far-reaching in its effect, to which gentlemen on that side did dissent, but which they very vigorously supported, and that is the law which deprives of his citizenship any naturalized American citizen who permanently resides without the United States for a fixed period of years. There are different views of the policy by which pensions are awarded to those who have served the Nation or to persons who were dependent upon those who so served. In nearly every civilized nation in the world pensions cease when the pensioner either removes without the confines of the country within which he is domiciled and from which he receives a pension, or whenever he enters the civil service of the Government and receives compensation for such

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILL. Suppose a man is drawing a pension in this country, having received it for services rendered to his Government, and he moves to another country either for the sake of his health or to spend his declining days in happiness; is it the opinion of the gentleman from New York that his pension should then be cut off?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If he removes from the United States to spend his declining years in some other country, under some other flag, under some other Government that he prefers to the United States, and he continues there sufficiently long under the law, if a naturalized citizen, he may lose his citizenship in the United States. What greater claim is there to be supported at the expense of the people of the United States than to have the protection and the benefit of the laws of the United States?

May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

HAMILL. Are not pensions granted not with regard to the citizenship of a man, because men who are not citizens are taken in time of war, but rather on the theory that a man has rendered service to the Government and in gratitude for his services the Government pays him a pension?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have hitherto expressed the opinion that merely as a matter of right the Government does not or at least should not distribute money to those who have served in its wars regardless of their necessities or their condition.

I have no sympathy with the theory that simply because a man served to protect the country which he prefers to all others, and in the preservation of which he is vitally interested, that thereby the country becomes liable to him pecuniarily regardless of his necessities. Some gentlemen differ from me in that position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the Argentine Republic, in Austria-Hungary, in Belgium, in Denmark, in France, Great Britain, Greece, Sweden, and Servia, the laws of which countries I have had the opportunity to examine to some extent, pensions cease to those who rendered service to the country upon their removing without the limits of the country, except in some instances where special provision is made by which consent is given to the pensioner to reside abroad.

No person residing in the Dominion of Canada who served Great Britain in any war can remove to the United States and permanently take up his abode here and be the beneficiary of the pension laws of the Dominion of Canada, unless permission to do so be obtained from the proper official. If those who have rendered service to the United States for the purpose of perpetuating our Government prefer to live under some other form of government, prefer some other country, then, so far as I am concerned, except in the few cases excepted, I would not pay them from the Public Treasury to keep them from becoming burdens on some other Government. Under this provision there are excepted those who are receiving pensions because of disability received in the service.

Mr. FULLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois? Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. FULLER. I would like to know if you have the statistics of the number of soldiers who are now living abroad who were living abroad at the time they enlisted in the war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not, except I know that in the past 20 years the number of nonresident pensioners has increased from 3,400 to 5,400, and some odd.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. I will. Mr. SHERWOOD. What right has the Government of the United States to take money out of the Treasury and send it abroad to men who are not contributing to the support of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt the propriety of it, I will say to the gentleman, without going into the question of right. I am opposed to the policy.

Mr. SHERWOOD. So am I.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not hesitate to express my opinion in that respect.

Mr. AUSTIN. Can I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield for a question. Mr. AUSTIN.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to know, if this provision remains in the bill, how it will affect the widow or dependent mother of a soldier who is living abroad. It says it shall apply only to soldiers who are injured in the service. Will it strike from the pension roll the dependent mothers or widows of soldiers living abroad?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a Filipino joined the Army during the Philippine insurrection and died from disabilities incurred in the service, and his mother is now in possession of a pension, would that cut the mother off?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know of any such cases of Filipinos who joined the Army during the insurrection, or would have been tolerated in the American Army at that time?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly. I have no doubt such cases exist. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Such a condition may exist in the Philippine

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] called attention, Mr.-Chairman, to the fact that in 1894 the United States was paying to pensioners of this class $666,967.04. Last year there was paid $978,471.98. And if the increase continues at the same ratio, and if the emigration from some of the States in the Middle West to the Dominion of Canada continues, then in a very short time this sum will be very largely augmented.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not contend that under this provision an American citizen, native born, on going to Canada would lose his pension?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not a native-born citizen.

Mr. MANN. The other class comprises a very small number, does it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We were unable to get any definite information as to that. It was difficult to classify the persons. But I base my support of this proposition upon the ground that not only is there no obligation but there is no justification to pay pensions from the Public Treasury to nonresident aliens who were not injured or who were not disabled in actual service. I know that an appeal can be made to the sympathies of men; but, after all, our public duty is to the people of the United States, not to the subjects of foreign nations; and I prefer to keep my obligations to the people who contribute to and maintain and support this Government rather than to relieve other nations from the burden of supporting those who belong to them. [Applause.]
Mr. CANNON and Mr. CRUMPACKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois first and later the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CANNON. I hope, Mr. Chairman, I may have 15 minutes. If I do not use it all, I will yield back the remainder.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois a

The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this proposed legislation, and I shall favor and vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

I want to say at the very outset that I do not believe you gentlemen on the other side of the House would vote for this proposed legislation if you understood what it would do, and I am quite sure that this side of the House would not vote for it as proposed. The United States, in achieving its independence, owed much to people who were never citizens of the United [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have now adorning the corners of one square in the city of Washington, with a statue of Jackson in the center, monumental statues of Rochambeau, Kosciusko, Von Steuben, and Certainly Von Steuben and Kosciusko and Lafayette received liberal land grants. Pulaski also rendered valuable service toward the establishment of our Republic. I do not recollect whether he or Rochambeau ever received compensation Within the period of my service as a Member of Congress, and particularly within the last four years, we have adorned that great square-Lafayette Square-with statues of foreign-born patriots who never were naturalized in this There are their monuments, erected to stand to their memory in perpetuity.

Now, what will this proposition do? It will take away the pension from the man who served in the war for the preservation of the Union and goes to Canada. Such a man, before he can homestead land in Canada, must become a citizen there, and the moment he becomes a citizen there he is deprived of his pension here—or would be if this provision were enacted into law-no matter whether he served for a long or a short period as a Union soldier in the Civil War. There are widows in such cases-some to my knowledge who are widows of as good soldiers as ever fought in that great contest—who have gone over to take up the cheap land in the Canadian northwest. Under this proposal they would no longer be pensioned. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to another fact: In that great struggle for the preservation of the Union, which cost so much to the Northland and to the Southland, a struggle long protracted, it is an open secret that the ruling classes of the Old World were not in sympathy with our cause. Great Britain, you will recollect, so conducted herself that she was subsequently constrained to pay to the United States, if I recollect aright, an award of $15,000,000 on account of the Alabama trouble. All of us recollect it. Canada, so far as the ruling authorities were concerned, so far as her Government was concerned, so far as the viceroy was concerned, was not in sympathy with our cause. Our southern brethren, you know, went up and camped across the border and organized in Canada without much interruption or great discouragement from the Canadian authorities. You older Members will recollect it. But the hearts of the common people in Canada did sympathize with the tens of thousands of their friends and neighbors who had come to Illinois and other great States in the West, and many to the East, and they came here and enlisted in the Union

It was a pretty serious matter to our Navy to get seamen. Canadian seamen came over and enlisted in our Navy, and Canadians also enlisted in the Union Army. Many of them never became citizens. Yet Kosciusko, Von Steuben, Lafayette, and Rochambeau never had a heart more devoted to the welfare of the great Republic than had these humble men. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, half of them who live in Canada were born in this country and have gone to Canada to improve their condition.

Mr. MANN. And there are some in Ireland, too. Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; some in Ireland, some in England, some in Germany, and some in France.

Gentlemen, I do not believe you can afford to do it. It amounts in round numbers to $900,000. You did it once, in 1893; but a Republican House of Representatives came in in 1895, with Cleveland President and Lochren, of Minnesota, who lately crossed over, Commissioner of Pensions, and he recommended the repeal of that law which you now propose to reenact, and it was repealed.

I do not know that there is much more for me to say. listened with great interest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and one of the subcommittee that prepared this bill. He covered the ground.

I am a little bit surprised that my very good friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Fitzgerald], should seek to justify this matter. He says a Republican Congress passed a law that, as it turns out, naturalized citizens of the United States who go abroad and abandon their residence in this country shall lose their citizenship in five years, as I recollect it, if it be done in fact. Why? Because it became apparent to Congress that there were numbers of men who came over just long enough to be naturalized, in order that they might have the protection of the American flag. fraud upon naturalization, a fraud upon the great Republic that they never served, coming without any genuine intention to become permanent residents of this country, and then going back and calling for our protection. I think the vote was unanimous, if I recollect aright, or substantially so, in both the House and Senate, in the enactment of that law.

Something has been said about these Canadians who came over when the ruling powers in Great Britain were not in sympathy with the Government of the United States in that great struggle. They came over because their kindred were There are two counties in the district I have the honor to represent which were settled largely by the Canadian French, whose kindred are back in Canada. They have come here from the standpoint of sympathy and love as much as Kosciusko and Lafayette came.

Gentlemen, I do not believe you can afford to pass this legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.] . Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be concluded in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bart-LETT] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph be concluded in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] should not prevail, then I appeal to gentlemen on the other side of this House to amend this provision. In all fairness it should not apply to the widows and dependent mothers of soldiers who are living When I had charge of the American consulate at Glasgow I came in contact with at least 75 of our pensioners, and I remember putting this question to them when they came at the end of the first quarter to execute their vouchers: is it that you are living here in Scotland?" And the reply in a majority of the cases was that they had returned to Scotland for two reasons-first, that their kindred lived in Scotland and, in the second place, the cost of living was much less in Scotland than in America. They had reached that age in life where their earning capacity was practically nothing; but with the liberal pension system of our great country and the low cost of living in Scotland and residing with their relatives or kinsmen they could make ends meet. There came to the consulate a good old Scotch mother with her children every three months to execute a voucher. All that she has in this life in the way of an income is a pension from this generous Republic, given to her to support her for the loss of a brave son. Our country had no claims upon him, for he could have escaped military Now you ask this great Republic that used this son service. in its trying hour to put this mother, in her old age and her poverty, into a Scotch poorhouse. Oh, no, my countrymen; we have not reached the point where economy means putting into a poorhouse the widow or the mother of a man who gave his life that your country and my country might live. There are more than 400 of these people in Ireland. Their pensions not only aid in sustaining their lives, but I do not doubt that they aid in giving relief to some of their deserving relatives.

Mr. RUSSELL. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to know my friend's construction of the provision as it now reads as affecting widows and mothers of soldiers killed in the service. The gentleman speaks of the widow or mother of a soldier who gave his life for the preservation of the Union and who came from another coun-If a soldier from a foreign country came here and was killed in the service, would not the gentleman understand that this provision would pension his widow? This section reads "disabilities incurred in the service."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired

Mr. BARTLETT. I will yield the gentleman one minute

Mr. AUSTIN. I put that very question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD]—how this would affect the widow and dependent mother-and my recollection of his answer is that this provision would not protect

Mr. RUSSELL. My recollection is just to the contrary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, let me read the provision:

From and after July 1, 1912, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident who is not a citizen of the United States except for actual disabilities incurred in the service.

Now, the widow or dependent mother had no disability in-curred in the line of service, and this strikes every one of that class from the pension roll.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is incumbent on the United States Government to take care of dependents of other countries. The fact is that in every instance cited by my friend from Tennessee, if, perchance, there was a soldier that served the English Government in its wars and had been pensioned and come over here and died and left a dependent family, the mere fact that he left England would at once deprive him of his pension. Why should we support the de-pendent citizens of England who happened to serve in the war, or whose ancestors served in the war, when England does not support ours under similar circumstances?

This does not propose to take away the pension of any man who suffered actual disability in the service, but it does say that those foreigners who enlisted and received pay and large bounty, who have taken up not only their residence in a foreign country but renounced their allegiance to the United States Government, if they owed it any, and are therefore citizens of foreign countries, shall not receive a pension. This does not take away the pension from any citizen of the United States simply because he lives abroad, but it takes it away from those who reside abroad and are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. I note by the report that last year there was paid to persons residing in the Philippine Islands $16,639.12; Porto Rico, $5,820. Would not this practically eliminate all of

Mr. BARTLETT. No; those are the people who reside there in the Consular Service, or who are citizens of the United

Mr. GOOD. But suppose they are citizens of Porto Rico or the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not care to enter into that particular That is a question upon which the Supreme Court of the United States has been equally divided, and it may equally divide again. That is not the question. They are not residents abroad. It is a country adjacent to and appertaining to the United States, to use the language of the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is proper, this is just to those pensioners who still reside in the United States, and it is just to the taxpayers of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. On that, Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were 86 ayes and 49 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000; and from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be only one agent for the payment of pensions to be appointed in the manner now provided by law and who shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum; and section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment of agents for the payment of pensions is

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out lines 15 to 23, inclusive, and insert therefor the following: "For salary of 18 agents for the payment of pensions, $72,000."

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest that the gentleman put in "at a salary of $4,000 each."

Mr. WILLIS. That can be offered subsequently. man, I feel that in fairness I should state in beginning the discussion of this amendment that it was prepared by my colleague from Ohio, Mr. TAYLOR, who is unavoidably detained at his home until now, and I have offered it at his request. He has just arrived and will speak for himself. I want to say that in announcing that the amendment was prepared by the collaboration of my colleague and myself I do not mean to intimate that this is a perfunctory performance on my part, because if the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, had not said anything about it I should have prepared the amendment and offered it, because I think it is just and fair.

I want to call attention, in the first place, to this fact, that this proposition that is embodied in this bill to abolish the pension agencies is not recommended by the Commissioner of Pen-What has been said here in the discussion indicates that many Members think this is a plan of the Commissioner of Pensions and recommended by him. I assert without fear of being overthrown in that particular that the Commissioner of Pensions did not recommend this, and, in fact, has exactly the contrary opinion about it.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the provisions embodied in the bill under discussion are taken almost word for word from the bill drafted by the Commissioner of Pensions, to be found on page 27 in the last annual report of the commissioner, except the paragraph abolishing the pension agencies, a provision not to be found in the commissioner's bill and not approved by him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman states that the Pension Commissioner has not recommended this plan. Has not he done so in a former report? I notice in the hearings the following:

Mr. Bartlett. This proposed plan would dispense with the sending of the checks to the agency at Knoxville and having them countersigned?

Mr. Davenpoet. It would. If we paid all from Washington there would not be any agency in Knoxville.

Mr. Bartlett. Is not that a feasible plan?

Mr. Davenpoet. I do not know what those higher in authority than I want to do. I would like to see the agencies reduced by the plan. They could be reduced, I think, and they are very expensive as they are to-day.

Mr. Davenport, in response to several questions, made this statement:

There is just one objection. It puts 18 men out of office—that is all. In case it should be brought about, 18 as fine men as ever lived in the country—our pension agents—and, of course, they would not like to lose their positions. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to my friend for reading that. I had already read it, and no doubt many others had.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for 10 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to read something else that appears in these hearings that indicates that the Commissioner of Pensions did not contemplate the abolishment of these agencies. I now turn to page 16. There is a series of questions and answers. The Commissioner of Pensions said, at the bottom of the page, in response to a question by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]:

I guess all of them, if they were forced to, and pay from here, but I hardly think that will be done at once, because this is an entire change in the way of payments, and no one can tell how it will work until we get it into operation. We believe it is all right. It is such a radical change in the way of payment that we would have to try it first on one agency and see if it was feasible and worked out all right.

The statement of the commissioner, on page 16 of the hearings, is as follows:

Mr. Bartlett. The next item is, "For salaries of agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,060 each," and your estimate for the next fiscal year is $72,000, the same as has been carried since 1887?

Mr. Davenport, Yes, sir; 18 agents, at $4,000. That is what it calls for for.

Mr. Bartlett. There was a provision in the last pension appropria-

Mr. Bartlett. There was a provision in the last pension appropriation bill which read as follows:

"The Commissioner of Pensions is directed to formulate and embrace in his next annual report a simplified plan for the payment of pensions, whereby all preliminary vouchers shall be abolished and the only vouchers required shall be attached to or a part of the payment checks, and the commissioner shall further report what, if any, changes in the law are necessary to carry such a plan into effect."

In your report you have complied with that direction of Congress, as I understand it?

Mr. Davendout, Yes. sir.

Mr. DAVENPORT, Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. And if Congress adopts the plan of paying pensions in the manner you have suggested, in pursuance to the direction of Congress, it will dispense with how many of these agents?

Mr. DAVENPORT. We might dispense with all of them in the near future.

Mr. Bartlett. How many would it dispense with in the coming year?
Mr. Davender. That would depend. The law as it is now says that the agencies must be in groups of three. The proposed plan changes that to arrange the pensioners into groups of three, instead of the agencies, and, by so doing, power would be given to reduce the agencies to one or six or nine, as could be done without injuring the efficiency of the service. Gradually the agencies might be reduced, although I can not anticipate what action will be taken.

Mr. Bartlett. By the new method you have suggested?
Mr. Davender. Yes. There certainly will be a reduction after a time.

time.
Mr. BARTLETT. You do not know how many or which ones would be

Mr. Bartlett. You do not know how many or which ones would be reduced?

Mr. Davenport. I do not know anything about it at this time.

Mr. Bartlett. If this plan which you have formulated in pursuance to the direction of Congress was put into effect before the end of this fiscal year, how many could you dispense with then; all, or how many?

Mr. Davenport. I guess all of them, if we were forced to, and pay from here, but I hardly think that would be done at once, because this is an entire change in the way of payment, and no one can tell hew it will work until we get it into operation. We believe it is all right. It is such a radical change in the way of payment that we would have to try it first on one agency and see if it was feasible and worked out all right.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] read that the Commissioner of Pensions said it would be possible to reduce the number of agencies, and I am in favor of that. commissioner did not say in what the gentleman read or anywhere else in the hearings that I have been able to find that it would be feasible immediately to abolish all the agencies. He does claim that the agencies could be consolidated, but it is the idea of the Commissioner of Pensions that at least some of those agencies should be retained, and in further proof of that proposition I invite attention to page 20 of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for this year, wherein he goes on to explain how this proposed plan would work. I want to say that I am in favor of the plan. I am not objecting to the plan of payment of pensions by means of checks. I think it is a commendable project, but it is only a project, and until we can be assured that it is workable, I say that it is extremely inadvisable to ingraft upon the pension system something that will work confusion, something which the Commissioner of Pensions himself, for whom I have the highest respect and regard, says is highly experimental and that he does not know whether it will work or not. The important thing in the consideration of this bill is not the supposed saving of five or ten thousand dollars here, but the great question is the convenience of the pensioners, the old soldiers and those dependent upon them, that are scattered about over the country.

Referring back again to the report of the commissioner, he says, on page 20:

As the law now exists it is necessary to place these pensioners on the agency according to the district in which the pensioner lives. With the law amended as suggested, the entire number of survivors and widows of the Mexican War might be placed on one agency, the survivors and widows of the Indian wars on another agency, and the widows of the War of 1812 on another agency, each separate class being accounted for by 1 agency only, instead of by 18 as now.

Evidently he contemplated that while there might be a consolidation of agencies, the system of the payment of pensions through the agency should at least be retained until we have proof that it would work out all right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to read two or three lines of what the Commissioner of Pensions said, which the gentleman has evidently overlooked and which appear on page 19?

Mr. WILLIS. I think I have read all of that already, but I have no objection to the gentleman repeating it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Speaking about abolishing the agencies, Mr. Davenport said:

There is just one objection. It puts 18 men out of office.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byens] has already read that and it is now a part of my speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not catch it, but I understood the gentleman to say that the commissioner had not made any statement about it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I said that the Commissioner of Pensions in no report nor anywhere else that I had ever been able to find had recommended the abolishment of the agencies, and the language that the gentleman was proposing to read, and that the gentleman from Tennessee did read, does not say at all that the commissioner is in favor of that proposition. He simply says, when he is pressed by members of the committee, that possibly it could be worked out, that he did not know, that it is an experiment, but that he believed he could work it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The truth of the matter is the Commissioner of Pensions has advocated this.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not quite get the gentleman's statement. Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of Pensions had advocated the abolition of these pension agencies every year during the past five or six years.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have absolute confidence in the word of the gentleman from New York, but I wonder where the commissioner has done that. He has not in his report, and I challenge the gentleman from New York to show a place in the commissioner's report this year or any other year where he has ever advocated this proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the same reasons existed for the abolition of the agencies; there are just 18 reasons.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WILLIS. If I can get more time. I have several things want to say.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman from Ohio has just stated that one of the main arguments against the proposed change is that the pensioners will be greatly inconvenienced. Will the gentleman kindly point out to the committee wherein there will be any inconvenience after the first year?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, that is precisely the thing I have in mind to do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I can not answer three or four questions at once. I want to take care of my friend from Wisconsin. That is one of the points I want to make clear if I can. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin voted for the Sherwood bill; I hope he did.

Mr. KOPP. I did.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well. We hope it will pass at the other end of the Capitol and become a law, and we believe it will. [Applause.] The Commissioner of Pensions says right in this hearing, on page 5, that if that becomes a law there will be 25,000 applications per day; that with the clerks the department now has they will not be able to handle more than 400 per day. Now, when this additional work is coming on the Pension Bureau, 25,000 applications per day, or something like thatthat is the estimate made by the commissioner-when there are 450,000 claims to be passed upon, when he admits that he can not adjudicate more than 400 a day, I say that it will lead to tremendous confusion to provide that the office of the Commissioner of Pensions shall have all this additional work of paying pensions dumped upon it without any provision for additional help. The statement of the commissioner, on page 5 of the hearings, is as follows:

Mr. Bartlett. Have you an estimate of how many cases probably would be disposed of during the first year and what would be allowed?

Mr. Bartlett. You are getting onto a pretty tender subject; but let me say that we feel that the bill would probably bring into the bureau 450,000 claims. As you all know, the force is old. There are very few young clerks. The average age of the real working force is nearly 60 years in the Pension Bureau. I do not suppose that we could settle, on an average, over 400 claims a day with the force as it is now, and so you can figure how long it would take to settle the 450,000 claims.

and so you can figure how long it would take to settle the 450,000 claims.

Mr. Bartlett. On an average of 400 claims a day?

Mr. Davender. Four hundred a day, perhaps more. I can not tell you how my force will break in. I have a very reliable force, but slow, because they are old, very old, but they are accurate men and women, and when people get old they can not work quite as fast as when young.

Mr. Bartlett. Unfortunately.

Mr. Davender. Not that they do not understand the work, because they do the very best they can, and are always there, but for a time it would probably take my whole force to take care of the rush work, which would come in at the rate of 25,000 a day, and we could not adjudicate anything. We have to send out a receipt for every claim that comes in, and then it has to be recorded. We have to be very accurate about these things, because every claim means money.

Mr. Bartlett. Would you necessarily have to increase your force in order to efficiently and properly dispose of the work?

Mr. Davender. I would have to increase the force in order to meet the demand for prompt adjudication.

Mr. Bartlett. To what extent would the force have to be increased? Mr. Davender. I would have to have three or four hundred clerks temporarily, for a year or so. I do not see how it could be avoided.

Mr. KOPP. How many clerks are now employed in the

Mr. KOPP. How many clerks are now employed in the various agencies, all told?

Mr. WILLIS. It was stated by a gentleman here this moraing that there were something over 400 last year.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman will concede at least one-half of that number can be put to work in the one office?

Mr. WILLIS. I will concede that according to the evidence that it is probable that practically the whole force will be brought to the city of Washington, and in that connection I want to call his attention to another fact. The gentleman knows and the members of the committee generally know that the salaries of clerks in the city of Washington are higher than are in the Government service outside of the city of Washington by from $200 to $300 per annum on the average, as the commissioner states in his testimony that the average outside is perhaps $1,000 or $1,100. Now, then, what will happen? We find this line of so-called economy will result in increased expenditures. We are seeing simply one thing-the abolition of these 17 offices that will save $68,000 save $68,000. Now, here is something of which the gentleman perhaps has not thought. These clerks will have to be brought here and there will come a demand upon Congress that these clerks shall be paid as other clerks are paid. The gentleman, if this goes through, will have an opportunity before the end of this Congress to vote for another bill to increase the salaries of the clerks, 300 of them-

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman-

Mr. KOPP. The only statement of the gentleman that I am challenging is that it will inconvenience the pensioners, and I again ask the gentleman to show any inconvenience other than the problematical inconvenience that he suggests when the Sherwood bill becomes a law.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought I had made that perfectly clear. It is evident to me that if you are going to put 25,000 further applications into the Pension Bureau-

Mr. KOPP. They are not there; I am taking the conditions of to-day

Mr. WILLIS. Does not the gentleman think they ought to be there?

Mr. KOPP. Next year; we have plenty of time——Mr. WILLIS. Does not the gentleman think the Sherwood or some other bill will be passed long before next year?

I hope so.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly; so do I, and I think it is extremely unwise and extremely unjust now to throw all this work in there without knowing what will be the result. The Commissioner of Pensions himself said he does not know whether the plan will work.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. WILLIS.

Now, Mr. Chairman— TT. Before the gentleman proceeds I would Mr. BARTLETT. like to call his attention to the fact that he has made a statement-I do not know whether he really meant it-that the clerk hire paid to clerks in pension agencies outside of Washington is less than that which is paid in Washington.

Mr. WILLIS. I said substantially that-that it was the general rule that clerks outside of Washington received less pay than clerks in Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not the rule, however, that clerks in pension agencies outside of Washington receive less pay than the same class of clerks in the city of Washington. show the gentleman that he is mistaken about that, I call his attention to the statement furnished the committee by the Commissioner of Pensions, found on page 30 of the hearings of the committee, in which it appears that the clerks are graded in those offices just as they are graded here, and the salaries in those agencies are the same as paid in the Pension Office for a like class of work.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I was simply making this statement, which I reiterate, that it is a general rule in the Government service, and the distinguished gentleman from Georgia knows it very much better than I do-

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is mistaken with reference to these particular clerks in this particular service with which we are dealing. They are not paid less in these agencies than they are paid here in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. WILLIS. If you remove these 300 clerks to the city of Washington, there will be an effort, following this bill immediately, to increase their salaries, making them commensurate with the general standard of pay for clerks. There will be an

$50,000 or $60,000. If you say there are 300 clerks and their salaries are increased $300 a year, it will amount to $90,000. Here is another item. It is admitted, on page 27 of the hearings, that it will cost $10,000 at least to move these agencies from the places in which they are now located to Washington. Mr. AUSTIN. And they have got to rent a building here in Washington.

Yes; so far as I know-and I will be glad to be corrected if I am wrong—these pension agencies, without a single exception, carry on their work in buildings that are now owned by the Government. If it is proposed that these agencies shall be abolished and this work shall be done in Washington, what will be done? You will be confronted with an appropriation bill to do one of two things-either to erect a new building or to rent buildings-because any man who has ever had any business at the Pension Office knows that that building is overcrowded; and these agencies will have to be housed in new buildings at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, or you will have to rent buildings, and everybody knows we have enough Government offices located in rented buildings scattered over the city of Washington now.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask the gentleman if we are not renting buildings at these various agencies throughout the country now?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I was unfortunate in my use of language if I did not make that matter clear. I stated that, so far as I knew—and if the gentleman knows differently shall be glad for him to give me the information-so far as I know there is only 1 agency out of the 18 where they have to rent a building. The other 17 are housed in Government-owned property, and there is no rent to pay. If you pass this, you have got to rent buildings to accommodate them here or erect a new building

Mr. AUSTIN. The only exception is New York City, where we pay $4,500 a year rent.

Mr. WILLIS. That was brought out by the gentleman from Georgia in his speech the other day

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that the chief clerk at Columbus and the chief clerk at Topeka are getting greater salaries than any other chief clerk at any other agency?

Mr. WILLIS. I have not investigated that, and I do not care anything about it as to whether it is true or not. I will admit that it is true, but it has no bearing on this proposition at all. What I am talking about is, that when you add the probability and almost certainty that there will be a movement to increase the general scale of salaries, and on top of that you have to pay for rent of buildings, or perhaps have to erect a building, I say to you, Mr. Chairman, this proposition will not save a single penny.

It will do another thing. It will still further centralize the Government.

I do not believe that all of the activities of this Government ought to be centralized in the city of Washington. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think it is a good thing to have these activities scattered out somewhat through the country. I do not know just where all these agencies are. There is one at Topeka, Kans.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is one in Columbus, Ohio, too. Mr. WILLIS. Yes; but that is not in my district.

Mr. FOWLER. If we were to transfer them all to Ohio and put them under one government there, how would the gentleman like that? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. So far as that is concerned, I would say that it is not necessary to transfer the offices to Ohio. It would be better to leave them here and still have an Ohio man that will be at the head of the whole shebang. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. May I ask the gentleman who is that man? Mr. WILLIS. Oh, it is not necessary to name him. That [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman does not mean Gov. Harmon? Who, else could he refer to? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Wr WILLIS. The best disproof of that proposition is that the progressive Democrats of Ohio say he will not be the man [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. And some Republicans say that the other man will not do at all. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]
Mr. WILLIS. But all that has nothing to do with this measure. I am simply talking about the merits of this bill.

Now, there is another proposition. There is an advantage in having these agencies located throughout the country, not only in the saving of money, but on account of the fact that the with the general standard of pay for clerks. There will be an increase in expenditure of nobody knows how much—maybe visory duties for the benefit of the old soldiers that are of tremendous advantage. The location of a pension agent in any State is a great advantage to the old soldiers of that State. I say to you frankly, Mr. Chairman, that in the consideration of this bill it is not simply a question as to whether it would save money, though my information, secured through personal investigation, convinces me that it would not in the long run save a penny. It would simply concentrate more business here in the city of Washington. It would still more concentrate here the affairs of the Government, here where they are already so concentrated that they are almost unwieldy.

I repeat I believe in the long run it will not be economy. But I say the first consideration, as it seems to me, ought to be the one I alluded to in the earlier part of my remarks, namely, that it would be an inconvenience and hardship to the old soldiers. If the proposition were made that this could be done in the remote future or in the near future, say two or three years ahead, so that in the meantime we could work out the details of this scheme, it would be all right. But now, in view of the increased work of the Pension Bureau, when there are soon to be referred to it 25,000 claims per day, with that Pension Building already overcrowded and the employees working as hard as they can and still unable to keep up with the flood of claims as it is, together with the prospect of new legislation which we all hope will pass at the other end of the Capitol and become a law, I say, in view of all this it is exceedingly inopportune and ill advised and ill timed to take up this work of paying pensions and dump it all on the Pension Bureau in the face of the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions that he does not know, whether the plan would work or not.

The result will be that there will be delay in the payment' pensions. The old soldiers and those dependent upon them of pensions. understand the present system. It has been working satisfactorily for years. It has been working well. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that if we take up a new system it should first be put to a trial, so that we can be sure that the old soldiers will not be inconvenienced by it. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be adopted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The proposition which is now presented to the House is in no sense a novel one or one upon which the House has scant or imperfect information. When the pension bill—a similar measure to this-was presented in the last Congress, the Committee on Appropriations reported a recommendation almost identical with the one we are considering now. It was favorably acted upon in the House, and the consolidation of the 18 pension agencies throughout the country was ordered, so far as this body could effectuate that result. As I remember it, in another body an amendment was insisted upon, allowing the old law to remain as it had been prior to that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the concrete question which is before this committee at this hour is this: Having pensions amounting to $152,000,000 to disburse aroually throughout every section of our country, how can that labor be most efficiently and economically done; through one central distributing agency or through 18 branch agencies?

I sympathize with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Ohio, for it must be a delightful incident in a congressional career to have a pension agency established and maintained in one's district, but I think there is a larger consideration than any local concern involved in this question this afternoon. We understand thoroughly that if every Member of this House were consulted upon this question and should surrender to his own individual desire, we should have a pension agency located in every congressional district in the United States. But that would not be good economy; it would not be good efficiency; it would not be good business administration.

What are we trying to do? We are trying to pay their pensions to these worthy and disabled and deserving veterans in such a way as to be most convenient for them and most economical to the General Government. That is what we are attempting to do, and I want first, now, to notice the matter of inconvenience, as suggested by my friend from Ohio [Mr. Willis]. He insists here with a good deal of eloquence that if these 18 agencies are consolidated into one and all the others are abolished a good deal of inconvenience will be required of these old veterans, scattered from one coast to the other and these old veterans, scattered from one coast to the other and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. I disagree with that view, for I believe that these pensions, going from Maine to California and from Minnesota to Louisiana, can be paid as acceptably from a central office at Washington or Chicago or St. Louis or Des Moines as they are paid now from these branch agencies; and on that question of convenience I want to read what the Commissioner of Pensions himself said in the hearwhat the Commissioner of Pensions himself said in the hearings before the committee. I am certain it is a matter that has been overlooked inadvertently by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIST.

In those hearings he was discussing the feasibility of the reform which is proposed in the payment of pensions-the check system which he hopes to inaugurate—and he was interrogated as to the effect of consolidating the agencies. This interesting colloquy occurred:

Mr. Bartlett. Do you not believe it would be advisable in the administration of the Pension Office?

That is, to establish this new system of payment. This is found on page 18:

Mr. DAVENPORT. I believe the plan for paying by check would be. I think it is the greatest move that has been contemplated in the way of paying pensions.

Mr. BARTLETT. If you adopt this plan as suggested in the report, will it be necessary to make provision for any agency outside of Washington?

Now, gentlemen, it can not be maintained here that the Commissioner of Pensions did not have in contemplation at that time the possibility that this Congress would abandon all agencies except the one at Washington. That very subject was under consideration, and when asked if more than one agency was necessary, he replied:

Mr. Davenfort. Not at all. We can take care of it ourselves without any trouble.

Mr. Bartlett. As I understand you, the Pension Bureau could take care of that?

Mr. Davenfort. Yes, sir; I think we could.

Mr. Bartlett. There is no inconvenience to the pensioner or the Government in that method?

Now, listen:

Mr. Davender. Oh, no. Let me illustrate it. I just got a report from San Francisco, and it took the agent there 15 days to make his payments, and some man did not get his pension check for 15 days. If it had been paid from Washington that check would have been nailed on the morning of pay day, and the pensioner would have received it within five days. showing that under this plan, if it works out all right, we can make the payments, even on the western coast, more quickly than the agent at San Francisco can now make them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr, Chairman, here is the testimony of a high official of this Government, totally disinterested in what-ever action may be adopted by the House this afternoon. He says that if these agencies are abandoned and the check system of payment reported by the Committee on Appropriations shall be availed of, he can make distributions to the pensioners in San Francisco more expeditiously than they are now made through the branch office located there.

Mr. FOWLER. More expeditiously by 10 days, Mr. KENDALL. Earlier by 10 days. Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENDALL. I will.
Mr. WILLIS. I would like to have the interpretation placed by my genial friend from Iowa on what the commissioner says at the bottom of page 16 as to the workability and certainty of this plan.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to run away from a discussion of what the commissioner says. I am glad that he said that, for it has furnished my excellent friend from Ohio the only satisfaction he has been able to extract from all the hearings that were held by the committee.

Now, when I was interrupted I was remarking upon the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions as to the possibility of making pension payments without interruption and with efficiency if this new plan should be adopted. I want to read again what he said:

If it had been paid from Washington that check would have been mailed on the morning of pay day and the pensioner would have received it within five days, showing that under this plan, if it worked out all right, we could make the payments, even on the western coast, more quickly than the agent at San Francisco can now make them.

Now I come to the milk in the coconut. We now uncover the real reason which has been expressed, and which will be fur-ther advanced, why these useless agencies should be perpetuated:

Mr. Bartlett. So the experience you have had is that it would be more convenient for the pensioner in the way of promptly getting his pension than by distributing it among the agents?

Mr. Dayenfort. You are just right, Judge.

Mr. Bartlett. It would not only be a benefit to the service but a matter of convenience and benefit to the pensioner?

Mr. Dayenfort. There is just one objection—

I think there is a strong suspicion in the minds of Members here as to just what that objection is-

It puts 18 men out of office, that is all.

Does anybody suppose the Commissioner of Pensions has advocated as sweeping and far-reaching a proposition as that without having given the subject fair and faithful consideration? Why, it is not new. This matter of the consolidation of agencies, while it has not been recommended by Mr. Daven-port, the present commissioner, has been approved by all his predecessors for 15 years. The only reason in the world why the recommendation has not been adopted by Congress is because in 18 localities throughout the country an adverse influence has been exerted against that public economy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to ask the gentleman if the commissioner, on page 16, does not recommend simply the reduction in the number of agencies and not the abolition of the entire

Mr. KENDALL. Oh, the gentleman seeks recourse with my friend from Ohio to page 16, and that is the only comfort that can be absorbed from the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. KENDALL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I are in accord on this proposition. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that this is brought into the House for the purpose of consuming the valuable time of the House or with the expectation that this will become a law?

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman from Illinois puts upon me the labor and burden of determining what is in the minds of the Democratic majority, and that is a speculation in which I refuse to indulge. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN: Does the gentleman believe that the Democratic majority has nerve enough to insist upon this provision being in the conference report when it finally comes from the con-

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say in that regard: I am apprehensive that when this bill passes this House with these agencies eliminated, goes to the body at the other end of the Capitol, where the provision for the agencies will be reinserted, and then to conference, I expect to see the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber desert their standard and come back here recommending that the Senate amendment be agreed to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the gentleman of that opinion because the Republicans have heretofore pursued that same course? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KENDALL. No; that side is not wise enough to adopt the Republican example. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. We are too wise to adopt the bad examples of the Republicans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may have five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the other side of the House ought to have all the time during the consideration of this bill. I do not think it is fair that the gentleman should take charge of this bill and do the work that belongs to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Nobody is doing that. Does the gentleman say that nobody on this side has any right to be heard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not saying that, but I am stating exactly what I mean, and the gentleman from Illinois understands what I mean.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa was defending the bill. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just what I said. Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I am endeavoring in my feeble and faltering way to support the committee, and I ask the chairman of that committee to allow me to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to trespass upon the time which the chairman of the committee expects to occupy, but I have some views which I desire to express with reference to this provision. I approve it cordially. I believe it is not only in the interest of economical government, but I believe it is in the interest of efficiency and convenient distribution of the pension fund throughout the country, a consideration in which we are all primarily interested. [Applause.]

While I am on this subject, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: So far as I am concerned, I hope, with all the confidence that I can entertain, that the Sherwood pension bill may be enacted into law at the other end of this Capitol. [Applause.] It does not wholly suit me. I believed when that bill was pending that the fime had come when every man who volunteered to rescue his flag when it was assailed and who, after faithful contributions in the fold was becaused by the state of the sta service in the field was honorably discharged, ought to be pensioned at a dollar a day for the remainder of his natural life: but my judgment was overridden, and the Sherwood bill passed. We supported it, not because we were satisfied with it entirely. but because we believed it was the most generous measure that could be secured at this time. But I have no warrant in supposing that if this bill becomes a law the vast volume of business which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] anticipates will be devolved upon the Pension Bureau. I believe that that bureau can examine all the additional claims that will be filed and adjudicate them promptly.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENDALL. I will yield, but I am being forced for time. Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will turn to page 5 of the report, he will get precisely the information that he wants, where the commissioner said that claims will come in to the amount of 25,000 a day, and they can adjudicate only 400.

Mr. MANN. The pension agents do not adjudicate claims. Mr. KENDALL. The pension agencies have nothing to do with the adjudication of claims, and I am surprised that a gentleman of the sagacity which the gentleman from Ohio generally exhibits should insist on that objection to this reform.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENDALL. I have not much time to yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I will get the gentleman more time.

Mr. KENDALL. If the gentleman gets me more time.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that with this increased volume of business which he admits is to come on the Review Review this increased the company that the province which he admits is to come on the Review Review this increased the company that the reversions where the description of the province which he admits is to come on the Review Review this is a reversion to the reversion of the reversio mits is to come on the Pension Bureau this is a very inopportune time to put upon it additional business which would naturally come from the cutting off of the pension agency? Of course, understand that the pension agencies have nothing to do with the adjudication of claims.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I might have some apprehension about that if we did not have the testimony of the commissioner himself that more expeditious payment could be made by this plan than by the plan now in operation. I congratulate the Committee on Appropriations upon the initiation of this program, which will result in a substantial reduction in the expenditures of the Government without delaying for a single day the disbursement of pensions to the old soldiers. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I am not so solicitous that money be saved to the Treasury as I am that some other results be accomplished. We are supporting examining boards 'everywhere at vast outlay; we are maintaining an army of inspectors at immense expense who understand their duty to be to convict the applicant of perjury or fraud; and we are continu-ing a multitude of clerks to transact the business of the pension office. Every dollar expended for the purposes I have men-tioned ought to be saved to the Government and disbursed directly for the benefit of the disabled and deserving veterans in the declining years of their lives. [Applause.] It is a reproach to this Nation that any man who volunteered in his youth and strength and vigor to preserve the Republic should now be confronted with want in any section of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kendall] should not have been so severe on the Democratic House in advance of its action. These 18 pension agencies have been maintained during the past 16 years because of the refusal of the Republican Presidents to exercise their power to consolidate them. They have not been consolidated by law because Republican Congresses have refused to enact legislation compelling their consolidation after the failure of the President to exercise his discretion to consolidate them. It might be well for the gentleman to wait until the completion of this session of Congress before he expresses his opinion as to what the attitude of this House shall be. So far as I am concerned, so far as any influence I may have can be exerted to do it, if this bill passes the House with this consolidation of the agencies contained in it, there will be no pension appropriation bill enacted into law unless that consolidation is carried in the law [applause on the Democratic side], and the responsibility for the failure to make appropriations to pay pensions will rest elsewhere. The gentleman from Ohio challenged the committee to produce recommendations that Commissioners of Pensions have been in favor of the consolidation of these agencies. Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

challenged the gentleman to produce a recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions and I had in mind Commissioner Davenport. I had examined his report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's statement was much more comprehensive. He asked the committee to produce a recommendation or report or hearing in favor of the consolidation of these agencies. On January 19, 1906, this transpired in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Gardner of Michigan. I would like to ask the commissioner what is the necessity of having 18 pension agencies.

Mr. Warner—

Who was then Commissioner of Pensions-

None whatever. They should be reduced to six. That could be done by an Executive order.

Commissioner Warner said later':

If I had the power I would decrease the number of agencies in the United States to six.

Mr. Keifer. Who can do that?

Mr. Warner. The President can do it by an Executive order.

I think it was about that time I made some remarks in this House calling attention to the manner in which a vacancy had been filled in the New England States. Up to that time it was customary to accept the recommendations of the two Republican Senators of the State in which the agency was located, but at that particular time the two Republican Senators did not happen to be in very close accord with the then dominant force in the administration and a so-called progressive Republican from that section was nominated and sent to the Senate to fill that position-

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MANN. I tricd to find the provision of the law authorizing the President to consolidate the agencies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the statute which gives him the authority to establish them, section 4780 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I read that, but I could not see any authority to consolidate in that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there be another statute I shall have it in a minute. On January 17, 1907, Mr. Warner, Commissioner of Pensions, was before the Committee on Appropriations and speaking of the work of his bureau, he said:

I have no complaint to make of the organization, or laws, or anything else, so far as that is concerned. There is only one point; that is the question of the agencies for the payment of pensions throughout the United States—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Would the gentleman like 10 minutes? I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD (reading):

Mr. FITZGERALD (reading):

That is within the control of the President, as to the number of them. There are now 18, and I think it would be good policy to reduce the number to 9, anyway.

Mr. Gardner. Have you any recommendation to make in that respect? Mr. Warner. It is entirely within the control of the President. I recommend that the number be reduced from 18 to 9, but of course it is an embarrassing proposition. There are 18 agents, at $4,000 salary each, scattered around over the United States, and Senators and Representatives are interested in them, etc. You do not have to tell a Member of Congress what that means. I think it would be economy in policy to reduce the number to 9. It could be reduced to 6.

Mr. Brownlow. Do you think that would improve the efficiency of the service?

Mr. Warner. I think it would benefit the efficiency of the service, because you can do business better with 1 man than with 3, and you can do business better with 9 than with 18 agencies. You can enforce policies better with 9 than 18. The checks and vouchers would be made all the same then. As it is now, we have separate checks for each agency with the agent's name printed in them and a separate voucher for each agency.

On January 27, 1908, Commissioner Warner said:

On January 27, 1908, Commissioner Warner said:

As far as I personally am concerned it would be better for me if the agencies should remain just as they are, as their consolidation would make me additional responsibility and labor. But looking at it from a business point of view and as if it were my own business, I would consolidate them instantly, or as soon as it could be done. It would be more economical for the Government and it would work better than to have these agencies scattered all over the country. The work would go smoother, mistakes could be corrected more quickly, information obtained at once, and the record kept in better shape.

On January 7, 1909:

Mr. Keifer. On page 5 is the item for the salaries of 18 agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000. That would be the same as before?

Mr. Warner. Yes. I wish you could knock them down to 9.
Mr. Bowers. I think it ought to be done.
Mr. Warner. You would do it in a moment if it was your own business. You take New Hampshire and Maine and Massachusetts—three little agencies up there that would not make a vest pocketful, hardly.

On February 5, 1910:

Mr. Keifer. If you care to state, will you please say whether you think it would be advisable to pay all of these pensions at one agency from Washington?

Mr. Davenport. 1 think it would be in the interest of economy.

Mr. Keifer. Have you made any calculations as to what would be the approximate saving of money if they were all paid from one agency?

Mr. Davenport. I have not the figures before me, but I think we would save about $200,000.

I trust that these recommendations will satisfy the gentleman from Ohio that the Commissioners of Pensions have advocated this reform.

I have here the report of the Secretary of the Interior, dated December 31, 1907, in which he says:

A special report, House Document No. 352, Sixtieth Congress, first session, has been made to Congress on the advisability of discontinuing all the agencies except the one in Washington. In the present condition of the roll this change would effect an immediate saving of approximately $200,000 a year, and there would be no loss in the efficiency of the service and in the promptness of payment to the pensioners.

So far as the consolidation of agencies is concerned, the statute authorizing the President to establish has always been construed to mean that he could establish them and increase or diminish them, and fix the lines of the districts and create one or more, except as prohibited by the statute. It prohibits the establishment of more than three agencies in any one State, unless they existed at the time the statute was enacted, or any agency in any State unless there were $500,000 being paid in that State for pensions.

Mr. Chairman, there are two separate recommendations contained in this bill. They are not in any way connected, and I trust the committee will not confuse them. One is the consolidation of the agencies, and the other is the adoption of the check-voucher system of payment. The consolidation of the agencies has been recommended, regardless of and long prior to the suggestion that the new method should be adopted of using the check-voucher system. Even if that system were not adopted it is believed that economies would be introduced by the consolidation of the agencies. If the agencies be not consolidated there will result advantages from the adoption of the check-voucher system. Under the present system the voucher is first sent to the pensioner, and after he fills it out and signs and acknowledges it he returns it to a pension agent, and then the check is mailed to pay the pensioner called for by the voucher. Before it was ever suggested that that system be abandoned it was the opinion of different Commissioners of Pensions that the consolidation of the agencies into one agency would effect economies and increase the efficiency of the force. But in compliance with the provision incorporated in the pension appropriation act for the current year, the Pension Commissioner reported upon the advisability of adopting the check-voucher system for the payment of pensions, whereby instead of handling $4,000,000 separately from checks, the voucher and check would be combined and one mailing only made to the pensioner. When he indorses it and has it witnessed under the regulations outlined by the Secretary of the Interior his check would be payable and the check would come Interior his check would be payable, and the check would come back as a voucher for a payment to which he was entitled. It is the modern system in vogue in every great business estab-lishment. Gentlemen should not confuse the two schemes rec-ommended in the bill. There has not, so far as I know, ever been any objection to the adoption of the check-voucher system, except that perhaps some slight inconvenience might occur at the first payment because of the rearrangement of pensioners in groups.

They are all paid now at the same time, quarterly, and under the system proposed it was suggested that they be rearranged in groups so that every month in the year a portion of the pensioners would be paid. The object of making that rearrangement was to equalize the work throughout the year and have it continue evenly from month to month. Under the present system, prior to the time of sending out the vouchers, a large force is needed for about 15 days. After the payment has been made for that quarter very little remains to be done by the force until the next pay time is due.

After a careful investigation, Mr. Chairman, I have come to the conclusion, reached by many men in the House during the past six years, that the agencies should be consolidated. Later in the bill is the provision providing for the adoption of the check-voucher system. The committee did not report the pro-vision in the exact manner recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, because on examination the committee found that certain changes were necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to place in the RECORD at this time the report of Secretary Garfield in relation to the proposed reduction in the number of pension agencies, made under date of December 13, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the document named.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the document referred to.

[House Document No. 352, Sixtleth Congress, first session.] PROPOSED CONSOLIDATION OF PENSION AGENCIES.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a report in relation to the proposed reduction in the number of the pension agencies:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1997.

Washington, D. C., December 13, 1907.

SIB: The "act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, contained the following proviso:
"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make inquiry and report to Congress, at the beginning of its next regular session, the effect of a reduction of the present pension agencies to one such agency upon the economic execution of the pension laws, the prompt and efficient payment of pensioners, and the inconvenience to pensioners, if any, which would result from such reduction. This provision shall not be construed as interfering with or limiting the right or power of the President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies."

In compliance with said provision I submit herewith the following report:

of existing pension agencies."

In compliance with said provision I submit herewith the following report:

1. Economic execution of pension laws: The annual expenditure on account of the payment of pensions, including the salaries of pension agents, clerk hire, contingent expenses, and the printing of vouchers and checks, is approximately $550,000, an average cost per pensioner of 55 cents per annum. It is estimated that after a consolidation has been completed and in perfect working order, all pensioners could be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions or one disbursing officer, located in the city of Washington, with an annual expenditure of, at most, $350,000, a saving of 20 cents per annum per pensioner, or $200,000. After the first year of the consolidation I am of the opinion that the appropriation for the expense of paying pensions could be safely reduced at least $25,000 more.

2. The prompt and efficient payment of pensioners: If all pensioners are paid by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, provision should be made for a division of the pensioner into three groups, one group to be paid each month, as at present, and all pensioners could be paid as promptly by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, as by 18 agents.

3. Inconvenience to pensioners: As all pensioners could be paid as promptly by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, as by 18 agents, there would be no inconvenience to pensioners except the slight delay which would be caused in the case of pensioners living remote from Washington in the time required for a voucher to reach Washington through the mails and for the check to be returned. The checks would, however, be issued quarterly as now and the pensioner receive his payment regularly every three months after the receipt of the first payment. Many of the pensioners now paid by the San Francisco agency do not receive their checks until seven or eight days have expired from the date of mailing of vouchers. Pensioners now paid by the San 5,000 are not paid by the San Francisco agency, but are paid by other agencies.

There are certain other conditions to which attention should be invited if all pensions should be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one central disbursing officer located in this city. The records would be readily accessible for reference by the bureau. A large amount of extra correspondence is now required to furnish information to correspondents relative to the payment of pensions. The bureau must first obtain such information from the pension agents, and a great deal of time is consumed in securing this information, especially from agencies located in distant cities.

All vouchers now required by pensioners are printed by the Government Printing Office in this city and forwarded to the different pension agents, there to be prepared and mailed to the pensioner with checks for the preceding quarter. All checks now used by the pension agents are likewise printed in this city. A considerable saving would result in the cost of printing vouchers and also in the cost of printing checks if such vouchers and checks were prepared for 1 agency rather than for 18.

All paid vouchers must be forwarded by the pension agents to the checks if such vouchers and checks were prepared for 1 agency rather than for 18.

All paid vouchers must be forwarded by the pension agents to the Auditor for the Interior Department in this city. There is always danger of the loss of such vouchers in the mails. Many vouchers of widow pensioners under the general law and under the act of June 27, 1890, were recently lost in transit from one of the pension agencies to the auditor in this city. No trace of the missing vouchers has as yet been discovered. The pension agent has since died, and his accounts can not be settled for many months on account of the lost vouchers.

It is further suggested that if it be decided to consolidate the 18 agencies into one agency the entire 18 agencies be abolished and provision be made that the payments be made by the Commissioner of Pensions or one disbursing officer, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The statute now provides (26 Stat. L., 138) that the pension agent, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may designate and authorize a clerk to sign the name of the pension agent to official checks. There are 18 such designated clerks now employed, one at each agency. The name of the pension agent is printed on all checks used, but before the check is issued it must be countersigned by the designated clerk. Only one clerk may be thus authorized to sign such checks for any one pension agent under the law as it now stands. If all pensioners were paid by the Commissioner of Pensions or by one disbursing officer the services of six or eight clerks would be required to sign such checks, and if the 18 agencies be abolished and all payments made by the Commissioner of Pensions or one disbursing officer provision should be made authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions or the disbursing officer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to designate the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the Commissioner of Pensions or disbursing officer to such official checks.

Ample accommodation for the consolidated agency could be furnished in the Pension Building.

Under the practice now in vogue there is a duplication of records. Each of the 18 agents receives from here the certificates of pensions for the pensioners residing in his district. A record is made here and also by the agent at the agency who then forwards the certificate with the voucher to the pensioner. A consolidation of the agencies would require but one record of the certificate, etc., which would be kept in the office here in Washington, and the certificate and voucher would be malled direct to the pensioner from here. This would do away with having the certificate malled to the agent, the making of a record by the agent, and the malling by him of the certificate and voucher to the pensioner and the Secretary as to when the transfers from the different agencies should be made. To require all of such transfers to be made on one date would entail unnecessary work and might result in delay and complications in making payments.

If the 18 agencies are abolished and provision made for the payment of all pensions from the city of Washington, I respectfully suggest that an appropriation of at least $10,000 should be made to be immediately available for the purpose of carrying out the consolidation and defraying the necessary expenses of the removal of the records, etc., of the agencies to the city of

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PROUTY and Mr. ADAIR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Adair] is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty] next.

ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, this is the fourth time this question has been thrashed out on the floor of the House to my I am opposed to the continuance of these agencies, in the first place because it unnecessarily adds to the expenses of the Department of the Interior. I am opposed to it because under a consolidation of the agencies the pensioners of the country could be paid more expeditiously than they are now

It is urged by my good friend from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] that this matter should go over to some time in the future, when we could have ample time to make a careful investigation of this proposed change. I want to say to my friend from Ohio that same argument was made in the Fifty-ninth Congress, when the committee brought in a bill reducing the number of agencies to 9. The House considered the proposition at that time and voted to reduce the number to 1, striking out the 17 unnecessary agencies. It went over to the Senate. In that body it met with opposition, and the agencies were placed back in the bill. When the conference committee met and considered the matter, they found it impossible to get together on the proposition to strike out the 17 pension agencies. They did, however, finally agree upon a proviso, which was added to the bill, instructing the Secretary of the Interior to make a thorough and careful investigation of this proposition and report to Congress at the beginning of the next session. The proviso I refer to, which was placed in the bill, read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make inquiry and report to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session the effect of a reduction of the present pension agencies to one such agency upon the economic execution of the pension laws, the prompt and efficient payment of pensioners, and the inconvenience to pensioners, if any, which would result from such reduction. This provision shall not be construed as interfering with or limiting the right or the power of the President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies.

Acting upon this instruction by the Fifty-ninth Congress, the Secretary of the Interior did make an exhaustive and careful investigation into this matter and, having done so, reported to Congress on the 13th day of December, 1907, in favor of consolidating these agencies upon the ground that it would not only bring about an economical administration of the pension laws but would enable the department to pay pensioners more expeditiously. Here is an extract from the Secretary's report:

That by the concentration and centralization of the handling of this work here in Washington, with the present organization in the Pension Office, and with the possibility of the introduction, as we could then, of certain mechanical devices for the handling of these hundreds of thousands of vouchers and certificates, we could, without interfering at all with the expedition with which the pensioners receive their claims, transact all of that business here and mail the checks to the various parts of the country, receiving the vouchers quite as quickly as it is now done under separate agencies.

The saving, as we figure it, will be something over $200,000, and I believe it will be even more than that when we put into effect all of the systematized business methods that can be put into effect if this work is brought here. I believe that the saving would be nearer $350,000 a year, in administration, and without any loss to the pensioners in expeditiously receiving their pensions, and without in any way interfering with the handling of the present business in the settlement of claims presented.

The Commissioner of Pensions at that time also made a report to Congress, in which he recommended the consolidation of these agencies for exactly the same reasons as were set out in the report by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes instead of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. So, Mr. Chairman, both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions made similar reports to Congress, urging this body to strike down these 17 agencies and let the department here in Washington pay pensions directly from this city, upon the ground that it was not only economy but that it would enable the department to pay pensioners more expeditiously and more satisfactorily.

In the next session of Congress this matter was taken up again and threshed out, being debated at length, and by a large majority this House voted to strike out these agencies. Again the bill went to the Senate, and the Senate put the agencies back. The bill came back to the House and the House finally agreed upon the conference report, leaving them in the bill.

Then again in the Sixty-first Congress the House voted out the agencies, but the Senate put them back and would not agree to consolidation.

Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand, with all the facts before us, why any Member of the House or any Member of the other body, except, possibly, those who represent districts in which there are pension agencies, should object to the proposed consolidation.

Not many days ago we passed in this body what is known as the Sherwood pension bill, carrying an annual appropriation of possibly $40,000,000 or $45,000,000. A bill that would not cost the Government any more money than the Sulloway bill, which was passed one year ago. The Sulloway bill was passed by a Republican House. At that time there was not a newspaper in the country, so far as I know, which censured the House for passing a pension bill carrying this sum of money; but when a Democratic House passes a pension bill carrying a like sum of money, then the press of the country, or at least a large part of it, immediately denounces this body for practicing extravagance. It was patriotism when a similar bill was passed by a Republican House, but it was extravagance when passed by a Democratic House.

Now, you gentlemen on that side, who are in favor of continuing these 17 unnecessary pension agencies, should remember that by so doing you are making it that much more difficult to secure the passage of the Sherwood pension bill, or any other pension bill, in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

The charge is already being made that the Sherwood bill carries too much money. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] wants to do something for the soldier, he should join this side of the House in cutting down this expense, in line with the ideas and views of the Commissioner of Pensions, not only of our present Commissioner of Pensions, but of Mr. Warner, who preceded him; not only in line with the views of the present Secretary of the Interior, but also of his predecessor, Mr. Garfield.

You gentlemen on that side should join us in cutting down these expenses in order that we may be able at this time to do something for the men who stood in the front during those unfortunate days, and aid them now when they need help from the Government.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I would rather see this $300,000 or $400,000, which is now unnecessarily expended in keeping up these superfluous agencies, go to the soldiers who fought in that war, in the way of more liberal pensions, rather than to see it paid out to a few clerks who never performed one minute of military service and to whom this Government is under no chilgration whatever.

ernment is under no obligation whatever.

It is argued by my friend from Ohio [Mr. Willis] that the 18 agents at the head of these agencies were soldiers, and that we are taking their salaries away from them and throwing them out of employment. Mr. Chairman, I venture the assertion that practically all of the men at the head of these agencies are drawing large pensions because of having been officers in the war; and now you would add $4.000 a year to the pension of each one by continuing these agencies, and by doing so would take it out of the pockets of the men who stood in the forefront, the privates who rendered the actual service that held the States together and preserved this Union.

Mr. WILLIS. I suppose the gentleman desires to be perfectly fair. I understood the gentleman to say that by passing this bill as it is reported from the committee there would be a saving of $300,000 to $400,000. Does the gentleman wish that statement to go into the Record?

Mr. ADAIR. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that I do wish that statement to go into the Record. I can show by the reports of the ex-Secretary of the Interior and the ex-Commissioner of Pensions that there would be a saving of at least that amount, and I believe there would be more. You say the employees in these agencies out in the various parts of the country should not be thrown out of employment. These men work, possibly, four months out of the year, and that is about all. The men at the head of these agencies have no great amount of labor to perform.

After reading the report of the ex-Commissioner of Pensions and the ex-Secretary of the Interior, I can not understand why any man on the floor of this House will insist on these pension agents being retained when he knows it is taking money not only out of the Treasury of the United States, but is taking the bread out of the mouths of the private soldiers whose pensions ought to be increased.

Mr. Chairman, I insist and believe that, as a matter of justice, these agencies ought to be abolished. They ought to have been stricken out years ago, and instead of following the advice of my good friend from Ohio, this House will strike them out again, and when the bill goes to the Senate, if the Senators who have the appointment of agents, or for personal reasons, vote them back in the bill, I hope the conferees on the part of the House will never agree to the conference report, and that we will insist on standing on our rights and show the House and the country that we at this end of the Capitol have something to say with reference to the legislation of this country, [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this Democratic House on December 12 passed the Sherwood bill, which is the most liberal pension bill ever passed by Congress in the history of the country. It immediately went over to the Senate, and it was believed that body, which is Republican by a goodly majority, would pass the bill at an early date, but up to this time nothing has been done. It is now believed the Senate will amend the bill greatly reducing the rates, which I think would be very unjust, and we all know would be a disappointment to the old veterans who deserve and need every cent provided for in the Sherwood bill. The Senate should have taken action immediately after the House passed the bill, especially in view of the fact that over 3,000 soldiers are dying each month, many of whom do not have the necessaries and comforts of life.

The Senate has now had the Sherwood bill 50 days, during which time nearly 6,000 soldiers have died. Such delay is nothing short of a crime, and I sincerely hope you gentlemen on that side of the House will use your influence with your Republican friends in the Senate urging immediate action in that body. A Democratic House has done its duty to the old soldier, now let a Republican Senate do likewise. [Applause.]

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, my distinguished colleague from Iowa hit the keynote of this whole discussion, and while I have an agency in my district, if anyone will convince me that I am standing in the way of a good governmental policy I will not oppose this bill. The gentleman says the keynote is that if we have this consolidation we can administer it more wisely and cheaply than we do now.

I know that there is pregnant everywhere the thought that in consolidation there is always economy. The great trusts in this country are pouring that doctrine into the ears of every committee that will listen to them. The great Steel Trust is before the committee telling it that it is for the benefit of this Government and all of the people in it to have such a consolidation that all, or practically all, of that industry will be under one single management and control. The Standard Oil Co. is presenting the same argument. The bathtub people are presenting the same argument. The sugar people are presenting the same argument. I am one of those people who do not be-lieve in that kind of an economical policy. I do not believe that it is for the benefit of this country to have too much consolidation. I believe in the distribution of energies and enterprises all over the country. I am not surprised that the Commissioner of Pensions recommends the abolition of all of these agencies and wants to bring them all to Washington under his care and control. That is in accordance with the spirit of the It is what everybody is asking for-more power, to be put in control of more affairs-and I am not surprised that the Commissioner of Pensions wants all of the pension agencies brought to Washington. I am not surprised that he wants more help brought here.

In that connection I was amused by the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Adair], who told you that it was going to reduce the expenses of the Government from $300,000 to $400,000 a year, and yet in the appropriation that has come from the committee they only make a reduction of $35,000. What are you going to do with the rest of the $300,000 or what are you going to do with the rest of the $350,000 of $400,000 that you are saving? The bill provides $350,000 for help, and yet the estimate of the bureau for the agencies as they are now is only $385,000.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior in his report to Congress uses this language-

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I thought the gentleman was going to ask me a question.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman asked me how we were going to save this money, and I am going to tell him.

Mr. PROUTY. I would rather the gentleman did so in his

Mr. ADAIR. I have not any time now, but if the gentleman wants it to go into the RECORD I will put it into the RECORD, and he would not be so much amused if he would let me tell

Mr. PROUTY. In the report of the committee, which I hold in my hand, I find clerk hire at agencies, $385,000, which is the appropriation for 1912. The estimate for 1913 is $385,000. Recommended for 1913, $350,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. That does not refer to the salaries of the agents. It simply refers to the clerk hire. The preceding paragraph has reference to the agents. There is $4,000 carried in this bill for one agent, whereas $72,000 were carried in the

Mr. PROUTY. Well, suppose I take the gentleman's statement

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is quoting from the report of the committee.

Mr. PROUTY. Salaries of agents, $72,000.

Mr. LOBECK. And they allow $4,000. Mr. PROUTY. Under this bill $4,000. There is a difference of $68,000. Let me ask you where is the other three hundred thousand and odd dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is entitled to the information. The Commissioner of Pensions made this statement, that it would be impossible for him to tell the exact amount required. The committee reduced the estimate by the amount required for 17 chief clerks, not desiring to cripple the office, while it gave him enough money to organize it, and required detailed estimates for the next year. The committee could have indulged in cheap politics by making a radical cut without information, but it preferred not to do that.

Mr. PROUTY. That simply corroborates what I was trying to say. You fellows admit, and you do not have the nerve to deny, when you are talking to yourselves, the expenses would be substantially the same as they are now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not quite accurate.

Mr. PROUTY. I do not pretend to be as accurate as the gentleman from New York

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I do not admit that the gentleman

[Laughter.]

Mr. PROUTY. And I have not asked the gentleman to do so. The fact shows, from his own statement, that when he was conrice fact shows, from his own statement, that when he was com-sidering this matter coldly and calmly in the committee room he did not have the nerve to say that it will save three hundred or three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, but the only sav-ing they have made, to use their own estimate, is less than a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman wants to be fair to me, I know. Will he yield for a second?
Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.
Mr. ADAIR. I made a statement, and the gentleman has said that it amused him, and I want to give him my authority. I was quoting from the Secretary of the Interior, and he says the first year when this is put in operation it will result in a saving of 20 cents per annum on each pensioner, or $200,000, and then following that he said that the second year the saving will be $25,000 more. That is in the conduct of the office here. Those are the words of the Secretary of the Interior, and it was funny to me and quite interesting.

Mr. PROUTY. It is very funny to me, I will admit.
Mr. ADAIR. It may not be funny to anyone who has an agency in his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks for 10 minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendment be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. I desire to take a few minutes time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know that. With what time will the gentleman be satisfied

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I should have 10 minutes, and probably 15 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 25 minutes, 5 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Iowa, 15 minutes by the gentleman from Ohio, and the other 5 minutes to be consumed by myself. Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If it suits the gentleman from Iowa. Mr. BARTLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendment be limited to 25 minutes, 5 to be occupied by the gentleman from Iowa, 15 by the gentleman from Ohio, and 5 by myself.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I would like at least seven and a half minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in 25 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he would-

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOB], five minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty], and the other five minutes by the gentleman from Georgia himself. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, before the gentleman from Georgia formulates his request I will say that the gentleman from Iowa had already asked for 10 minutes additional.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And he was considerably interrupted. Will not the gentleman make it 30 minutes, and give the gentleman from Iowa 10 minutes of that time?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has already had five minutes

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. But much of it was taken up. Mr. BARTLETT. The gentlemen on that side opposed to this proposition—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] had some 25 minutes, and most of the time has been used by gentlemen who are opposed to the proposition, and now we are yielding practically all the time to those who are opposed to the action of the committee, and we are only reserving five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the request?

Mr. BARTLETT. The request is this: That debate upon this section and amendments be limited to 25 minutes—15 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor], who is in favor of the amendment, and five by the gentleman from Iowa, who has already had five, and five for myself. Out the 25 minutes I have only reserved 5.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to state that I started a speech this morning and was cut off, and agreed to finish it under the five-minute rule, and I would like to go on.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would put the request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN Is there objection to the request of the The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.
Mr. BARTLETT. I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 25 minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it, that the ayes had it-

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present in the committee. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-four Members are present, a quorum. The ayes have it, and the motion to close debate is adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, do I understand now that the gentleman from Iowa is to have five minutes?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I was just remarking that if this policy was a good one I would not interfere with it, and if gentlemen would convince me that it was a good one I would not interfere. I said I was not in favor of the policy of consolidation. It has not worked to the advantage of this country in any other department. Why should it in the United States departments? I remember well when the steel organization was made and it was heralded all over this country that by reason of its large organization that it could furnish material to the United States and all its people much cheaper than could be done by individual concerns.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman-Mr. PROUTY. I refuse to yield. Mr. GOOD. For a question? Mr. PROUTY. I refuse to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think there ought to be competition in these 18 offices?

Mr. PROUTY. What I was saying is this: That when the Standard Oil and Steel Trust went before this country they said that because of the large organization they could reduce the price to the people. I have been watching now for 10 years the marvelous reduction in the price of steel products in this country under this organization. They told us also when the Harvester Trust was formed that that would do away with the several agencies all over the country and bring them under one management and one organization and that furnish to the farmers of this country their machinery much They told us, in volumes of figures much larger than the gentleman from Indiana quoted, that they could do away with State agents and all that and furnish this machinery much cheaper, and what was the result? Every man upon the floor of the House knows that instead of machinery going down it is going up. In other words, the policy is not correct; it does not result in economy. And there is one of the best indications that this bill will not, in the judgment of the committee, work great economy from the fact that they do not materially reduce the appropriation, notwithstanding the vaunted economy to be worked by the consolidation.

Now, one other question. I am opposed to it because it takes people from the whole country and brings them to Washington. Washington is big enough now for me, so far as I am concerned. They get them down here, and as soon as they get them here they live off their salaries as long as they can, and when they are not able to work longer they ask the Federal Government to pension them, and stay here and eat up their pension. I say it is not a good governmental policy that looks to the concentration of everything in Washington.

Now, one thought more. The whole plan of this device will be to concentrate wealth here as well as individuals. Whenever you draw on your account you have got to keep money with which to meet it, and the result will be, if you adopt the system of checks from here, the money from the West will be gradually brought in here and concentrated to meet the checks the Government draws upon the local Treasury here. In other words, this whole scheme is concentration of help in Washington and the concentration of money either in New York or in Washington. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, as my time is limited,
I wish to state, in order to avoid the usual question that is always asked when I arise to my feet to insist upon such an amendment as is offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] as to whether or not I have any personal interest in this legislation, that in my home city is located one of the largest—in fact, the second largest—pension agency in the United States, disbursing to old soldiers and widows, residents of Ohio only, about $16,000,000 per annum. And every pensioner paid in Ohio is within less than 200 miles of the agency, and therefore their pensions get to them faster than they can get by any scheme patched up here in Washington for the purpose of consolidating them under one bureau and perpetuating the Pension Bureau in Washington.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statements of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in which he undertakes to say it has been for years the consensus of opinion of the Commissioners of Pensions that these agencies be abolished. In the face of those statements we find there has not been a single recommendation for the abolishment of all the agencies. Mr. Warner said he could get along with nine, he knew, and possibly with six, agencies, but he stopped right there. Mr. Garfield, the Secretary of the Interior, did say they all ought to be transferred to Washington under one head, and he made the broad statement that we would save about $250,000 year by doing so. But he did not give one single fact that justified his statement, although his statement has been used in every debate on this question since he made it. It has not impressed the House to any extent, I am quite certain.

The actual fact is that the only saving whatever contemplated here that you can put your finger on, and that is not an absolute guess and experiment, is the saving of the salaries of 17 pension agents at $4,000 a year, a total sum of $63,000. In the face of that, on page 19 of the hearings, we find that it will be necessary, in order to carry out this scheme of disbursement, if it can be carried out-and this is by no means certain. as is admitted by the commissioner—to transfer a great number of clerks from the agencies to Washington, all of those, in fact, except the aged and infirm. Clerks in Washington receive more than clerks in other departments outside of Washingtonabout $200 or $300 a year more on the average. It is a wellknown fact that the average salary of clerks of pension agencies outside of Washington is a fraction under $1,000 per annum, and the average salary of clerks in the department at Washington is $1,200 to $1,300 per annum; and if you transfer, say, 300 of these clerks to Washington, you will have necessarily to increase their salaries to reach the high cost of living in this city, which was said by the Keep Commission two or three years ago to amount to about 20 per cent more than the other cities in which the agencies are located. You would raise them over $90,000, and that would wipe out your $68,000 and leave about $22,000 to the bad, at a rough estimate.

Now, the next question is, there is not a man in this House, and there is not a man, from the Commissioner of Pensions, down, in the Bureau of Pensions, who knows whether this scheme is economical or practical. The commissioner admits that frankly, and I am going to read from the hearings. Mr. BARTLETT asked the question that if Congress adopted these plans how many of these agents it would dispense with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. BARTLETT said:

MP. TATION of Oillo. All. Darillett Said:

How many would it dispense with in the coming year?

Mr. Davender. That would depend. The law as it is now says that the agencies must be in groups of three. The proposed plan changes that to arrange the pensioners into groups of three instead of the agencies, and by doing so power would be given to reduce the agencies to one or six or nine, as could be done without injuring the efficiency of the service. Gradually the agencies might be reduced, although I can not anticipate what action will be taken.

Mr. Bartlett. By the new method you have suggested?

Mr. Davender. Yes. There certainly will be a reduction after a time.

Mr. BARTLETT. You do not know how many or which ones would be

Mr. Bartlett. You do not know how many or which ones would be reduced?

Mr. Davenfort. I do not know anything about it at this time.

Mr. Bartlett. If this plan which you have formulated in pursuance to the direction of Congress was put into effect before the end of this fiscal year, how many could you dispense with then; all, or how many?

Mr. Davenfort. I guess all of them, if we were forced to, and pay from here; but I hardly think that would be done at once, because this is an entire change in the way of payment, and no one can tell how it will work until we get it into operation. We believe it is all right. It is such a radical change in the way of payment that we would have to try it first on one agency and see if it was feasible and worked out all right.

There we have it in an attempt to drop the agents in the face of the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions admits that he does not know how it is going to work out; that he wants to try it on one agency first, and go no further until he sees whether or not it is feasible and workable and economical.

From those hearings it appears that the commissioner's statements as to what economy he thinks can be worked out are mere guesswork. He states in these hearings that he has not the slightest idea as to how the thing will work, and does not know how many agents could be cut out or should be cut out. He admits that it is a radical change, which would be unquestionably highly experimental, and should be tried out only on one agency first, and that is an admission that he does not know whether the plan is a good one or would breed confusion and distress.

But in spite of this the committee comes before the House' with a provision abolishing 17 out of the 18 agencies. They might as well abolish the entire 18 agencies, because in the hearings, if I remember aright, it was stated that a disbursing officer could do just as well as a pension agent if you put this scheme into operation.

Now, let us look at the legislative situation that confronts us in relation to the pending legislation on pension matters.

Appropriations Committee has decided to cut out the agencies and bring the whole work to Washington and work out a new plan of disbursement, which the commissioner admits he does not know anything about. And then he says that it will be necessary to bring in the neighborhood of 300 clerks here to get the thing to working right. This transfer, as I said before, will more than wipe out the saving in agents' salaries. The commissioner also admits that the transfer of the documents and of the agencies would cost at least $600 each, which is an item of $10,800 alone. And in addition to this, if you will look at pages 4 and 5 of the hearings, you will see that if the socalled Sherwood bill, which is now in the Senate, having passed this House, should become a law, Mr. Davenport estimates that it will increase the appropriation about $75,000,000 a year. On page 5, in discussing the effect it will have upon his department, the commissioner says:

his department, the commissioner says:

Mr. Davender. You are getting onto a pretty tender subject; but let me say that we feel that the bill would probably bring into the bureau 450,000 claims. As you know, the force is old. There are very few young clerks. The average age of the real working force is nearly 60 years in the Pension Bureau. I do not suppose that we could settle. on an average, over 400 claims a day with the force as it is now, and so you can figure how long it would take to settle the 450,000 claims.

Mr. Bartlett. On an average of 400 claims a day?

Mr. Davender. Four hundred a day; perhaps more. I can not tell you how my force will break in. I have a very reliable force, but slow, because they are old, very old, but they are accurate men and women, and when people get old they can not work quite as fast as when young.

slow, because they are old, very old, but they are accurate men and women, and when people get old they can not work quite as fast as when young.

Mr. Bartlett. Unfortunately.

Mr. Davenport. Not that they do not understand the work, because they do the very best they can, and are always there, but for a time it would probably take my whole force to take care of the rush work, which would come in at the rate of 25,000 a day, and we could not adjudicate anything. We have to send out a receipt for every claim that comes in, and then it has to be recorded. We have to be very accurate about these things, because every claim means money.

Mr. Bartlett. Would you necessarily have to increase your force in order to efficiently and properly dispose of the work?

Mr. Davenport. I would have to increase the force in order to meet the demand for prompt adjudication.

Mr. Bartlett. To what extent would the force have to be increased?

Mr. Davenport. I would have to have three or four hundred clerks temporarily, for a year or so. I do not see how it could be avoided.

Mr. Bartlett. What class of clerks?

Mr. Davenport. From $1,000 to $1,200. It would be no use to try to get them through the civil service; that would have at least 300 clerks to come in on the recommendation of some one who knew them. There are a great many clerks here in Washington who have been in the Census Bureau, and have been trained, and who could come in and take up the work without any trouble. If I should have to go to the Civil Service Commission, it would take too long and it would be hardly fair to overload the bureau again with a lot of permanent clerks. This is all in contemplation; we do not know that the bill will pass.

Going on further, the Commissioner of Pensions states that these clerks would receive from $1,000 to $1,200 a year, which for 300 clerks would be $350,000 a year. Into this bureau would be coming 25,000 claims a day and only 400 could be attended to with the present force. With all of this new work, it is now proposed to throw the disbursing of the pensions into this office and transfer some three hundred clerks from the various agencies. Thus we find the commissioner attempting to work out a new scheme of pension disbursement, of which he is not certain, in the face of an enormous increase in the Pension Bureau by reason of the passage of new general pension legislation, and any man who knows will understand that but one result can accrue from the great influx of new business and attempted reorganization of the payment of pensions, and that result is chaos and confusion, and a great delay to the pensioners, and a day's delay in pensions means a great deal when we think that a hundred pensioners are dying every day, or 3,000 every

Further on in the hearings, on page 6, when asked by Mr. Bartlett what would become of the business of the office without this additional force, Mr. Davenport replied that it would simply accumulate, pile up, and they could not get it out. No one has disputed that the present system of paying pen-sions is perfectly satisfactory to the pensioners. The payment of pensions is substantially completed in from six to eight days. Should the proposed plan be adopted, you can not tell when it would be completed. True, the commissioner says that it would would be completed. True, the commissioner says that it would be more rapid, but he admits that he does not know whether the plan is a workable one, and admits it will be experimental. Suppose it should prove a failure. How about the pensioners who await their money? They should have it promptly, especially in the face of the fact that we are losing pensioners at the rate of a hundred a day. I think a canvass of any locality in which old soldiers live would find them unanimously opposed to any such experiment at the cost of their comfort.

Another great feature of the pension system has been the idea of locating agencies at various centers throughout the country in order that the Pension Department should be brought in close touch with its beneficiaries, so that their allowances can be made them with the least delay. Every pension agent is a sort of adviser for the pensioners in his district, and they want to know him and be in touch with him. This would all be done away with. Not a day passes but that some inquiry is made, some lost paper asked to be replaced, and these are generally in the form of appeals to the local agent.

It seems that we are working out this proposition along very economical lines. It is only costing about 46 cents per capita to pay the pensions. The last table of per capita cost that I have access to was presented to this House in argument on a similar amendment by Mr. Alexander, of New York, and can be found on page 1129 of the RECORD of January 19, 1909. It is as follows:

Tonows.
Topeka	$0.4
Columbus
Chicago	. 5
Knoxville	. 5
Indianapolis	. 4
Boston	. 5
Philadelphia
New York City	. 6
Washington	. 6
Des Moines	. 5
Milwaukee	. 5
Buffalo	. 5
Pittsburgh	. 5
PittsburghSan Francisco	. 5
Detroit	. 5
Louisville	. 6
Augusta	. 7
Concord	. 7

Then there is the feature of the extreme hardship to the clerks themselves. I know from my own experience in my home city, where we have 30 clerks, that they have lived there and have entered the service with the idea, of course, that they would stay as long as they were qualified, have made their homes there, and in many cases purchased their homes; and their transfer to Washington, even at an increased salary, would be an unfair and distressing proposition. We are pay ing off 16,000 pensioners there, and the per capita cost is 46 cents. The same applies to Topeka, where more pensioners are Every pensioner paid in the Columbus office is a resident of the State of Ohio. Everyone is within a hundred miles at least of the pension office and can get in touch with the pension agent for the many things which arise within a short time. It will work a hardship upon a great number of old soldiers and their widows who live in Ohio and elsewhere to have this radical scheme, admitted to be experimental, put into effect and the old system of payment through agencies abolished. For these reasons I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will yield that back to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who so kindly gave me an extension of time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized. Mr. BARTLETT. How much time does the gentleman desire? Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have no pension agency in the district which I have the honor to represent, but there is one in the State of Illinois, in which a good many thousand pensioners are paid each quarter. This House for several years, at least for a few years, has each time voted to strike these agencies out of the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That was not done last year, was it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It was done on my motion last year. My recollection is that the pension agencies have been stricken out each year for four or five years. Now, this is simply a common-sense proposition. There are no soldiers of simply a common-sense proposition. There are no soldiers of the country asking the retention of 18 pension agencies, and the fact is it is a ridiculous proposition when we think about it. There is a pension agency in Milwaukee, another one in Chicago, another one in Des Moines, Iowa, another one in Indianapolis, Ind., located right close together. There are two in the State of Pennsylvania—

Mr. FOWLER. One in Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. One in Columbus, Ohio. There is one in Washington and one in Philadelphia, only three hours' ride from this city.

Mr. FOWLER. One in New York and one in Pittsburgh.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I might go ahead and mention all of them. But, anyhow, I remember very well that last year Mr.
SMITH of Iowa, who was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, had a provision put in the bill directing the Commissioner of Pensions to work out some scheme whereby these pensioners might be paid without all these agencies. now paying rent for one agency, I think, in New York City. We are paying a salary of $4,000 a year to each of these agents. We ought to look at this matter as a business proposition.

It is not discommoding any soldier, and I am sure I would not want to do that; but it is simply a business proposition, whether we ought to go ahead and pay out this money each year for pension agencies and pension agents or whether we want to stop that and save that much money to the Government, and not discommode any pensioner in the United States. I realize that next year we probably would have the oppor-tunity, in all human probability, to fill these offices.

Several Members (on the Republican side). Oh, no!

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. But I believe this side of the House is patriotic enough to save that much money for the country, and not want to keep up a lot of useless offices like these. They would give 18 places for good, faithful, honest Democrats, I am sure, but I do not want the places at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. So I am in favor of doing away with these pension agencies and paying these pensioners directly, as proposed in this bill. Then these men can get their money when it is due and not have to wait to fill out a voucher and go to the pension agent and get back a receipt, and go through all that trouble that they have had to go through for many years. When a lot of people were hungry for office and wanted places as pension agents, there might have been an excuse, but that time has passed, I hope, upon that side of the House; and when you see the patronage being lost to your own party, I hope you will be patriotic enough to stand up and be in favor of this provision of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. We do not concede the loss of patronage. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should like to talk on this amendment for about three minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The debate has been limited.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not know that.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I only want to say that I am in favor of the consolidation of these agencies.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I will yield to the gentleman the remaining three minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I thank the gentleman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, it is a hard thing to reduce the number of public offices by an act of Congress. has been tried with reference to the pension agents for a number of years, and in every instance the measure failed of passage. There is one pension agency in Indianapolis, and the agent is a friend and constituent of mine, and if I were prompted by personal reasons altogether I would vote against the consolidation of these agencies; but several years ago Congress instructed the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation and furnish Congress with an estimate of the amount, if anything, that could be saved by consolidation. Secretary Garfield, in pursuance of that direction, made an investigation, and reported to Congress that there could be a net saving of—my recollection is $250,000, although my friend from Indiana [Mr. Adair] suggests that it was $350,000—and that there would be no inconvenience to the pensioners resulting from the consolidation. They are paid four times a year, and under no circumstances can you get more than three months between the periods of payment. I am not willing to vote for a measure continuing an unnecessary expense upon the Government of $250,000 a year in order to keep a friend in

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the one minute remaining that I have to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that we can well adopt the provisions in the bill abolishing the useless pension agencies, and pay the pensioners with less expense and greater expedition from Washington, under the scheme provided in the bill, than is now being done in the present expensive, useless, and cumbersome method. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time limited for the discussion of this amendment has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIS) there were 16 ayes and 107 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, and other services, pension agency, including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies, $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That estimates in detail shall be submitted for the fiscal year 1914 and annually thereafter for clerks and others employed in the pension agency, and the amounts to be paid to each.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the paragraph just read, and particularly to those words "including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies," on the ground that there is no existing law authorizing the consolidation of such agencies. I make this point of order under the provision of section 2, Rule XXI, which provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless continuation of an appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

I have not understood that there was any work in progress removing pension agencies. It may be that some of these gentlemen who are in such a hurry about it have started to remove them. But I do not understand that there is any provision of law authorizing that work to be done, and therefore I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as I gather from the gen-tleman's remarks, his point of order is to the provision "including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies." understand the point of order is made to those words.

Mr. PROUTY. That is correct.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the point of order was not made, and I apprehend it could not have been successfully made, against the preceding paragraph of this section, which was to provide that only one pension agent be appointed at a salary of $4,000, and also that section 4780 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the President to appoint these agents and for their distribution among the States, should be repealed.

So far as the House is concerned, that is a part of this bill. If the point of order had been made against it, I apprehend that under the rulings heretofore made, under the same rule under which we are now working, known as the Holman rule, and under the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union made some days ago construing this rule, we could have retained in this bill this provision abolishing the pension agents and repealing the law, for the reason that it reduces expenditures and provides for the abolition of salaries.

This is simply a provision providing for clerk hire, which is authorized by law, and for $10,000 for expenses in removing the records or equipment of the pension agencies. The law authorizes the heads of departments to take care of the property of the various departments. The property, the furniture, the equipment of the offices of the Government are in charge of the heads of departments, and of the heads and chiefs of the divisions and bureaus. It is simply for the purpose of preserving the property of the United States now already on hand, and it is simply to carry out the power to take care of the property. It is not new legislation. This simply authorizes the property. It is not new legislation. This simply authorizes the heads of the departments, which under the law they have the power to do now, to take care of the property. That is all it rouly

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in reply to the argument of the gentleman on the point of order which I have raised. If I have understood the gentleman correctly, he claims that because we have gone by the previous section or clause, therefore there is now authority in law for this expenditure

Mr. BARTLETT. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. PROUTY. Then I did not understand the gentleman. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not. Mr. PROUTY. I confess that I did not hear the gentleman very well.

Mr. BARTLETT. I said the point of order to that section, in my judgment, would not lie.

Mr. PROUTY. I did not raise a point of order on that other provision. I reached the same conclusion that the gentleman did, that it would not lie; but here is one that will lie, because here is an appropriation intended to be made for something not authorized by law, and it would be a strange profision if you could put into one clause in the bill a provision that would make another clause lawful, when it had not been passed. I do not know that any part of this bill will pass. I am not making this objection upon the theory that it repeals existing law. That is not the contention. It is that we are making an appropriation for an object that is not authorized by law. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly. Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman makes the point of order on the ground that this would be a change of existing law?

Mr. PROUTY. No. Mr. RUSSELL. Then the gentleman makes it upon the ground that it is authorizing an appropriation when there is no authority of law to do the thing for which the appropriation is to be made?

Mr. PROUTY. That is it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. If it were true that the Government now had property in these several cities where the pension agencies exist, and there were no pension agencies there, does the gentleman claim that there is no authority in law, as it now is, for the agents of this Government to take care of that property and to carry it somewhere where they had a use for it?

I undertake to say that this committee in this appropriation bill can not put that kind of a clause into the bill. In the first place, it would not be germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. But if this law is passed, as it now has been passed by this committee, these agencies will be abolished.

Mr. PROUTY. Possibly next year.

Mr. RUSSELL. I say if the bill should be passed and become a law then the Government would have books and stationery in these cities where these agencies now exist. Does the gentleman claim that under the present law the officers of this Government would have no right or authority to take care of this property and transfer it to some place where it could be taken care of?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman begs the question. He says if this bill passes. This bill has not yet passed, and that is what I am trying to prevent. Here is what the rule

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Not authorized in this act, but previously authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. Having adopted a provision reducing the number of pension agencies, is it not proper for the Congress to proceed to enforce by proper legislation, or provide by proper legislation, for the removal of these offices?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; by a proper bill. I would have no objection to that, but in a general appropriation bill they have no right to load it down with provisions not authorized by law. Gentlemen on the other side say that if the Senate does not agree to this there shall be no appropriation for taking care of the pensioners of this country during the next two years. That is what they have said, and it is the object of this rule to prevent that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, just a word upon the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] has the floor.

Mr. PROUTY. I was simply answering the Chair. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear it.

Mr. PROUTY. What I was saying is this, that it is perfectly proper to provide for it by an act in its proper place, but by the system which was adopted by the gentlemen on the other side, and I compliment them on it, that it has been intended to so fix legislation that you could not load down an appropriation bill by putting into it measures that might not otherwise meet the judgment of the House, but which they would be willing to pass in order to get an appropriation. As I said a minute ago, the gentleman from New York, when upon the floor, frankly announced that unless this scheme went in as part of the bill, unless the Republican Senate included it, that upon your side, so far as he was concerned and any in-fluence he had, there should be no appropriation for pensions in this Congress

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, a word on the point of order. It is, that the paragraph preceding the one to a portion of which the point of order was made is in order under the so-called Holman amendment to the rules, because its operation is or ought to be to reduce expenditures. The subsequent paragraph, carrying an appropriation of $10,000, is simply an incident to that paragraph. It is a part of the plan to consolidate the pension agencies and save the Government $200,000 or $300,000 a year, that it is expected will be saved by this bill if it should become a law. This provision is necessary to consolidate the agencies and is a pure incident to the purpose of the preceding paragraph, and of course it must be construed with Many propositions contained in appropriation bills calculated to reduce the public expenditures carry with them certain incidental matters of detail which standing by themselves might not be in order, but when construed with the subject matter to which they related become a part of a plan to reduce expenditures, and must be so construed, and they are in order. I have no doubt under the new rule that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair agrees with the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana-that if the legislation reducing the number of pension agencies is in order on this bill, then it must certainly be in order to pass legislation to make that provision effective—and the Chair does not think that this legislation has any other effect than to make effective that which goes before and is admitted to have been in order. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill concerning the effect of the last clause in the paragraph. The proviso in that paragraph is that estimates and details shall be submitted for the fiscal year ending 1914 and annually thereafter for clerks and others employed in the United States agency, and the amount to be paid to each; and I have some question in my mind whether that might not make in order a change in the salaries of the clerks if estimated for by the department.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; we just want the information.

Mr. MANN. Well, it does not say, however, an estimate of which the commissioner thinks ought to be paid to each clerk.

Mr. BARTLETT. No. Mr. MANN. But the amounts to be paid to each, and I very much fear that some time some Chairman will hold, where proposition is made to increase the compensation of those clerks upon the estimate of the commissioner, that this author-

Mr. BARTLETT. This is in the form in which we have here-tofore called for such information on appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. While I may be mistaken, and freely admit it, think that this is absolutely new as far as the language is concerned in this one item.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I think not.
Mr. FITZGERALD. At various times provisions have been placed in appropriation bills requiring detailed estimates—

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations drew this in accordance with former provisions.

Mr. MANN. I understand that and I understand what was in his mind, but I have not any language in mind to obviate the objection, although I fear it. I know that is what he wants

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe myself there is any danger from what is suggested by the gentleman from Illinois that this fixes law which would justify an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It is not the intention?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to get detailed estimates.

Mr. MANN. And not to give the commissioner any authority to fix the compensation?

Mr. BARTLETT. No, indeed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At present, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois, the compensation of these clerks is fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The desire is to obtain detailed estimates of the services required and the amounts to be paid, so that the Congress may make specific appropriations in accordance with its own judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in the payment of pensions to arrange the pensioners in three groups as he may think proper, and may from time to time change any pensioner or class of pensioners from one group to another as he may deem convenient for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order on that provision. It is not germane to the subject matter of the bill as shown in its title. Second, that it repeals existing law, without showing on its face or elsewhere that it comes within any of the exceptions provided for under clause 2, Rule XXI, of the House.

Mr. KENDALL. Will my colleague yield? I want to suggest to the Chair that in ruling on the question, it seems to me, the next paragraph of the bill ought to be considered also.

Mr. PROUTY. I might say that I will make the objection on each one of these paragraphs as we go along.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman agree to this, namely, that we will have all the paragraphs read, and then he can raise a point of order to all of them?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Make the point of order on all of them at

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask, then, Mr. Chairman, that the reading of section 2 be finished, and that the consideration of all the paragraphs in section 2 be had at one time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks permission that the additional paragraphs in section 2 be read, and that they all be considered at one time. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

The pensioners in the first group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on January 4, April 4, July 4, and October 4 of each year; the pensioners in the second group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on February 4, May 4, August 4, and November 4 of each year; the pensioners in the third group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on March 4, June 4, September 4, and December 4 of each year.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause payments of pension to be made for the fractional parts of a quarter which may be made necessary by the transfer of a pensioner from one group to another.

Mr. PROUTY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to renew my point of order and to make it apply to the entire section. First, that the section as a whole is not germane to the subject matter of the bill as disclosed in its title; second, that it repeals existing law without making any of the reductions contemplated or provided for in the latter half of clause 2 of Rule XXI of this House.

As a suggestion upon that point, I would say that this measure, as contained in the second section, as you will find if you read it through, does not make the slightest reduction in expenditure. The rule laid down by this House under what is know as the Holman rule, under all the interpretations that have been given to that rule, holds that the reduction in expenditure must appear in the act or the section under consideration and from such provisions of the law as may be applicable to the case. Now, there is not a word or a syllable or a suggestion contained in this bill or in this clause that it would reduce expenditures to change the manner of payment, the times of payment, and the way in which it should be paid.

I call the attention of the Chair to a ruling that is found in volume 4, page 596, section 3888, of Hinds' Precedents, as follows:

On March 15, 1894, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. Benjamin A. Enloe, of Tennessee, offered an amendment for abolishing the Bureau of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Treasury Department and transferring the duties of the bureau to the Navy Department and to the Interior Department.

Mr. Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas, having made the point of order, the chairman ruled:

I will not read all of it:

Now, if part of an amendment is subject to a point of order, then the whole of it is. The fact that an amendment reduces expenses must clearly appear upon the face of the amendment. The Chair thinks that the legislative portion of this amendment does not come within the exception of the rule, because it does not appear that the legislation proposed by the amendment of itself reduces expenditures. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Of course this is not in the form of an amendment, but this provision of the rule applies to a bill as well as to an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the present law provides: That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to arrange the various agencies as he may think proper, etc.

So that there is a law which makes a provision for the arrangement into the groups provided for in this bill. That provision is carried by the act of March 3, 1801. It also provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for the payment of the fractional part of a quarter, so that this first section does not in any way change existing law except in this respect alone, that it changes or may change the time or the month or the quarter in which the pension may be paid.

Now, this provision of the bill does not violate existing law. But even if it did, Mr. Chairman, when you come to take into consideration the other provisions that will follow, it is evident that it is done for the purpose of reducing expenditures

Now, let us see what the Holman rule is. Quoting from the decision rendered by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on January 16, 1912, the rule is:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

At the last session of Congress, upon the pension appropriation bill there was a provision carried which required the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions to report to Congress upon the feasibility of changing the method of paying pensions. By that provision the Commissioner of Pensions was directed-

To formulate and embrace in his annual report a simplified plan for the payment of pensions, whereby all preliminary vouchers shall be abolished and the only vouchers required shall be attached to or a part of the payment check, and the commissioner shall further report what, if any, changes in the law are necessary to carry such plan into effect.

The commissioner in his annual report complies with that provision.

Mr. PROUTY. Was that commission appointed by the House?

Mr. BARTLETT. It was an authorization in the last pension appropriation bill, directing the Commissioner of Pensions in his annual report to make a report. He has done that,

Mr. PROUTY. But does the gentleman understand that this provision of the law refers to a commissioner other than that named by the House from among its own Members?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not made any such statement. Mr. PROUTY. I understood the gentleman so to state.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman could not understand me to make any such statement. I have not made it; and it would be a pretty far-fetched statement for me to make under those circumstances if I had made such a statement.

Mr. PROUTY. Why, then, was the gentleman quoting from the commissioner?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because I wanted to. That is why.

[Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Pensions makes a report and suggests a plan by which, if we can enact this legislation upon this appropriation bill, expenses will be reduced in the Pension Office. The evidence before the committee is that at the present time there are some 4,000,000 vouchers issued before the checks are sent out. The evidence is that if this plan is adopted, that expense will certainly be reduced, so that the whole object of this provision is to reduce expenditures in the Pension Office and to bring ourselves within the provisions of the Holman rule in that regard.

The Chair is already informed by the previous provisions of the bill that we have reduced the number of agencies by 17, thereby reducing the expenses some $68,000 in that particular; and by reason of this reduction in the number of agencies we have further reduced the expenditures some $200,000.

Then, following up that provision of the bill, is this one which, I believe, will reduce expenditures. I believe that is evident from the bill itself.

But, in the event that the Chair should be of a different opinion from that, then we meet the other requirement of the Holman rule, which is this:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee, or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of such commission, having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

We have here a bill, H. R. 18977, which has been reported to this House and is now on the Union Calendar ready to be considered by the House. I apprehend there will be no dispute about the facts. This bill on the Union Calendar is reported from the Committee on Appropriations. The bill was introduced at the beginning of this session, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, considered by the committee, and reported by that committee, and authority given to the chairman of the committee and to myself to call up the bill at any time we had the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT, Certainly, The CHAIRMAN, Would to Would the rule of construction be the same if this was offered as an amendment on the floor of the House that it is when the provision appears in the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. The committee that could offer it as an amendment can embody it in the bill originally, because if it was stricken out and we should at once offer it as an amendment it would then be in order; and it seems to me that is too fine a technicality to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The application of the rule would be the same?

Mr. BARTLETT. The application of the rule would be the same. It is in order if it is germane to the bill and if it reduces expenditures and is reported by a committee having had it referred to them, and may be offered from the floor.

Now, the committee reported the bill in an appropriation act in the very terms. The committee have reported the bill in-dependently and it is on the calendar, and the fact that it is not offered as an amendment from the floor does not change the rule. If the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retrenches expenditures, then, whether offered as an amendment or offered as a part of the bill, from a committee authorized to do so it in the retreatment of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of the purpose of the purpose of the provision is germane, and it retreatment to the purpose of th thorized to do so, it is in order. In both instances the rule is complied with.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a single suggestion to the Chair on this point of order. The provision in this bill is assailed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] on the theory that it contravenes this provision of Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

And so forth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the pension appropriation bill which was enacted by the Sixty-first Congress contained a direction to the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions to devise a more efficacious method of disbursing pensions; efficacious in the sense of being more convenient for the pensioners and more economical to the Government. In response to that direction the Secretary of the Interior has proposed a plan by which remittances of pension money are to be made as contemplated by this scheme which he has recommended to Congress. That recommendation has been incorporated by the Committee on Appropriations in section 2 and the subsequent sections of this bill. I think these sections must be considered as a whole by the Chair in determining this question of order, because they are all a part of a general plan which the Secretary of the Interior has submitted to Congress for adoption in the disbursement of this large sum of money, and the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Commissioner of Pensions, has said that the adoption of this reform will result in an economy amounting, I think, to some $225,000. These considerations clearly render the provision in order.

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to speak for the point of order?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Curiously enough, gentleman from Massachusetts does not know. I am familiar with the question of "linked" amendments and discussed it with the chairman of the Committee on Rules at the time the rules were adopted. I merely wish to call attention to precedents on both sides. I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman from Tennessee go ahead; in fact, I prefer that he should go ahead, because I want to get some books from my desk.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have only this suggestion to offer: I think the ruling made by the Chair a few moments ago upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa applies with equal force to the point of order that is raised now.

While this appears by paragraphs, as a matter of fact all of this legislation, all of these paragraphs, constitute a part of a whole scheme of legislation. Now, the point of order was not raised on the paragraph beginning at line 15, page 2. If the point of order had been raised there, I apprehend the Chair then would have been in a position where he would have had to determine on the question of retrenchment, but the point of order not being raised, manifestly it was the sense of the Committee of the Whole and of each member of that committee that it did show upon its face, under the terms of the so-called Holman rule, a retrenchment of expenditure. Consequently, the Chair was not called upon to pass upon that question.

Now, that being true, and since the several paragraphs against which the point of order is made by the gentleman from Iowa constitute a part of the whole scheme of legislation, the Chair ought not to be technical in construing the rule. The Chair must give to the rules a common-sense construction, and since these paragraphs constitute a part of the whole scheme of legislation, since the harmony of that scheme of legislation will be destroyed were these paragraphs to go out of the bill, I submit that the common-sense construction is to overrule the point of order and let these remain as a part of the bill.

Now, upon one other question. Reference has been made to the ruling which was made by myself when I had the honor to occupy the chair a few days ago in construing one phase of the so-called Holman rule.

The substance of that ruling was that the Appropriations Committee could not bring in substantive legislation as an integral part of an appropriation bill, but that it was confined to retrenchment by the method laid down in the first part of the

I was not then called upon to pass upon the proviso to the rule, which reads:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law, or the House members of any such commission, having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

I say I was not called upon to construe that part of the rule. What is the situation now? It is known to the Chair from the official records of the House that a bill embodying precisely the matters of pension agency abolishment and consolidation that are in this appropriation bill was introduced in this House before the holidays and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Whether that reference was proper or not we need not stop now to inquire. The fact is that it was so referred, that no point of order against the reference was ever made, that the Committee on Appropriations did not seek to evade that jurisdiction, and that the Committee on Pensions did not seek to obtain jurisdiction of that bill, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations passed on it and reported that bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Having been so reported from that committee, it would, if its effect shown clearly on its face be to retrench expenditures, be in order if offered as an amendment. And if it would be in order if offered as an amendment, then certainly it would seem that the common-sense construction of the rule would permit it to be brought in as an integral part of the bill, though, as I view it, it is not necessary for the Chair to pass upon this phase now

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the original Holman rule years ago, adopted some time about 1876, did not contain the proviso which is in the present rule, allowing amendments to an appropriation bill to be introduced upon the authorization of a committee's report, provided they are germane and provide for a retrenchment. Under the original Holman rule any amendment which was germane and retrenched expenses was in order, whether introduced in accordance with a committee's report or not. That rule, as Mr. Holman subsequently pointed out in debate, was altogether too liberal. It allowed Members to bring in all sorts of legislation in an appropriation bill which did not belong there. So the next step was the adoption of the Holman rule in its present form, which says that Members without the authorization of a committee's report may only introduce germane amendments retrenching expenses affecting three classes of matters, to wit, the reduction of the number of officials, the reduction of compensation, and the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill. In order not to confine the amendment privilege too much from Mr. Holman's point of view it was then provided that if a committee had previously reported a bill covering the same ground, in that case it would be in order to introduce any amendment to an appropriation bill, provided it was germane and retrenched expenses, no matter what its scope might be. It is under this last proviso that the Committee on Appropriations has reported in the original draft of this bill, instead of offering it by way of an amendment, a certain clause providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall organize the Pension Office in a particular way.

Now comes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] and, resting on the decision rendered by the Hon. Rufus E. Lester, of Georgia, says:

Yes; but although you do reduce expenses by a certain amendment to xisting law, nevertheless you couple with that a legislative provision which does not of itself reduce expenses.

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat in doubt how the Chair ought to rule on this point; but I have given it some study. In fact, it was a matter of some debate between the chairman of the Committee on Rules and myself the day these rules were adopted. The rulings on the questions "linked" or coupled amendments under the Holman rule are contradictory. Speaker Carlisle, in a case which can be found in the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents, 3602, held to be in order one of these "linked" amendments; that is to say, an amendment which provided for a retrenchment and at the same time had other features of a legislative nature. On June 1, 1892, 12 years later, under the exact Holman rule which we have now, Mr. Buchanan, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, ruled in the same way. The amendment proposed at that time reduced by a nominal sum the amount of money provided for rural free delivery; and then, if I recollect rightly, it further provided that no additional routes should be established until each congressional district had at least one route. There were two branches to the amendment—one reducing an expense, like cutting out these pension agents, and another providing other matters. That amendment was ruled to be in order by Mr. Buchanan, and the Committee of the Whole House on appeal sustained that ruling

Three days later, however, precisely the same question or an analogous one came up again. The RECORD apparently shows that Mr. Buchanan was again in the chair; but the remarks of the Chairman, made just before his ruling, and the text of the ruling itself shows that it was not Mr. Buchanan, but some other Chairman who, to my mind, squarely over-ruled the decision made three days before. On this latter occasion the proposition was to retrench on a small amount of money and to repeal the ocean mail-subsidy act. It was another one of these "linked" amendments having two features. Whoever it was in the chair said that he had consulted the various rulings, that they were all based on one reason or another, but he squarely ruled out of order the two propositions linked in one, although the amendment technically came under the rule. This latter ruling, which occurred on June 4, 1892, can not be found in Hinds' Precedents, I think. It occurs in Crutchfield's Comments on the Holman Rule. Two years later came this Enloe ruling, handed down by Col. Lester, of Two years Georgia, to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty] has A question was raised there analogous to this which we are now considering. Col. Lester acted in accordance with the decision of the unknown Chairman, and exactly against the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle and Chairman Buchanan. He decided that under the Holman rule it was not in order to present one of these "linked" amendments.

Although the proviso in the Holman rule in its terms gives a standing only to amendments previously reported by a committee having jurisdiction, it seems to be obvious that it means to extend the same standing to similar provisions in the appropriation bill as originally reported. The proviso on which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is relying, to wit, the proviso making in order an amendment previously reported by a committee, says "that it shall be in order further to amend such bill," and so forth, in the way specified. It is true that it is silent as to whether or not the original bill may contain a provision such as the proviso says may be added by amendment. Strictly speaking, if paragraph 2 of Rule XXI were to be interpreted literally, I think the Chair would be obliged to hold that this provision of the bill scarcely comes within the scope of the proviso, inasmuch as it is not an amendment. I doubt, however, if this proviso should be construed so literaly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman asked me a little while ago whether I was going to speak in support of the point of order or against the point of order I said that I did not know, but, as I had made a study of the matter, I felt that it would not be an inopportune time to record these decisions

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provision to which the point of order has been made has been reported in a separate bill from the Committee on Appropriations. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he feels free to do so, to give an opinion as to whether, that having been done, the same construction should be applied to the provision whether it be offered as an amendment or be contained in the bill as an original proposition.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest doubt that if this question could have been foreseen by the gentlemen who drew the rules they would have drawn the proviso somewhat as follows: "That it shall be in order to report in an appropriation bill or further to amend such bill," and so forth. They did not so do; but, nevertheless, if I were in the chair, I think I should decide that this provision was in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, one word. I want to state I have called attention to the fact that the law already now provides, act of March 31, 1891, and other provisions to be found in the compilation which I hold in my hand, the way in which pensions shall be paid. It provides that 15 days before the payment period, quarterly period, there shall be sent out vouchers. Now, the Chair can be informed-it is a matter of official knowledge-that 4,000,000 of these pension vouchers a year are necessary to be filed, to be printed, and made. The law provides for them now. This changes the law by dispensing altogether with the preparation, with the making out, with the carriage through the mails, of these 4,000,000 pension vouchers, so that this provision which we propose is to have only one receipt, where we now have the pension voucher first carried through the mails, the pension voucher returned to the pension agencies at the cost of the Government, and then the check made out in accordance with the pension voucher, and then carried back to the pensioner through the mails. So if nothing else is done by this bill, we save the expense of the preparation, signing, and transmission and retransmission of the pension vouchers to these agents, so that retrenches expenditures certainly in that amount.

Part of this scheme is the abolition of the pension agencies, and this following upon that is another evidence in the bill of the purpose of the bill to retrench expenditures with a saving to the Government of something over $200,000. That much as to whether it retrenches expenditures or not. I apprehend that it is germane to the bill. The bill is for the payment of pen-sions to pensioners. Anything that carries out the purpose of an appropriation of money and the manner in which it shall be paid is germane to the bill. The whole purpose of the bill is an appropriation of money to pay pensioners, some $152,500,000.

Mr. GARRETT. It would undoubtedly be in order, if the Appropriations Committee saw fit, to so fix by way of limitation as to provide the method by which the money should be sent.

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly. We could limit the way in which it can be done and put a limitation as to how it shall be expended. It could be provided that none of this money should be expended in the preparation or signing or transmission of vouchers and their return and they could only be paid by check, so we have here undoubtedly a bill whose whole purpose is to pay pensions, and we have a right to say how they shall be paid.

But I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that there can be no question that the matter is germane to the bill. Then, as to the other question of being germane, it will not do, Mr. Chairman, to say that the Committee on Appropriations did not have authority to consider and report this bill. I ask the Chair to read paragraph 4365, volume 4, of Hinds' Precedents, which he has before him, bearing upon this proposition. The rule. whatever may have been the conflicting decisions as to a committee having a bill referred to it improperly, the accepted or modern rule is that, although a committee may not have had jurisdiction originally to entertain a bill, although the bill was improperly referred to it, yet if the bill remains with the committee and no effort is made by the committee to which it should have been referred to obtain jurisdiction, and no effort is made by the committee to which it has been referred to decline jurisdiction, and that committee acts, then the question of the jurisdiction of the committee acting and reporting the bill can not be raised at the time when the bill is taken up in the House and is being considered.

So if the proposition is that the Committee on Appropriations did not have jurisdiction to consider this bill originally, if it be true that the bill had been improperly referred and ought to have been referred to some other committee, that objection is not now tenable under the rule, because under the precedent to which I have referred the Chair it is the accepted rule that it is too late to raise that question after the committee has acted upon a bill, reported it to the House, and has it upon the calendar. So as to the Holman rule we have the retrenchment of expenditures, and this being a part of a scheme which this bill proposes of reducing expenditures, and the other part where it can be offered as an amendment and carried as a part of the bill when the committee having jurisdiction, or the committee which had taken jurisdiction by reason of the reference, reports the bill out and has it ready upon the calendar, all the requirements of the rule have been met.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It seems to me it all reduces itself down to the question of whether or not the proviso in paragraph 2 of Rule XXI, "That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee," forth, shall be held to include the right of the Committee on Appropriations to report this provision originally. Chairman, suppose the point of order is sustained and suppose that this provision is struck out because the Committee on Appropriations did not have the right to include it in this bill, all they have got to do is to offer the same provision as an amendment. It seems to me to be a parliamentary absurdity to say that you may insert a provision by amendment and yet may not insert it as a part of the original bill. Mr. OLMSTED. Could they offer it by amendment unless it has been reported by the committee?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think it is too late to raise a point of order on the jurisdiction of that committee, I think it is too late to Mr. Chairman. I am assuming, at all events, that it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I will say that so far as the jurisdiction of the committee is concerned, the Chair is satisfied, whether it was properly or improperly referred to that committee, there is no doubt it is now properly before the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Assuming that such is the case, I submit to the Chair that it is an absurdity to say that you may do by amendment that which you may not do in presenting a bill. Although the proviso to paragraph 2 of Rule XXI is carelessly drawn, it is a carelessness of many years' standing. It seems to me that the Chair could very properly construe that proviso as giving the right to the Committee on Appropriations to include in their original bill any provision which could be inserted as an amendment under the Holman rule.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order relates to a new provision, incorporated in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Massachusetts contends that under the so-called Holman amendment to the rules, authorizing amendments to bills changing existing law, where the effect is to reduce the expenses of the Government, they are only in order when offered or proposed from the floor of the House.

Now, think for a moment of the absurdity of that proposition, even if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] be right. The Committee on Appropriations, according to his contention, can not investigate thoroughly and incorporate in the bill a new provision under that rule. But when the bill is reported to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union any member of that committee may, without consideration by the Committee on Appropriations, without opportunity for an investigation of the subject matter, be at liberty to offer an amendment changing existing law, provided always that its effect is to reduce public expenditures.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the gentleman is making rather a broad statement there.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am stating the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not think the gentleman understood my contention if he thinks he stated it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say this provision was subject to a point of order because it was reported by the Committee on Appropriations originally as a part of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. On the contrary, I say in my opinion it is in order, although the rules, as strictly read, do not put it in order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then, what is the objection to it now? What is the ground for the point of order?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I did not raise the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I misunderstood. I thought it was a strange contention that the amendment should be given such a narrow construction as to permit an amendment from the floor of the House and at the same time prohibit the committee from reporting, as part of the original bill, the same proposition. Of course, if the gentleman does not take the position that I understood him to take, I have nothing to answer. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I made the objection, I think I ought to be permitted to state my position. can not quite consent that somebody else should state the proposition and then knock it down.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the gentleman is entitled to that privilege

Mr. PROUTY. Now, referring to the last proposition that has been discussed, I think I might say frankly to the Chairman and to the committee that I do not claim to be a parliamentarian, and yet I believe that I understand fairly well the English language. I have read every decision of this body and every decision of every Speaker upon this question, and I think I can understand fairly well what this new proviso means; and unless I am entirely mistaken in my construction, the learned gentleman who has just spoken did not reach the question involved at all.

Now, I wish to read that rule:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment.

Now, that seems to me to be plain. It does not mean that the Committee on Appropriations can come in here and inject into a bill a measure over which some other committee has jurisdiction. Suppose, now, that when I raised the objection some members of this committee should come in here and report a liquor law, and say that they, as members of that committee, had reported it. The objection is that their committee has not jurisdiction of that subject matter. This is an Appropriations Committee. This other matter should belong to the Pensions Committee, and this Committee on Appropriations has no right to engraft upon this law a measure that is not subject to their jurisdiction.

Of course, I realize the cuteness and the shrewdness of the gentleman in reporting another bill here and saying that there has been no objection to the fact that this has been reported by their committee. But can any parliamentarian say that because a bill has been referred to a committee and has been reported out, that is a report affecting this bill? Not in the least. It is another and a separate bill, and there can be nothing that more clearly indicates the candid, cold judgment of the gentleman who is the author of this bill than the fact that he brought in another bill that is word for word and line for line and punctuation for punctuation the same, covering exactly the same thing that I raised the objection against here. If he had felt in his heart that this measure was good here, why should he attempt to report another bill covering identically the same matter?

Now I come to another question discussed by the distinguished author of the bill, who reported or stated that there was a provision in an appropriation bill providing that a commissioner should report upon this measure.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not a commission. I did not say "commission." I said "the Commissioner of Pensions."

Mr. PROUTY. I said "commissioner." I simply said "commissioner," not "Commissioner of Pensions." Now, he undertakes to say, if I understand the logic of his argument, that because that commissioner reported in favor of it that has something to do with this bill being within the scope of Rule XXI.

Mr. BARTLETT. No. I know my friend does not mean to misstate my position.

Mr. PROUTY. I certainly did not intend to.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was done simply for the purpose of showing that that would result in a reduction of expenditures, and I cited that simply to show that it would have that result and nothing more.

Mr. PROUTY. Well, then, if that is what the gentleman cited it for, it has no merit. The gentleman has gone almost as far as my distinguished friend from Iowa went, who got up here and quoted the Commissioner of Pensions, saying that it reduced expenditures $200,000. In order to determine questions in that way we would have to have a trial, and I would have to summon witnesses and prove whether or not it did reduce expenditures. But this House has established the correct rule. It is not whether the Commissioner of Pensions has recommended this or that. If you will turn to page 3885 of Hinds' Precedents, under date of April 28, 1876, when this identical question was raised, you will find this is what was said by the Speaker .

In the first place, to what considerations in the making of a ruling has the Chair a right to look? Can he go outside of this bill and inquire generally, as it is the right and duty of a Member on the floor of this House to do, what will be the effect of this fourth section; or is it his duty to limit his inquiries to the face of the bill, to the specific terms of the section in question, the law of the land so far as applicable, and the parliamentary rules and practice of this House? In the judgment of the Chair the range of his investigation is the latter, and he can not properly go beyond these three considerations.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. The suggestion of the gentleman might very well have applied if the point of order had been made at the proper section of the bill; but the real gist of this legislation is involved in that paragraph beginning with line 15 on page 2.

I am not yielding for a speech. I am yield-Mr. PROUTY.

ing for a question.

Mr. GARRETT. It is rather a suggestion. If the gentleman had made his point of order there, it would have been very

Mr. PROUTY. "The gentleman from Iowa" was fully advised as to the place where he wanted to make his point of order. I am frank to say that it would not have been good if made to section 1 of this act. That provision, standing alone and by itself, does reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. If that provision of the bill does that, and this further provision is simply to give force and effect to it, does not that make it germane to the bill?

Mr. PROUTY. If the Chair will pardon me, I say no, for this reason, that they are distinct propositions. What is the first one, in section 1? It is simply the abolition of pension agencies, and the section that it repeals applies simply to the creation of agencies and the appointment of agents. Here is a substantive law, carrying an entirely different subject in no way connected with the pension agencies. The pension agencies might have been abolished, and yet we would go ahead and pay just as we always had, but pay from Washington. There would not have had to be a change in the time of payment. There would not have had to be a change at all. I think that fairly and squarely answers the Chairman's question. There are two provisions. The first one provides simply and solely for the abolition of offices, and I believed and I still believe that if I had raised the point of order upon that section, I would have made myself ridiculous, because this rule clearly provides that if it reduces the number of offices it is in order.

There could not be a finer situation developed to show the wisdom of this rule and the requirement for its fair and reasonable interpretation than the situation now before us. As I have intimated before, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said clearly that, although this is not a subject over which his committee has jurisdiction, they will withhold all appropriations for pensions unless this legislation is attached to and made a part of the bill that he has offered to this House

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about

Mr. PROUTY. No; the gentleman from New York repeated

Mr. BARTLETT. He was referring to the 18 pension agencies. Mr. PROUTY. No; he repeated the statement later while standing by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in the center aisle here. Now, gentlemen, we are dealing with a big proposition here to-day. Are we going upon record as saying that a man can come in here and force legislation through, and when one branch of this Congress will not enact that legisla-tion say to them, "Unless you do that you can not have any appropriation." That is exactly what this rule meant to cover. It says:

* * * having jurisdiction of the subject matter of A committee such amendment.

If the Committee on Pensions had this bill under consideration and had reported a bill upon the subject, I would concede that the interpretation of the gentleman is correct, but I do not believe the chairman or this House is ready to go upon record upon the proposition that a committee can come here and report a matter over which they have no jurisdiction, and make it germane and proper to be considered in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order to the entire provision of section 2, and bases it upon two grounds. The first is that the section as a whole is not germane to the subject matter of the bill as disclosed in its title. It is not necessary, as I understand, and no authority has been called to the attention of the Chair that it is necessary to disclose all the provisions of a bill in its title. The Chair holds on the first ground that it would not be necessary for the title of the bill to disclose all the provisions of the bill and therefore overrules the point of order on that ground.

Now, the second ground is that it repeals existing law without making any reduction of expenditures as contemplated and provided for in the latter part of clause 2, Rule XXI, of this

Perhaps standing alone and not considering the other provisions of this bill that point of order would be well taken. But, as has been well said by several gentlemen arguing the point of order, the bill must be judged by all the provisions that have gone before this one. It will not do to put too narrow a construction on the rule. We might so narrowly construe the rules that the House could not legislate at all. There must be some life and vitality to the rules of the House.

Rule XXI was enacted for the purpose, I presume, of preventing general legislation upon appropriation bills. Since it has been in force it has received a good many constructions. It has been passed upon by some of the ablest Speakers and parliamentarians in Congress, and I think we can safely follow the construction placed on the rules by former occupants of the chair. I want first to come to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, that the committee that reported this bill had no jurisdiction, and consequently, for that reason, the point of order must be sustained.

That precise question has been decided, and I will read the entire decision so that the committee may see just what position we are in so far as that question is concerned.

Section 4365 of the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents reads 4365. According to the later practice of the House the erroneous reference of a public bill, if it remain uncorrected, in effect gives jurisdiction to the committee receiving it. On October 19, 1893, Mr. Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama, on behalf of the Committee on Territories, presented for consideration the bill (H. R. 3606) to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department.

Mr. W. A. Stone, of Pennsylvania, made the point of order that the bill, not being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories, had been erroneously reported and was improperly on the calendar.

The Speaker overruled the point, holding as follows:

"The reference of a public bill, as described by the rules, is different from that prescribed in regard to private bills. An erroneous reference of a public bill may be corrected any morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, either by unanimous consent or on motion of a Member representing the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred or on motion of the committee claiming jurisdiction. And where a public bill has been suffered, even erroneously, to be considered by a committee, and that committee has reported it back to the House, there is no way of raising the question of jurisdiction if the bill is a public bill. The case is different in regard to private bills. This bill is practically an amendment of a charter granted to a railroad company to pass through lands in the Territories, which original bill was reported by the Committee on the Territories."

I take it that if this bill was erroneously referred originally

I take it that if this bill was erroneously referred originally to the Committee on Appropriations, if we follow the decision of Mr. Speaker Crisp just read, it is too late now to raise that point of order, and the Chair so holds.

As to the proposition that it must be shown on the face of section 2 that it reduces the expenditures of the Government, in order to bring it within the Holman rule, is the real question at issue I do not think the rule should be so narrowly construed. This section is part of the general legislation of the bill reducing expenditures, and in the Fifty-second Congress this point was debated at length, and two of the men who debated it were Mr. Holman himself, the author of the rule, and Mr. Dingley, of Maine.

I have read their arguments with a great deal of interest and care, and knowing that this point of order was to be made, I took the pains to read up very thoroughly on the question.

I may say to the committee that in arriving at my conclusion in this matter I followed very closely the very able arguments of Mr. Dingley and Mr. Holman, and I have come to the conclusion which I will now state to the committee:

Rule XXI provides that before a proposition changing existing law shall be in order on an appropriation bill it must be germane to the subject matter of the bill and tend to retrench expenditures, and such reduction must be apparent on the face of the bill.

It is conceded that the new legislation in the bill reduces the number of employees, thereby tending to reduce expenditures, and is germane; but it is contended that the new legislation in subsequent provisions of the bill is subject to a point of order on the ground that such new legislation is a change of existing law, and for that reason is improperly in an appropriation bill and obnoxious to the provisions of Rule XXI.

That there is a reduction of the number of employees of the Government and a consequent reduction of expenditures is apparent on the face of the bill, and if the subsequent provisions of the bill are necessary to carry into effect the prior object—reduction of expenses—they would be germane to the bill and not subject to the point of order. That the only purpose and effect of the new legislation is to give force and effect to the provisions of the bill which tend to reduce the expenditures of the Government must be apparent to all.

The Chair therefore holds that there is a reduction of expense apparent on the face of the bill, and that the subsequent legislation is necessary to accomplish that result and therefore in

The Chair overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SLAYDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 252. An act to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 252. An act to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That hereafter pensions shall be paid by checks drawn, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in such form as to protect the United States against loss, without separate vouchers or receipts, and payable by the proper assistant treasurer or designated depositary. Such checks shall be transmitted by mail to the payee thereof at his last known address.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order to this section that I did to the preceding section.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is the same point of order.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to argue the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That postmasters, delivery clerks, letter carriers, and all other postal employees are prohibited from delivering any such mall to any person whomsoever if the addressee has died or removed, or in the case of a widow believed by the postal employee intrusted with the delivery of such mall to have remarried; and the postmaster in every such case shall forthwith return such mail to the pension agency with a statement of the reasons for so doing, and if because of death or remarriage, the date thereof, if known.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order to that section.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order to section 4, just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in making this point of order I do so as a friend of the bill. I am in complete harmony with all the provisions of this bill excepting sections 4 and 5, and I raise this point of order because I think that it ought not to be in the bill and is not properly there under the rules of this House. It is not necessary for me to repeat the rules that have been read and reread over and over in the discussion of the points of order made to the other parts of this bill; but upon the face of it, the reading of the very section, section 4, it is clear that it does not come within the rules of the House, because it is substantive legislation of itself. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction over the subject matter that is provided for in this section, as this section seeks to amend the general postal laws of the United States, seeks to change them, and, therefore, is obnoxious to the rules of the House. It surely does not come under the exception of the general rule, in that it seeks to reduce the expenditures of the Government. Neither can it be urged that this section would come under that provision of the exception to the general rule. Nor can it be urged as linked legislation necessary to perfect legislation provided for in the other sections of the bill, because it relates wholly to the delivery through the mail of the checks that come into the hands of the pensioner. As already said, it seeks to amend the postal laws that are now in existence. The old soldier is entitled to the check when it comes to him. This seeks to reverse the rule and impose upon him another rule of the mail system and the delivery of his check, which imposes upon him burdens that are not imposed upon the great business that is transacted throughout the country. Millions of dollars in checks are sent everywhere, and no such rule or law as that which is sought here to be invoked is imposed upon any other business transactions. This is legislation that is imposed upon this class of people unfairly, and not speaking from the point of the extra imposition put upon this class of people, it clearly comes within the prohibition of the general rule. The legislation is not fair to the old soldier. It is not fair to him to provide that the rural route carrier or even the postmaster or the city mail carrier shall, if he chooses, withhold from the old soldier his mail and cause him any extra trouble, any more than you would make the same provision respecting any other business transaction and change the rules of the delivery of first-class mail.

I insist that this section does not come within the rule; that it is new legislation, substantive, and that it does not tend to reduce expenditures. Neither can it be urged as legislation linked and necessary to that which we have already approved in this bill. I insist that the point of order be sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if I can, not strictly on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will answer any question in my power which the gentleman may ask.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman think is the effect of the language "removed"?

Mr. BARTLETT. These pension checks, under the rules and regulations, are sent to the last known address of the pensioner. Now, if a pensioner has removed from that address and can not be found by the carrier—

Mr. MANN. That is it; what does it say about "can not be found"?

Mr. BARTLETT. The presumption is that the carrier, if he knows the address, will deliver it. It does not change the law now in reference to pension checks.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman was sure about that-

Mr. BARTLETT. I inquired of the official who has this matter in charge, day before yesterday, and he was before the subcommittee; and it does not change the rule, as I undertook to state in my remarks in general debate on this subject. If the address of the pensioner is changed, the carrier can not deliver it, and in a certain time—so many days—it comes back to the office here and it is held here until the pensioner informs the Pension Office of the changed address, and then it is forwarded to his new address. I stated in my remarks that the purpose of the Committee on Pensions and pension authorities here in charge of the Pension Bureau was that if this shall become a law, when they sent out the last checks under the present law they would notify each pensioner who receives his check that in case they remove to notify the Pension Office of their changed address, if any, and the new check will be sent to that changed address.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will permit. If this language is in the existing law and has received a construction, I am satisfied; but if it is new language, I would like to know just what it means. It does not say "moves his residence"; it does not say that "if the pensioner has moved"; but it says, "if he has removed." Now, probably 20 per cent of my constituents move every year or every two years where they live in an apartment building. Suppose a pensioner's address is flat A in a building and he moves to flat B?

building and he moves to flat B?

Mr. BARTLETT. That does not mean he has moved his residence.

Mr. MANN. But it does; he has removed—

Mr. BARTLETT. He has not changed his residence.

Mr. MANN. That is the question. Suppose he has moved across the street? Suppose he has moved to another part of Chicago? Suppose he has moved to another part of the State and they have his address? How does the gentleman make the differentiation between moving from flat A to another flat, or from one part to another part of the State where they have the address, and there has been no construction in any law?

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the present law and under this proposed law this gives the department the power to make rules and regulations—

Mr. MANN. But here is a positive prohibition against the carrier delivering mail if he knows the addressee has removed.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is the identical provision as it was recommended by the department to execute and carry out the

Mr. MANN. I understand; but the Bureau of Pensions is not the Post Office Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I want to reach the same conclusion in reference to it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois, May I be permitted to ask this question for my own information? Suppose a letter was addressed to a pensioner at a certain number in a city. Now, that pensioner moves to a different number or in another block on the same route that the carrier goes. Now, under this, is the carrier permitted to deliver that letter to the new address? Mr. MANN. It says not.

Mr. MANN. It says not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The question is, for instance, in the city where my colleague lives a pensioner has his address at a certain number on a street. Now, then, when a letter comes again to him he has moved to a different number on the same route on which the letter carrier goes. Now, under this provision will the carrier be permitted to take that letter to the provision will the carrier be permitted to take that letter to the new address, where he knows the pensioner lives?

Mr. BARTLETT. I should think so, beyond any question.

Mr. MANN. If he could do it, why could not he give it to his fellow carrier at the same station, or send it back to the post office to be delivered to some other carrier, or send it to some other address if he knows the address.

some other address, if he knows the address.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This is in the plural number here, and I judge it might be, if he was on the route of one carrier, and then he may have lived on the route of another carrier—

Mr. MANN. But it says that all post-office employees are prohibited from delivering any such mail to any person whomsoever if the addressee has removed. Now, I do not think the committee wants to do that.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not believe the committee wants to make such a narrow construction as that. I do not believe the Committee on Appropriations—believe the Committee on Appropriations—

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett] a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mann] finished?

Mr. Mann. Yes. I just called it to the attention of the gentleman.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What is the rule now for the delivery of letters where people have moved?

Mr. BARTLETT. They are held at the post office to which they are addressed for a certain time, and then returned to the Pension Office. They are held here at the office until they learn of the pensioner's changed address, and then they send it to him. Mr. BURLESON. This does not change the method of delivery in the slightest.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. They are held and delivered exactly the same as all other first-class mail. Is not that true?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly. But if the carrier does not know the address and can not find the man, how can he deliver it to him?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] yield? Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. What will be the effect of the belief in the mind of a special-delivery boy or a letter carrier as to the remarriage of a widow, as provided in this section 4?

Mr. BARTLETT. I guess he would know it by seeing it announced in the papers or by statements in the neighborhood, without doubt.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would not the effect of section 4 be that once a letter carrier formed the belief that the widow had remarried it would estop the payment of her

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; that is true. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that is wise legislation?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so. The department also thinks it is, in order to protect the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask if the Commissioner of Pensions would not send a man there to investigate?

Mr. BARTLETT. Upon the return of the check by the postal clerk stating that the widow had remarried, of course the Pension Office would ascertain whether it was true or not.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But there is nothing in the provisions of this bill-

Mr. BARTLETT. There is in this bill a provision for the Pension Office to make all necessary rules and regulations about the matter, and they already have.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But you describe specifically what shall take place under this legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. No more than what the rules and regulations are now about this same thing.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the legislation proposed here wipe out the rules now existing?

Mr. BARTLETT. No. On the contrary, it gives the department full authority to make all needful rules and regulations to carry out the provisions.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has the pension agent or the Pension Department or the Interior Department the right to promulgate rules in violation of this provision?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That being the case, section 4 must stand

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think it would injury anybody. Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentlemen are unduly alarmed about this section.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am unduly alarmed about the widow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know the gentleman does not want to lose his pension agent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman is not worrying about his pension agent. He is worrying about the widow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provision is practically in the language recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions. He said he believed that it was the best method most promptly to deliver these vouchers and checks to the pensioners. It would also save delay and inconvenience to have it done so. If this be not enacted into law, it will not affect what will be done. Under the law a letter belongs to the sender until it is actually delivered to the addressee. The Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior could have printed on the envelope the statement that the mail should not be delivered to the person addressed except at the address given on the envelope, and there would be no authority residing anywhere to deliver that mail otherwise. That is within the control of the person who sends the mail.

There is no desire to inconvenience the pensioner or to prevent him from getting his check promptly. In fact, this is designed to have the check delivered to him expeditiously. Unless a card or notice is placed on the envelope directing that the mail be returned within a fixed time, that mail may be held

I think it is held, sometimes, longer. Some of my mail, at least, has been held longer than that because there was no direction on the envelope to return it within a certain time. It was in order to provide that these checks should be delivered quickly to the pensioners that this provision was drawn. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania or other gentlemen think they are better able to pass upon this question than the Commissioner of Pensions, the best way would be to have the question of order passed upon at once and let us finish the consideration of this bill to-day

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Suppose a woman lived on a certain street at a certain number, and suppose the letter carrier covering that route believes that that woman has remarried. Under the provisions of this section he is prohibited from delivering that letter to her. The letter is then returned, with the explanation of the postmaster to the Interior Department. That is the end of it, so far as this bill is concerned. Assuming, now, that the gentleman's plan might be good, it is only good in a measure. Suppose they sent out their post-office inspector or pension investigator, and the inspector satisfied himself that the woman is still a widow. The inspector is satisfied, but the letter carrier is still of the same opinion. The letter carrier's route has not changed and the widow's address has not changed, and as long as the letter carrier's belief still abides in his mind he is forbidden and prohibited, under this law, from delivering that letter to her.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. would happen in that case would be this: If that widow did not get her pension on the day it was due, she would communicate quickly with the pension agent to know why the delay was occasioned, and within a very brief time the facts would be definitely ascertained. If she had been remarried, she would be stricken from the pension roll; and if she was still a widow she would be paid. Of course, it is impossible to provide in gen-eral legislation for every conceivable case that would arise. This measure is designed to make the administration of this law effective.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I think she would have to change her address in order to get her money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, speaking of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Young], it seems to me it is not well taken. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] has well stated, it seems to me the Commissioner of Pensions has the power to put any directions upon the letter he thinks proper to insure its delivery. Indeed, any private sender of a letter can give directions as to whom it shall be delivered by printing on the letter itself. The letter is under the directions of the person who sends it until it is delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, and up to that time the sender has control over the matter if he gives the proper directions. What a private individual can do the Government may do by statute. That is all there is to this question, and I think the amendment does not change any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that section 4 does not add anything to the legislation contained in this bill. If the proposition inserted by the gentleman from New York was not in the bill, the bill would be just as strong as it is now. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. That the envelope in which the check is malled shall have plainly printed thereon instructions in accordance with the provisions of this act. Checks returned as herein provided on account of the death or remarriage of the pensioner shall be canceled.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order against section 5. It surely ought to go out for the same reason as section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

BARTLETT] wish to say anything about that provision?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the law provides that the Commissioner of Pensions shall make such rules and regulations as to sending out mail as he thinks proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That whoever shall forge the indorsement of the person to whose order any pension check shall be drawn, or whoever with the knowledge that such indorsement is forged shall utter such check, or whoever, by falsely personating such person, shall receive from any person, firm, corporation, or officer or employee of the United States the whole or any portion of the amount represented by such check, shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than five years or both.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the same point of order to this section that I made to section 2. I do not wish to do it perfunctorily as I have to sections 3 and 4. Here, certainly, seems to be a legislative extension that I can not imagine gentleman on the other side will insist upon. If you will notice, this section creates a new crime and a new punishment. In other words, gentlemen are not satisfied by having the Committee on Appropriations pass upon substantive legislation on the civil side, but they are going upon the criminal side

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman wish to permit people to forge and cash and improperly collect pension checks?

Mr. PROUTY. No; I do not wish them to do that.
Mr. FITZGERALD. That will be the effect of the gentleman's action.

Mr. PROUTY. Not at all. At the proper time and by the proper committee this matter can be considered and reported to this House and passed upon without regard to the threat of the gentleman from New York that there shall be no appropriation pass this House for the old soldiers unless this measure is carried through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. The statement of "the gentleman from New York" did not apply to this pension check-voucher system. It applied to the indefensible employment of people in the gentleman's district and other districts in the pension agencies.

Mr. PROUTY. Conceding the accuracy of the gentleman's statement as to what his threat included, why does it not apply with equal force to this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because I did not apply it to this. It is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. PROUTY. The criminal phase of it is certainly just as important as the civil.

Mr. FITZGERALD. More important. The gentleman has been proclaiming his anxiety to protect the old soldiers. Now he wants legislation enacted in such a defective form that it will permit pension checks to be stolen and cashed without any penalty for the crime.

Mr. PROUTY. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. am perfectly willing, at the proper time and place and before the proper committee, to have this House pass appropriate legislation; but I do say I am not willing to turn over all the legislation of this Congress to the gentleman who is at the head of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that this provision is properly before the House and properly reported and will be properly considered, regardless of the desires or objections of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, Mr. PROUTY. I should like to know at what stage and what time the gentleman became so thoroughly interested in the welfare of the old soldier? Did not the gentleman vote against the Sherwood pension bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did.

Mr. PROUTY. When did the gentleman get so interested in the old soldier?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman anxious to know? Mr. PROUTY. Surely, or I would not have asked the ques-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I got really interested in the old soldier long before his vote might affect my personal in-old soldier long before his vote might affect my personal interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I have not fully agreed with the reasoning of the Chair holding sections 2 and 3 in order, yet it seems to me that the Chair, in order to be consistent, ought to hold this section in order. If the payment of pensions by checks was coupled with and a part of the proposition to abolish the pension agencies, which proposition was in order under the Holman rule, then it seems to me that as a part of the same proposition we have the right to prescribe a penalty for the forgery or fraudulent use of the checks. As the Chair has connected the payment of checks with the abolition of the pension agencies, it does not seem to me that it is any step further to connect the penal prohibition against forging the check as a part and parcel of the proposition.

Unfortunately, possibly, the committee in reporting the bill put in different sections of the bill. I do not think anyone would contend that if this were offered as an amendment in connection with section 3 providing for the payment of the check, and in the same section insert a penal provision against forging the check-I say I do not think anyone could say that the two were not connected with each other, and that the latter proposition was not germane to the first.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Does not forging a check constitute a crime without providing for it in this bill?

That is a matter of argument, but whether it does or does not makes no difference as far as the point of order is concerned, because the law may not cover it. It is within the power and a part of the province of Congress in providing for the payment of checks to put in a penalty against forging the checks. I apprehend the law does not fully cover it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to be consistent, and therefore he is going to follow the advice of the gentleman from Illinois and overrule the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in this discussion reference has been made to the reports of the commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the Record by publishing extracts from those reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objectively.

tion?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, completing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The official bond given by the agent for payment of pensions shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the person authorized to act in his place.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in the last paragraph, next to the last line, the word "person" and insert in lieu thereof the word "persons."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. I offer the following amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend or repeal that portion of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1883, Statutes at Large, volume 22, page 332, concerning the payment of pensions due inmates of national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOOHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for invalid and other pensions, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended tion on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MANN. I object.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment just

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bartlett) there were 57 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 2, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everliving God, our heavenly Father, to whom we are indebted for life and all things, quicken, we beseech Thee, all that is purest, noblest, best in us; that with clear conceptions, pure motives, and high ideals we may strive earnestly to measure up to the principles enunciated by the King of men, and follow His illustrious example in all the transactions and relationships of a complicated life; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done. RECEPTION TO COUNT FRANCIS LUETZOW, OF BOHEMIA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion at this time that can not be agreed to, of course, except by unanimous consent. Count Francis Luetzow, a distinguished foreign representative, is here, and if there is no objection I desire that the House at this time take a recess for 15 minutes so that he may be presented to the membership and be heard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I reserve for the first time since I came here, I should like to know the ground on which we invite this foreign nobleman to address the House. As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the only claim that Count Luetzow has to fame is that he was the secretary of the Austrian Embassy in London once upon a time; that he keeps a stable in England; and that he fought a duel 20 years ago in which nobody was hurt-it was a sort of a scrub affair-and he is now a man of peace. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the count was never, to my knowledge, a member of any parliament, and is not a famous statesman. We must not be too lavish with our honors. I should be willing to have any illustrious parliamentarian or scientist, whether he came from Russia, from Germany, from Austria, from Bohemia, or from France, address this House, but he must be more than a titled man.

I think a great deal of my membership in Congress, and I believe that with all its faults this is the greatest parliament in the world, because it represents the greatest Republic in existence. And I shall always remember with pride the honor of being the first Socialist Representative in this body.

But, Mr. Speaker, about two months ago we had a very distinguished Bohemian, a leader of the Czech working people, a former member of the Austrian Reichsrath, a gentleman by the name of Soukop, in Washington. He was a famous parliamentarian, but he did not have the honor of addressing this House. He is not a count, nor does he bear any other

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BERGER. With pleasure. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did the gentleman suggest to any Member of this House that his friend be invited to address the House?

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I did not. there would be much show for a foreign Socialist to address this House, though he be a prominent member of a parliament.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman should not attempt, then, to put on his brother Members the charge of reflecting on his Socialist brother, when he himself did not attempt to bring the matter to their attention.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I shall remember this for the sture. And in consideration of the fact that the gentleman future. from Alabama is right in this particular observation, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the House will stand in recess for 15 minutes.

During the recess:

Count Luetzow was conducted to the Speaker's desk by Representative Sabath, of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, take pleasure in introducing to you Count Francis Luetzow, [Loud applause.

COUNT LUETZOW. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, allow me to express to you my sincere and heart-felt thanks for the great and exceptional honor which you have conferred on me.

I have been, if I may quote the words of an English poet-Of world-wide liberty a lifelong lover.

I am very proud that your great and free country should have granted me such an exceptional distinction, the greatest,

I understand, which can be given one who is not of your country. I am here on a short visit to my countrymen, who have in this great and prosperous commonwealth found a new and happy home.

My countrymen have always sympathized with the movement in favor of universal peace, that great and noble movement which has been so gloriously headed by the American people. I may be allowed to mention that King George of Podebrat, one of the greatest of our rulers, was the first European sovereign to attempt by means of treaty with neighboring powers to obtain universal peace in Europe. In later days, Komensky (Komensky) nius), the greatest writer of my country, endeavored, even in the troublous period of the Thirty Years' War, to obtain for Europe the peace so greatly needed.

In our own time, also, my countrymen have always opposed warfare and the bloated armaments of the present day. I may therefore hope that perhaps in a small way my visit to your great country may help this great and good cause. [Applause,]
I do not feel as if I had the right of trespassing longer upon your very valuable time, and beg, therefore, again to thank you most heartly and cordially for the great kindness and distinction which you have conferred upon me. [Prolonged applause.]

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 243, nays 33, answered "present" 14, not voting 102, as follows:

WORK OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT AND OTHER MATTERS (H. DOC. NO. 504).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The message is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

There is no branch of the Federal jurisdiction which calls more imperatively for immediate legislation than that which concerns the public domain, and especially the part of that domain which is in Alaska. The report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is transmitted herewith, and the report to him of the governor of Alaska, set out the public need in this regard with great force and in satisfactory detail.

The progress under the reclamation act has made clear the defects of its limitations, which should be remedied. The rules governing the acquisition of homesteads, of land that is not arid or semiarid, are not well adapted to the perfecting of title to land made arable by Government reclamation work. I concur with the Secretary of the Interior in his recommendation that, after entry is made upon land being reclaimed, actual occupation as a homestead of the same be not required until two years after entry, but that cultivation of the same shall be required, and that the present provision under which the land is to be paid for in 10 annual installments shall be so modified as to allow a patent to issue for the land at the end of five years' cultivation and three years' occupation, with a reservation of a Government lien for the amount of the unpaid purchase money. This leniency to the reclamation homesteader will relieve him from occupation at a time when the condition of the land makes it most burdensome and difficult, and at the end of five years will furnish him with a title upon which he can borrow money and continue the improvement of his holding.

I also concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior that all of our public domain should be classified and that each class should be disposed of or administered in the manner most appropriate to that particular class.

The chief change, however, which ought to be made, and which I have already recommended in previous messages and communications to Congress, is that by which Government coal land and phosphate and other mineral lands containing nonmetalliferous minerals shall be leased by the Government, restrictions as to size and time, resembling those which now obtain throughout the country between the owners in fee and the lessees who work the mines, and in leases like those which have been most successful in Australia, New Zealand, and Nova Scotia. The showing made by investigations into the successful working of the leasing system leaves no doubt as to its wisdom and practical utility. Requirements as to the working of the mine during the term may be so framed as to prevent any holding of large mining properties merely for speculation, while the royalties may be made sufficiently low not unduly to increase the cost of the coal mined and at the same time sufficient to furnish a reasonable income for the use of the public in the community where the mining goes on. In Alaska there is no reason why a substantial income should not thus be raised for such public works as may be deemed necessary or useful.

There is no difference between the reasons which call for the application of the leasing system to the coal lands still retained by the Government in the United States proper and those which exist in Alaska.

There are now in Alaska only two well-known high-grade coal fields of large extent-the Bering River coal field and the Matanuska coal field. The Bering River coal field, while it has varying qualities of coal from the bituminous to the anthracite, is very much lessened in value and usefulness by the grinding effect to which in geological ages past the coal measures have been subjected, so that the coal does not lie or can not be mined in large lumps. It must be taken out in almost a powdered condition. The same difficulty does not appear to the same extent in the Matanuska coal fields. The Bering River coal fields are only 25 miles from the coast. They are within easy distance of an existing railroad built by the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, and may also be reached through Controller Bay by the construction of other and competing railroads.

remarks in the Record on the pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in The railroad of the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, running from Cordova, could be made a coal-carrying road for the Bering River fields by the construction of a branch to those fields not exceeding 50 or 60 miles. It is practicable, and if the coal measures were to be opened up, doubtless the branch would be built. In the present condition of things there is no motive to build the road, because there is no title or opportunity to open and mine the coal.

The Matanuska coal fields are a longer distance from the coast. They are from 150 to 200 miles from the harbor of Seward, on Resurrection Bay. This is one of the finest harbors in the world, and a reservation has been made there for the use of the Navy of the United States. A road constructed from Seward to the Matanuska coal fields would form part of a system reaching from the coast into the heart of Alaska, and open the great interior valleys of the Yukon and the Tanana, which have agricultural as well as great mineral possibilities.

The Alaska Central road has been constructed some 71 miles of the distance from Seward north to the Matanuska coal fields, but the construction beyond this has been discouraged, first, by the fact that there has been no policy adopted of opening up the coal lands upon which investors could depend, and, second, because there seemed to be a lack of financial backing of those engaged in the enterprise. The Secretary of the Interior has ascertained that the bondholders, who are the real owners of the road, are willing to sell to the Government, and he recommends the purchase of the existing road, such reconstruction as may be necessary, its continuance to the Matanuska coal fields, and thence into the valleys of the Yukon and the Tanana. It would be a great trunk line, and would be an opening up of Alaska by Government capital.

I am not in favor of Government ownership where the same certainty and efficiency of service can be had by private enterprise, but I think the conditions presented in Alaska are of such a character as to warrant the Government, for the purpose of encouraging the development of that vast and remarkable territory, to build and own a trunk-line railroad, which it can lease on terms which may be varied and changed to meet the growing prosperity and development of the Territory.

There is nothing in the history of the United States which affords such just reason for criticism as the failure of the Federal Government to extend the benefit of its fostering care to the Territory of Alaska. There was a time, of course, when Alaska was regarded as so far removed into the Arctic Ocean as to make any development of it practically impossible, but for years the facts have been known to those who have been responsible for its government, and everyone who has given the subject the slightest consideration has been aware of the wonderful possibilities in its growth and development if only capital were invested there and a good government put over it. I think the United States owes it, therefore, to Alaska and to the people who have gone there to take an exceptional step and to build a railroad that shall open the treasures of Alaska to the Pacific and to the people who live along that ocean on our western coast. The construction of a railroad and ownership of the fee do not necessitate Government operation. Pursuant, however, to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, I suggest to Congress the wisdom of providing that the President may appoint a commission of competent persons, including two Army engineers, to examine and report upon the available routes for a railroad from Seward to the Matanuska coal fields and into the Tanana and Yukon Valleys, with an estimate of the value of the existing partially constructed railroad and of the cost of continuing the railroad to the proper points in the valleys named. This proposal is further justified by the need that the Navy of the United States has for a secure coaling base in the North Pacific. The commission ought to make a full report also as to the character of the coal fields at Matanuska and the problem of furnishing coal from that source for mercantile purposes after reserving for Government mining a sufficient quantity for the Navy.

I have already recommended to Congress the establishment of a form of commission government for Alaska. The Territory is too extended, its needs are too varied, and its distance from Washington to remote to enable Congress to keep up with its necessities in the matter of legislation of a local character.

The governor of Alaska in his report, which accompanies that of the Secretary of the Interior, points out certain laws that ought to be adopted, and emphasizes what I have said as to the immediate need for a government of much wider powers than now exists there, if it can be said to have any government at all.

I do not stop to dwell upon the lack of provision for the health of the inhabitants and the absence or inadequacy of laws, the mere statement of which shows their crying need. I only press upon Congress the imperative necessity for taking action not only to permit the beginning of the development of Alaska and the opening of her resources, but to provide laws which shall give to those who come under their jurisdiction decent protection.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER.

There is transmitted herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior setting out the work done under joint resolution approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the expenditure of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to be expended by the President for the purpose of protecting lands and property in the Imperial Valley and elsewhere along the Colorado River in Arizona. The money was expended and the protective works erected, but the disturbances in Mexico so delayed the work, and the floods in the Colorado River were so extensive that a part of the works have been carried away, and the need for further action and expenditure of money exists. I do not make a definite recommendation at present, for the reason that the plan to be adopted for the betterment of conditions near the mouth of the Colorado River proves to be so dependent on a free and full agreement between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States as to joint expenditure and joint use that it is unwise to move until we can obtain some agreement with that Government which will enable us to submit to Congress a larger plan, better adapted to the exigencies presented than the one adopted. It is essential that we act promptly, and through the State Department the matter is being pressed upon the attention of the Mexican Government. Meantime, a report of the engineer in charge, together with a subsequent report upon his work by a body of experts appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, together with an offer by the Southern Pacific Railroad to do the work at a certain price, with a guaranty for a year, and a comment upon this offer by Brig. Gen. Marshall, late Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and now consulting engineer of the Reclamation Service, are all herewith transmitted.

WATER-POWER SITES.

In previous communications to Congress I have pointed out two methods by which the water-power sites on nonnavigable streams may be controlled as between the State and the National Government. It has seemed wise that the control should be concentrated in one government or the other as the active participant in supervising its use by private enterprise. most cases where the Government owns what are called waterpower sites along nonnavigable streams, which are really riparian lots, without which the power in the stream can not be used, we have a situation as to ownership that may be described as follows: The Federal Government has land without which the power in the stream can not be transmuted into electricity and applied at a distance, while it is claimed that the State, under the law of waters as it prevails in many of our Western States, controls the use of the water and gives the beneficial use to the first and continuous user. In order to secure proper care by the State governments over these sources of power, it has been proposed that the Government shall deed the water-power site to the State on condition that the site and all the plant upon it shall revert to the Government unless the State parts with the site only by a lease, the terms of which it enforces and which requires a revaluation of the rental every 10 years, the full term to last not more than 50 years. A failure of the State to make and enforce such leases would enable the Government by an action of forfeiture to recover the power sites and all plants that might be erected thereon, and this power of penalizing those who succeed to the control would furnish a motive to compel the observance of the policy of the Government.

The Secretary of the Interior has suggested another method by which the water-power site shall be leased directly by the Government to those who exercise a public franchise under provisions imposing a rental for the water power to create a fund to be expended by the General Government for the improvement of the stream and the benefit of the local community where the power site is, and permitting the State to regulate the rates at which the converted power is sold. The latter method suggested by the Secretary is a more direct method for Federal control, and in view of the probable union and systematic organization and welding together of the power derived from water within a radius of three or four hundred miles, I think it better that the power of control should remain in the National Government than that it should be turned over to the States. Under such a system the Federal Government would have such direct supervision of the whole matter that any honest administration could easily prevent the abuses which a monopoly of absolute ownership in private persons or companies would make possible.

BUREAU OF NATIONAL PARKS.

I earnestly recommend the establishment of a bureau of national parks. Such legislation is essential to the proper management of those wondrous manifestations of nature, so startling and so beautiful that everyone recognizes the obligations of the Government to preserve them for the edification and recreation of the people. The Yellowstone Park, the Yosemite, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the Glacier National Park, and the Mount Rainier National Park and others furnish appropriate instances. In only one case have we made anything like adequate preparation for the use of a park by the public. case is the Yellowstone National Park. Every consideration of patriotism and the love of nature and of beauty and of art requires us to expend money enough to bring all these natural wonders within easy reach of our people. The first step in that direction is the establishment of a responsible bureau which shall take upon itself the burden of supervising the parks and of making recommendations as to the best method of improving their accessibility and usefulness.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON THE COST OF LIVING.

There has been a strong movement among economists, business men, and others interested in economic investigation to secure the appointment of an international commission to look into the cause for the high prices of the necessities of life. There is no doubt but that a commission could be appointed of such unprejudiced and impartial persons, experts in investigation of economic facts, that a great deal of very valuable light could be shed upon the reasons for the high prices that have so distressed the people of the world, and information given upon which action might be taken to reduce the cost of living. The very satisfactory report of the Railway Stock and Bonds Commission indicates how useful an investigation of this kind can be when undertaken by men who have had adequate experience in economic inquiries and a levelheadedness and judgment correctly to apply sound principles to the facts found.

For some years past the high and steadily increasing cost of living has been a matter of such grave public concern that I deem it of great public interest that an international conference be proposed at this time for the purpose of preparing plans, to be submitted to the various Governments, for an international inquiry into the high cost of living, its extent, causes, effects, and possible remedies. I therefore recommend that, to enable the President to invite foreign Governments to such a conference, to be held at Washington or elsewhere, the Congress provide an appropriation, not to exceed $20,000, to defray the expenses of preparation and of participation by the United States.

The numerous investigations on the subject, official or other, already made in various countries (such as Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, and the United States) have themselves strongly demonstrated the need of further study of world-wide scope. Those who have conducted these investigations have found that the phenomenon of rising prices is almost if not quite general throughout the world; but they are baffled in the attempt to trace the causes by the impossibility of making any accurate international comparisons. This is because, in spite of the number of investigations already made, we are still without adequate data and because as yet no two countries estimate their price levels on the same basis or by the same methods.

As already indicated, the preliminary conference itself would entail a comparatively small expense, and most of the subsequent investigations for which it would prepare the way could be carried out by existing bureaus in this and other Governments as part of their regular work and would require little, if any, additional appropriations for such bureaus.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS,

The extraordinary growth of industry in the past two decades and its revolutionary changes have raised new and vital questions as to the relations between employers and wage earners which have become matters of pressing public concern. These questions have been somewhat obscured by the profound changes in the relations between competing producers and producers as a class and consumers—in other words, by the changes which, among other results, have given rise to what is commonly called the trust problem. The large-scale production characteristic of modern industry, however, involves the one set of relations no less than the other. Any interruption to the normal and peaceful relations between employer and wage earner involves public discomfort and in many cases public disaster. Such interruptions become, therefore, quite as much a matter of public concern as restraint of trade or monopoly.

Industrial relations concern the public for a double reason. We are directly interested in the maintenance of peaceful and stable industrial conditions for the sake of our own comfort and well-being; but society is equally interested, in its sovereign civic capacity, in seeing that our institutions are effectively maintaining justice and fair dealing between any classes of citizens whose economic interests may seem to clash. Railway strikes on such a scale as has recently been witnessed in France and in England, a strike of coal-mine workers such as we have more than once witnessed in this country, and such a wholesale relinquishing of a public service as that of the street cleaners recently in New York, illustrate the serious danger to public well-being and the inadequacy of the existing social machinery either to prevent such occurrences or to adjust them on any equitable and permanent basis after they have arisen.

In spite of the frequency with which we are exposed to these dangers and in spite of the absence of provision for dealing with them, we continue to assume with easy-going confidence that in each new case, somehow or other, the parties to the dispute will find some solution which will be agreeable to themselves and consistent with the public interest. grave objections to strikes and lockouts, however necessary they may be in extreme cases; and we are ready to criticize the more extreme phases of the industrial conflict such as boycotts and blacklists; but we leave the situation such that industrial disputes lead inevitably to a state of industrial war in which these are the only weapons left to the two combatants. No more clumsy or expensive method of determining the rate of wages and the hours and conditions of labor could well be devised. The successful operation of the Erdman Act as between interstate railroads and their employees shows how much good can be done by proper legislation.

At the moment when the discomforts and dangers incident to industrial strife are actually felt by the public there is usually an outcry for the establishment of some tribunal for the immediate settlement of the particular dispute. But what is needed is some system, devised by patient and deliberate study in advance, that will meet these constantly occurring and clearly foreseeable emergencies—not a makeshift to tide over an existing crisis. Not during the rainstorm but in fair weather should the leaking roof be examined and repaired.

The magnitude and complexity of modern industrial disputes have put upon some of our statutes and our present mechanism for adjusting such differences—where we can be said to have any mechanism at all—a strain they were never intended to bear and for which they are unsuited. What is urgently needed to-day is a reexamination of our laws bearing upon the relations of employer and employee, and a careful and discriminating scrutiny of the various plans which are being tried in several of our own States and in other countries. This would seem to be the first natural step in bringing about an adjustment of these relations better suited to the newer conditions of industry.

Numerous special investigations, official and unofficial, have revealed conditions in more than one industry which have immediately been recognized on all sides as entirely out of harmony with accepted American standards. It is probable that to a great extent the remedies for these conditions, so far as the remedies involve legislation, lie in the field of State action; but such a comprehensive inquiry as is necessary to furnish a basis for intelligent action must be undertaken on national initiative and must be nation-wide in its scope. In view of the results that have followed the activities of the Federal Government in education, in agriculture, and in other fields which do not lie primarily within the field of Federal legislation, there can be no serious argument against the propriety or the wisdom of an inquiry by the Federal Government into the general conditions of labor in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that some of the remedies will lie with the separate States, or even entirely outside the sphere of governmental activity, in the hands of private individuals and of voluntary agencies. One legitimate object of such an official investigation and report is to enlighten and inform public opinion, which of itself will often induce or compel the reform of unjust conditions or the abatement of unreasonable demands.

The special investigations that have been made of recent industrial conditions, whether private or official, have been fragmentary, incomplete, and at best only partially representative or typical. Their lessons, nevertheless, are important, and until something comprehensive and adequate is available they serve a useful purpose, and they will necessarily continue to be made. But unquestionably the time is now ripe for a searching inquiry into the subject of industrial relations which shall be official, authoritative, balanced, and well rounded, such as only the Federal Government can successfully undertake. The present widespread interest in the subject makes this an opportune time for an investigation, which in any event can not long be postponed. It should be nonpartisan, comprehensive, thorough, patient, and courageous.

There is already available much information on certain aspects of the subject in the reports of the Federal and State Bureaus of Labor and in other official and unofficial publications. One essential part of the proposed inquiry would naturally be to assemble, digest, and interpret this information so far as it bears upon our present industrial conditions. In addition to this, the commission should inquire into the general conditions of labor in our principal industries, into the existing relations between employers and employees in those industries, into the various methods which have been tried for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers and for avoiding or adjusting trade disputes, and into the scope, methods, and resources of Federal and State Bureaus of Labor and the methods by which they might more adequately meet the responsibilities which, through the work of the commission above recommended, would be more clearly brought to light and MISBRANDING IMPORTED GOODS.

My attention has been called to the injustice which is done in this country by the sale of articles in the trade purporting to be made in Ireland when they are not so made, and it is suggested that the justice of the enactment of a law which, so far as the jurisdiction of the Federal Government can go, would prevent a continuance of this misrepresentation to the public and fraud upon those who are entitled to use the statement in the sale of their goods. I think it to be greatly in the interest of fair dealing, which ought always to be encouraged by law, for Congress to enact a law making it a misdementor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to use the mails or to put into interstate commerce any articles of merchandise which bear upon their face a statement that they have been manufactured in some particular country when the fact is otherwise.

BUILDING FOR PUBLIC ARCHIVES.

I can not close this message without inviting the attention of Congress again to the necessity for the erection of a building to contain the public archives. The unsatisfactory distribution of records, the lack of any proper index or guide to their contents, is well known to those familiar with the needs of the Government in this Capital. The land has been purchased and nothing remains now but the erection of a proper building. I transmit a letter written by Prof. J. Franklin Jameson, director of the department of historical research of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, in which he speaks upon this subject as a member of a committee appointed by the executive council of the American Historical Association to bring the matter to the attention of the President and Congress.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar; and, pending that, I wish to have an agreement as to the general debate on the bill H. R. 19115, known as the omnibus bill. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse] how much time he desires on that side for general debate.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I have had no requests for any time. I suggest 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. SIMS. Unless the debate is concluded sooner.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Then, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on House bill 19115 be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse] and one-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate on the omnibus claims bill be limited to one hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse]. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. Shackle-FORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Under the rule, the Committee on War Claims has priority.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Committee on War Claims has priority over the Committee on Claims, but the other bills are called in their regular order reported from the Pension Committee and War Claims. There is one bill ahead, from the Committee on the Public Lands. That has always been the ruling, otherwise they never would be called.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

JOHN L. BAIRD.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8853) for the relief of John L. Baird.

A bill (II. R. 8853) for the relief of John L. Baird.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to John L. Baird for the lands covered by the Keene Stone Placer, mineral survey No. 1947, in Lawrence County, S. Dak., upon the transfer by the said John L. Baird to the United States of the east half of the southeast quarter and lot No. 1, in section 4, and lot No. 4, in section 3, all in township 1 south, range 1 east of Black Hills meridian, containing 155.96 acres, situate in the Black Hills National Forest: Provided, That patent shall not issue or the exchange be made until the same is approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 3, page 2, after the word "Agriculture," add: "Provided further, That the lands reconveyed shall thereby become a part of the Harney National Forest."

Mr. Chairman, I think a very brief statement will be all that is necessary in this case. The bill provides for the exchange of lands whereby one John L. Baird deeds 156 acres in the Harney National Forest to the Government and receives from the Government in lieu thereof a tract of 91 acres. The fact is that Mr. Baird has for years supposed himself the owner of both tracts, he having bought the tract which he now proposes to surrender from the original entryman under patent, and having, I understand, purchased the rights of the stone placer locator in the other case.

After the purchase was made he discovered that the stone placer location was faulty and he was unable to secure title. The tract he proposes to surrender contains 156 acres and the tract he proposes to acquire title to contains 91 acres. The Secretary of Agriculture informs us that the larger tract is the better adapted for forest purposes, one-half of it being forested and the other being suitable for that purpose. It contains 150.000 feet board measure of pine timber. The tract the Gov-ernment proposes to surrender for this larger tract contains only about 10,000 feet board measure of scattering pine and spruce, but no other timber, and is mostly open land-land which Mr. Baird has broken up and sown to timothy.

Mr. Baird has stock in the vicinity, and bought both tracts to use for grazing purposes, but as he can not acquire title to the stone placer location, and that is more valuable for his uses, he is willing to surrender the other to the Agricultural Department, which is glad to make the exchange and take the larger tract, more valuable to them, and surrender the small tract, which is more valuable to the ranchman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. How far apart are these

Mr. MONDELL. I should say, as the crow flies, between 4 and 5 miles, but I am not entirely certain as to the distance.
Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Both in the same county?

Mr. MONDELL. They are both in the same locality, 4 or 5 miles apart. The stone placer is on the head of what is known as Cold Creek. The gentleman, I have no doubt, has been there and may know the little piece of meadow land. The other tract lies a little to the south and west, up in the timber region, I believe.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the gentleman know whether the tract proposed to be confirmed in Mr. Baird is in any way valuable for mineral purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. No; there never was any claim of that. has been located as a stone placer. Nobody imagines that there is any mineral there. The agricultural part of it is broken up and sown to timothy. There are the remains of an old house there, now largely fallen down, I think, and perhaps a corral and some sheds.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is it the land upon which the springs known as Cold Springs are situated?

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is that the spring is above the tract, but the little stream runs through it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is the gentleman positive of the fact that the spring is above this and not located on the

Mr. MONDELL. There are several springs there, and it may be that the spring or springs are on this tract. My recollection is they are above. I am not certain.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Of course the gentleman will realize that springs pass to the owner of the fee. These Cold Springs are the head of the water supply that is quite important in that section of the country. I would think that it would be bad policy to deed, under a stone and timber act or any other law, these springs known as Cold Springs.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, I think, is in error in the proposition that the title to water necessarily goes with the land, but in any event, as the gentleman knows, Cold Spring Creek only runs about 4 or 5 miles and then dries up, except in the time of high water.

When the water is high Cold Spring Creek runs for a long distance, while during the summer season the creek runs only a short distance. I will say to the gentleman that the Department of Agriculture has gone all over the matter, and it was largely on their suggestion that the proposed change was made.

Mr. MANN. I think Cold Spring Creek is on the land that we are to get.

Mr. MONDELL. No; Cold Spring Creek runs through the land we cede.

Mr. MANN. It is on the Keene stone placer claim.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; it is on the Keene stone placer, and that is the tract that Mr. Baird is to receive. There are goodsized springs on the land that Mr. Baird cedes, but I do not suppose, altogether, they run as much water as Cold Spring Creek does. However, it is a very well-watered tract.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I was not aware the matter was coming up until a short time ago, as I was coming into the Hall.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows, further, that, as a matter of fact, this tract could be entered under the homestead law, because the Secretary of Agriculture has declared stead law, because the Secretary of Agriculture has declared they have no public need for it as an administrative site, and it could be entered under the homestead law and thus the Government receive nothing, whereas we are receiving in exchange for it 160 acres of land, 50 per cent at least of which is well timbered with the kind of pine that there is in that country. The balance of it is very good ground.

Mr. MANN. The department very strongly recommends it. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I notice from the reading of the bill that there seems to be a provision that it is made subject to the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly. We do not want the exchange made unless it is satisfactory.

Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to be heard, I hope that the bill may be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and that the committee amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will be first taken on the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "agriculture" add the following: "Provided further, That the lands reconveyed shall thereby become a part of the Harney National Forest."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriations for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts of March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it was agreed in the House that general debate upon this bill be limited to one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse]. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not use the time allotted to me. I do not think it will be necessary, unless it is to answer questions that may be asked. This bill contains only findings of the Court of Claims-the determination of the Court of Claims on matters submitted to it. The claims are largely for commissary stores and supplies. No other class of claims is in the bill except those that are known as soldiers' claims. The amount carried in the bill is $1,566,311.06. A typographical error in the report makes the bill carry $1,551,583.56, but that The amount carried, classified, are for officers is a mistake. and soldiers, $59,576.93; for churches, lodges, colleges, and so forth, $456,386.21; for private claims—that is, individual claims—stores, and supplies, $1,035,560.42. There are carried in this bill 1,058 claims, and the amount stated is the amount that the court finds due. I have personally gone over almost every one of these claims; did so during the extra session and since that time. The first finding of the court in all claims is that the claimant was loyal; second, that the property was taken and used by the military forces of the United States, and the value of it; and, third, that it has not been paid for.

Usually, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on War Claims of the House does not place in the bill any claims sent to the Court of Claims by the Senate, but in the Sixty-first Congress there was an omnibus bill passed by the House and also one by the Senate. The war claims part of the Senate bill was practically the same as the House bill. Therefore many Senate findings are included in the present bill. When I say Senate findings I mean those findings on bills referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate's action. We have included others upon request of Members of the House, but there are some Senate findings, not a great many of them, I think, that have not been The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse], the ranking minority member of the committee, has also given these findings, each and every one of them, his personal examination and investigation. We have not placed any claims in this bill the findings of which are not as I have attempted to state. We have excluded all claims where property was de-stroyed or burned, and have tried to report only such claims as are strictly within the rules adopted for an omnibus war-claims bill. Now, the House rule—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means the committee rule.
Mr. SIMS. Yes; I mean the committee—has been, with the exception of the Sixty-first Congress, for many years with reference to laches as follows:

Rule II, fifth clause: No claim growing out of the Civil War shall be considered unless the same shall, before January 1, 1900, have been presented for payment to some court or commission, Army board, or department of the Government, or to Congress.

For 10 years the Committee on War Claims acted under that rule and refused to send to the Court of Claims any claim barred by that rule, but during the last Congress—the Sixty-first—the Committee on War Claims, upon the motion and urgent request of the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. Law, struck out that provision. But very few claims, even then, were referred to the Court of Claims by the House committee, to which that rule, if it had not been so amended, would have applied. The pres-ent Committee on War Claims has adopted the rule which I have just read, or restored clause 5 of Rule II. Now, this rule is to prevent stale claims from being referred to the court. It is to prevent persons being put to the expense of lawsuits or of a trial or of the employment of attorneys and incurring the expenses of ascertaining the facts before the court. The Senate has not either adopted such a rule or lived up to it, because it has continued to refer claims to the court without any reference to time; in other words, it has referred them since 1900. Now, we have included such claims as that in this bill impossible to sustain by proof an ordinary claim sent to the

for this reason: We would not have sent them to the court ourselves, but after they have been sent to the court and the claimants have been put to the trouble and the expense of litigation to ascertain the facts to be reported, and when the court finds that the claimant was loyal, that the property was taken from him and used by the Government, and the value of it, we have included such findings in this bill.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, in sending stale claims to the Court of Claims, but I believe the committee and the House should act on that matter themselves. But after send-ing private claimants or other claimants to the court, and they are put to the trouble and expense of following up the case, and if it is found that the Government of the United States does owe the claimant, and has owed him for 40 or 50 years, then for us to refuse to appropriate after having sent the claim there to be considered by a court of our own creation, it seems to me, is unjustifiable and unwarrantable; therefore some claims of that kind are in this bill. Now, there are in this bill the claims that were in it and acted on by the House in the Sixty-first Congress and such claims as have been certified to the House since that time by the Court of Claims. I do not care to make any extended remarks or any further explanation unless it is desired, and I will reserve the rest of my time and yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question or two.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. AUSTIN. Practically all the items in this bill were carried in a similar bill in the Sixty-first Congress, and the only additional war claims added are those which have been certified since then by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SIMS. That is correct, substantially.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, in reference to the limitation you propose to carry in this bill, I wish to know if there is a limitation upon the filing or prosecuting before the Court of Claims of French spoliation claims.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the French spoliation claims do not come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on War Claims, and therefore I have given absolutely no consideration to that matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that, but I wish to know if there is a limitation at present in the law on filing French spoliation claims.

Mr. SIMS. You mean on bringing them to the Court of Claims, or sending them to the Court of Claims?

Yes. Mr. AUSTIN.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have not investigated that. I could not answer that correctly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact, though, that in the last Congress we were confronted by the payment of the French spoliation claims that were certified by the Court of Claims or certified to Congress, and was not that the cause of the disagreement between the two Houses of Congress?

Mr. SIMS. That no doubt has largely to do with it. The gentleman was present and heard the debate at the time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it right and just to fix a limitation on Mr. AUSTIN. Is it right and just to fix a limitation on claims growing out of the Civil War, presented by people who were loyal to the Union, when you do not have a limitation for the filing of French spoliation claims originating over 100 years ago? Should there be a discrimination, and if there is a discrimination, should that discrimination not be in favor of those who have claims growing out of the Civil War, which was only 40 or 50 years ago?

Mr. SIMS. The French spoliation claimants were only allowed two years in which to file their claims.

Mr. AUSTIN. You say they were allowed two years? Mr. SIMS. I have not the act by me. That was the limitation put upon them according to my recollection.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will allow me, you can not file French spoliation claims for a number of years past. When the act was passed those claims were filed; they had not been adjudicated. We occasionally get a report from the Committee on Claims. I think there is no authority for filing a new claim there at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Were the people who were interested in the French spoliation claims given a notice?

Mr. MANN. The act itself provided that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why not put a notice in this bill and give those who failed to file claims during the Civil War two years' notice?

Mr. MANN. They have had a great deal more time than

Court of Claims at this day and time. I have, through the action of the committee, had a number of them sent there, and the claimants have been unable to establish their claims by proof, because of the death of witnesses. And it is now almost useless, unless you have documentary proof, to send the ordinary claim to the Court of Claims, because when it gets there it has to be tried de novo. The proof in support of the claim must be presented, and it must be proof such as is admissible and competent, and it is almost a charity to a person having a claim at this late day to refuse to send it to the Court of

The day for proving such claims is about over. Fifty years have passed since 1862; 47 years have passed since 1865, and to undertake to prove a fact as old as that by living witnesses is almost impossible. And nearly all claims have been proven. There is, as far as I am able to ascertain, not more than $1,000,000 yet involved in claims pending before the House and Senate committees or in the Court of Claims that have not yet been adjudicated. I do not think it will take more than $1,000,000 over what is carried in this bill to pay all this kind of claims which it is possible to prove, and the sending of claims to the Court of Claims just simply to be rejected, as they are in most cases now, is worth nothing to the parties who are entitled to reimbursement. Besides the people who suffered the loss at the time have nearly all passed over the river and are resting under the shade of the trees, as we all hope and believe.

Then you must prove loyalty in addition to the loss and in addition to the value of the property taken. And I think it is sound policy for this House and for the other body, instead of having the court report on laches, as it must under the law, to determine that fact for itself and not send it there to put people to the trouble of having to conduct a lawsuit in that court, as they will fail nine times out of ten to get anything; and when they do get anything they have to pay attorneys from one-third to one-half of it and then run the gantlet of an appropriation afterwards.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Is it proposed in this bill to change the existing law in any way?

Mr. SIMS. Not a particle. Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. What was the discussion about? Mr. SIMS. As to the committee's rule applicable to stale claims. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powers].

[Mr. POWERS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of the gentleman having this bill in charge my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], and if this Congress could bind all of its successors and give every loyal claimant in the United States an opportunity to come before the Committee on War Claims and present their cases and have a day in court that proposition would be entirely satis-But I do not agree to a proposition that the Government of the United States shall ever bar the prosecution of a just claim or practically place itself in the attitude of pleading a statute of limitations to the prosecution of a claim.

These French spoliation claims, affecting New England, are being paid more than 110 years after the date of origin, and if the statement made on the floor of the House as to when their presentation was barred—that is, 20 years ago—is correct, then those claimants had 90 years after the Government became liable in which to present their claims. Now, take the procedure in the last Congress, the Sixty-first Congress. Why, during that Congress, in cases where we introduced war claims seeking to pay claimants, or to give claimants an opportunity under the laws created by Congress to go into a court and prosecute what they believed to be just claims against the Government, the Committee on War Claims had a rule that out of the bills presented they would permit each Member of Congress having bills to refer not to exceed five of these claims to the Court of Claims during a session of Congress. I had at least 50 claims from my constituents, men of good standing, men whom I believed were entitled to a day in court to submit their proof, and out of the 50 claims I was given an opportunity to select only 5 and send those 5 to the Court of Claims.

Now, if claimants are passing away and witnesses are dying, we must remember that some of the responsibility rests with I am not sure about the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Congress. It does not entirely rest with the claimants themselves, because from time to time, through their representatives on the floor of this House, they have been knocking and clamoring and petitioning for an opportunity to get into a court created by Congress to pass upon and determine upon the justness of their claims. And now, having pursued for a number of years a certain policy, either by Congress or by one of its committees, the committee having absolute jurisdiction over this matter determines that we will refer to the Court of Claims only a very limited number of these cases. That committee now comes in with this bill, after inflicting upon claimants this slow and unfair method of reaching that court, which meant a denial in hundreds of cases, and says thereby that "We are going to stop now; we are going to prevent you," without a day's notice, from even appealing to us to give the claimants an opportunity under a law created by Congress to test a case before the Court of Claims

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman understand that the rule of the committee applies to any claim that was presented to Congress prior to the date named in it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, it will prevent, in my judgment, many claimants from having an opportunity to appear in court and put the United States on trial as to whether or not they have a just claim against the Government. Mr. MANN. Yes; but if the claimant had a claim for 40 years and made no presentation of the claim to any officer or Member of Congress, or to Congress itself, does not the gentleman think that there ought to be some time at which it would be ended?

Mr. AUSTIN. If any man at any time has an honest claim, and can establish the validity of that claim, a great Government like ours, which will not permit its private citizens to plead the statute of limitations, ought not to take advantage of such a limitation with respect to one of its citizens.

Mr. SIMS. Will my colleague allow me to suggest a matter to him? For 10 years prior to the last Congress this rule was enforced by the committee of which the gentleman's distinguished predecessor, Judge Gibson, was a member. During all that time the members of the committee notified claimants that they could not favorably consider claims which had not been presented before January 1, 1900. That rule prevented many persons who might have been able to prove their claims from presenting them who can not do so now. To open up to the general public now, after we have shut them out for 10 years, would be a great injustice to those who were deprived of that benefit. Remember, the Committee on War Claims was of the gentleman's party. There is no politics in this matter, and ought not to be, and I think the committee took a wise view of it. There ought to be an end some time to the presentation of these claims. To open this up again, according to the gentleman's idea, to hundreds of claimants, when others who were shut out for 10 years can not now establish their claims, seems to me not fair.

Mr. AUSTIN. The French spoliation claims are over 100 years old, and if it was right to permit those claimants to prosecute their claims and present them 90 years after the liability was incurred, why is it not absolutely fair to permit those who suffered losses during the Civil War to present their claims for 90 years? Mr. SIMS.

Congress only allowed them 2 years.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Committee on War Claims in any previous Congress shut off claimants who had just claims against this Government, that does not relieve the gentleman or myself from doing the fair thing in opening up this question and permitting them to come here now and in the future.

Mr. SIMS. This rule of the committee is not law, but I am giving you the reasons for the rule. The House applies the rule and the Senate does not.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this omnibus claims bill will not only pass the House, as it is very evident it will, but that it may succeed in becoming a law. I am not at all confident that that will be done, however.

In the Sixty-first Congress I had to make some little opposition to the final passage of the omnibus claims bill—Mr. AUSTIN. We have a distinct recollection of that.

Mr. MANN (continuing). After I had given full warning to the gentlemen who were interested as to what my course would In the Sixtieth Congress the same procedure happened. In the Fifty-ninth Congress the same procedure was followed.

My attention was called a few years ago, the first time I took any active interest in reference to claims, to an omnibus claims bill which had passed this House, to which there were a great many amendments inserted by the Senate. My attention was called to it by some gentlemen connected with the Senate of the United States. At that time I examined some of the amendments which had been sent to this House for concurrence. shall not express my real sentiments concerning those amendments, because the language would not be parliamentary. this bill can pass this House, where we have a committee known as the War Claims Committee, having jurisdiction over claims arising out of the Civil War, and it can go to the co-ordinate branch of the legislative body and receive consideration there in the spirit in which it is sent from here, there is no reason why the bill should not become a law. But in the Senate there is one Committee on Claims having jurisdiction both of war claims and other claims, and it is quite natural that in that body they should insert amendments providing for claims of all classes. If that bill is sent to conference, the House conferees, being appointed from the Committee on War Claims, do not know and can not know the merits of those claims which are not war claims. I think that if the Senate wishes to treat the House with that degree of courtesy which I am sure we would extend to the Senate, they will endeavor to confine their amendments in this bill to items over which the War Claims Committee in the House would have had jurisdiction.

If they wish to send to this body another omnibus claims bill relating to other claims, I am sure the Claims Committee of the House will give it fair and full consideration.

I never have expressed an opinion in the House, and do not intended to now, as to the merits of the French spoliation

If it were an original proposition I should be opposed to paying them. But I am not sure whether, after Congress provided for their adjudication and has already provided for the payment of a large number of those claims, we ought to pay the balance. But, personally, I am quite sure that the French spoliation claims ought not to be mixed up in conference with Civil War claims coming out of this committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the minute which remains to me, I wish to compliment the gentlemen who are on this War Claims Committee. It fell to my lot, in a way at least, to name the minority members of the committee, and, believing that these claims ought to be disposed of, I named minority members of that committee in whom I had complete confidence, and said to them, and especially to the ranking minority member of the committee, that if he and they would assure me that they would examine these claims themselves, form an opinion in regard to them, as far as I was concerned, I would accept their opinion, whether it was in accord with my own or not. Now I stand with the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to some of the limitations that the committee has put upon this bill. I felt that in place of one million and a half dollars this bill should have been quite a little larger, but we hewed very close to the line. We cut out every claim against which a single objection could be made. do not believe that there is a claim in this bill that a single Member of this House can object to after he has examined that Mr. MANN. There is one claim in the bill that I have fought for years, but I will abide by the judgment of the committee. Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois fights everything.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Take the matter of loyalty, for instance; there were a lot of findings, not of disloyalty, not of loyalty, but of neutrality. It frequently happened, particularly in Louisiana, that during the war people of French descent, or French subjects, would leave and return after the war. They were not disloyal to the Union; they were not loyal to the Union according to the findings of the court. We cut all of those out. There was another class of claims that appealed to me very strongly. They were churches and Masonic temples, Odd Fellows lodges, and such institutions. Now, where the Government occupied these buildings, we paid rent. Where these buildings were destroyed, as many of them were, we are not paying for the value of the buildings. I have in mind a Masonic temple in the State of Tennessee, I believe in the district of the chairman of the committee [Mr. Sims]. It was taken possession of by the Union forces. It was used by them for a smallpox hospital. When the Army moved on there was a feeling that it was dangerous, and so they wantonly or purposely set fire to this magnificent temple and burned it in order to prevent the spread of smallpox. It seemed to me that that ought to go in the bill, but we have considered the matter carefully and decided not to put it in.

The same thing can be stated in regard to some churches. Some of them were used—I remember one according to the findings, from the district of the ranking member of the committee, Mr. GORDON LEE. The court found that the church was destroyed; it was used as a smallpox hospital, and that was left out. Another thing, where they tore down the church or school or city hall or whatever it might be, and used the material to build breastworks or fortifications or bridges, or any other purpose for which they might be used, the committee in that case thought that we ought not to pay the value of the church or the building, but simply the value of the material that was secured.

If they tore down a building, we paid for the value of the brick the same price we would have paid if we had bought them at a brickyard. If gentlemen will examine these claims they will find that the Court of Claims has been after them with a pruning knife. I think about 8 or 10 per cent of the amount of the claim has been paid. Many of them are cut down very low. I do not believe that there is a dollar in this bill that the Government does not honestly owe to the claimant.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. What has been the rule in this House in paying the very class of claims that have been omitted from

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Oh, they have sometimes gone through as special bills. I do not know what the rule was

Mr. AUSTIN. Have they ever been paid in an omnibus bill? Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I regret to say that I have not been a Member of this House since an omnibus bill has been It is six or seven years since one was passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. All of these claims that have been eliminated have been passed on by the Court of Claims, and that court has found that they were just claims against the Government.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. There is a question as to whether they were just claims.

Mr. AUSTIN. The court so found.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Oh, the court does not find whether it is a just claim or not. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: We have not killed these bills. These bills are still before the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In the case which the gentleman instanced of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Lee], for instance, where a church was taken possession of and used and then destroyed, and the Court of Claims has found the amount, does not the gentleman believe that when this bill passes the House and goes to the other end of the Capitol that item will be put upon the bill?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. O Mr. Chairman, ? can not answer for what will be done at the other end of the Capitol.

I wish I could.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not the gentleman's experience that that sort of thing always does occur?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. A great many bills have been put on at the other end of the Capitol, but the gentl-man must remember-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just one more question. Does not the gentleman remember that the Congress did pass a bill appropriating over $400,000 to pay the Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands for property destroyed-not used, but destroyed-by the troops?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I remember very well. I thought it ought to be paid. I believe these ought to be paid, and I hope they will be paid.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I thought so and I voted for that bill, but does not the gentleman believe that we ought to be as eager to take care of church properties in our own country as we are to take care of church properties in the far-off Philippine Islands?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I do; but the gentleman must realize that we have got to cut down something. If we can not do it all, let us do as much as we can. There are over 1,000 claims in this bill. Let us not kill them by putting on something that may be doubtful.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] a moment ago, as to whether or not it has been the policy of Congress to pay the class of claims not included in this bill, I do not think you will find a precedent where the Government has ever undertaken to pay for property that was not taken and used, but, on the contrary, was destroyed during the Civil War.

The line has been drawn on property that was destroyed as an incident of war, and the furthest extent to which Congress has gone in that class of cases is the case cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse] where the Government had torn down a building and used the material, and then simply allowed for value of the material and not for the value of the property as a whole. The gentleman from Tennessee was inquiring as to the property not included in this bill, and I think that he will find that has been the general rule. The Government has never undertaken the policy of paying for property which was incidentally destroyed in the war, even if the claimants were loyal subjects.

Mr. AUSTIN. What I was seeking to know was whether in the case of Masonic temples or Odd Fellows' halls or church property the same rule applied?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The same rule applies to churches, Odd Fellows' halls, and Masonic temples, the only difference being this, that the courts have held that you can not impute disloyalty to these corporate organizations. Hence the question of loyalty and disloyalty does not arise, notwithstanding the fact that the officers and directors and managers of these institutions might have been disloyal. That is the only distinction between that class of cases and the cases of individuals.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just one moment in answer to the gentleman from Arkansas with reference to the statement that Congress had never paid for property that was destroyed or

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I did not state that; I did not make that statement; I said it had not been the policy of Congress to pay for property destroyed during the Civil War.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let me show you it has. The Fifty-second Congress paid to William and Mary College, Virginia, $64,000 to reimburse said college for the destruction of its buildings and other property destroyed without authority by soldiers of the United States Army during the Civil War, and there are numbers of cases-

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. That is a special case.

There was the Methodist Publishing Co., of Mr. AUSTIN. Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; the Methodist Publishing Co. Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Those are special cases. I am speaking about an omnibus bill and the general policy of the Government in regard to property destroyed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Here is one case to which I call the attention of the gentleman. Under an act of the Forty-fifth Congress we donated 46,080 acres of public land to the University of Alabama, to be applied to the erection of suitable buildings for said university which was destroyed by fire on April 4, 1865, during the military operations at Tuscaloosa, and the record is absolutely full of cases of that character, and it does seem to me that instead of loading the bill down you gentlemen would have vastly benefited it and would have in it just as meritorious cases as you have got in the present bill if you had included cases of that character.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I will state to the gentleman that we have not killed or reported adversely any of those bills. It is the policy of the committee to take them up later-that is, those falling without the line laid down in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Certainly.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman says it is the policy of the committee to take up later these bills during the present session of Congress.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. During the present session. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then what is the objection, if this Congress is to take care of them, to incorporating them in this

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The objection, of course, is apparent; we want to get this bill passed. If we load this bill too heavily we will not be able to get the bill through.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. One more question. Wherein are the equities in these particular cases superior to the equities in the class of cases I mentioned?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. There is a difference. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, what time have I remaining? Mr. SIMS. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WITHERSPOON). Fifteen minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will state that there is but two or three small items in this bill that will be beneficial to the people of my district, in fact the claim I was more interested in has been excluded from this bill by the committee, therefore I can give my support to this measure without being accused of having any particular personal motive for favoring its passage. It seems to me that upon a broader ground I can heartily vote for this measure. But recently this House has passed a bill, which was reported from a committee of which I am a member, which carried many millions of dollars for the benefit of soldiers who fought upon one side during the Civil War. I think that measure was just; in fact, I could vote in no other manner upon that bill than in support thereof. But from the very circumstances of the case, we must see that the benefits of that bill were largely for the northern section of this country. Now, the same circumstance shows that this bill carries more for the people south of the so-called Mason and Dixon line than it does for those upon the north side thereof. The reason of that is because the South north side thereof. was the seat of the Civil War, and it is but natural that more claims should come from that section than from the northern section. We have now an opportunity to do for these southern people, in a small degree only, that which we have heretofore done for the northern people, and for that reason I will heartily support the bill and hope that it will pass this House. [Applause.

Mr. SIMS. Only a word, and I will ask for the reading of the bill. I want to say to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that in cases referred heretofore under the Tucker Act the facts were reported by the court without the court expressing any opinion as to what those facts established. Under the law, as it has now been amended by the judiciary act, the court will report conclusions of law. Therefore, the fact that the court did report that a church was burned, or it was of certain value, must not be understood as an adjudication of the court that the Government is liable for that amount or under any obligation to pay the claim.

Mr. AUSTIN. The court would go further and state whether the Government had actually used it?

Mr. SIMS. It states that fact, but the court does not say, as the gentleman did, that it was a just debt against the Govern-All the claims here were referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act prior to the passage of the judiciary act. The court has reported no conclusions of law or its opinion, except as to the identical reference—that is, the church was used to the value of so much-but because it is a court reference under the Tucker Act does not mean that the court suggests that Congress pay the finding.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that the court examines simply the witnesses, takes the proof, and comes to a finding to this effect: This man was loyal; this man's property was dam-

Mr. SIMS. Or absolutely under the Tucker Act—
Mr. AUSTIN (continuing). And used by the Government, and the value of this property was so and so?
Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is sufficient for an honest man.
Mr. SIMS. But the honest man, after all, must determine whether Congress ought to appropriate or not.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Richard Garner, administrator of Thomas Williams, deceased, of Colbert County, $425.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, there is a clerical error in that paragraph. The amount should be $295, and I move to amend by striking out "four hundred and twenty-five" and inserting two hundred and ninety-five.'

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 15, amend by striking out the words "four hundred and twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred and ninety-five"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

To Joseph M. Clark, of San Jose County, $184.12.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, in the bill it says, "Joseph M. Clark, of San Jose County," when it ought to be "Santa Clara County." Therefore, I move to amend by striking out the words "San Jose" and inserting the words "Santa Clara."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows

Page 12, line 20, strike out the words "San Jose" and insert the ords "Santa Clara."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry from the gentleman who has charge of this bill for information. Is there any item anywhere in the bill covering attorney's fees in the adjudication or adjustment of these claims before the Court of Claims or anywhere else?

Mr. SIMS. No, Mr. Chairman; there is no item in here for

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. None at all?

Mr. SIMS. These are the amounts found due the claimants. Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. By the Court of Claims?

Mr. SIMS. By the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Ella L. Deweese; widow of John T. Deweese, deceased, of Washington City, $155.09.

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if there would be any objection to incorporating a provision in the bill limiting the amount that might be paid to an attorney, or providing any amount to be paid to an attorney?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman means limiting the percentage paid to these attorneys?

Mr. JACKSON. That is what I mean.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, the gentleman is not offering such an amendment, but simply making an inquiry?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Such an amendment, I think, Mr. Chairman, ought to be opposed, especially as to the claims in the bill, because the attorney has already rendered his service under the contract made with the claimant. I do not think, while Congress has the power to change the terms of those contracts, it ought to be done in the bill. Congress might pass a law as to future contracts that might be made, limiting them as to any contracts hereafter made, but, so far as these claims are con-cerned, the service has already been rendered by the attorneys, under contracts made with the claimants, and I do not think Congress ought now to disturb those contracts.

Mr. JACKSON. Has the gentleman from Tennessee any information as to the amount that will be paid to the attorneys and the amount that the real claimants will receive?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know as to the particular items in this bill. I can only state what has been customary, as I have been Simply where the attorney takes a conditional fee informed. and takes all the risk, in such cases he usually gets a third of the amount of the recovery, under a contract with the claimant. In such cases the attorney even advances the expenses. That has been the rule heretofore.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman will allow me, Mr. Chairman, I may say that I personally know of some contracts that do not exceed 25 per cent. The gentleman from Kansas, as an attorney, knows what a contingent fee means. Whenever an attorney takes a case on a contingent basis he has to go out and hunt up all the proofs himself and do extraordinary work in order to make sure of getting any fee whatever, whereas the claimants do not have to turn their hands over unless they

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask another question. Can the gentleman in charge of the bill, or these other gentlemen, inform the House as to whether any considerable number of these claims are controlled by any one firm of attorneys?

Mr. SIMS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I may say that as a general thing one firm of attorneys has a larger number of claims in one locality than in another. It has been the custom heretofore for an attorney to go to a particular locality and take deposi-tions and proofs. In my own service here as a Representative, when I am asked by a constituent to name an attorney, I usually name the attorney who has the largest number of claims in that particular locality, for the reason that he will in all probability go and secure the proof and thereby save the parties the expense of taking the proof themselves. It is better to do that than to pick up some attorney who is not acquainted with the rules of evidence laid down and the character of testimony required. In that way one attorney might have more claims in Kansas or in Virginia or in Tennessee than another, but I know of no claim trust among attorneys.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman think that one-third is an unreasonable fee where a lawyer advances money for expenses in a case against the United States Government, when he takes into consideration the fact that even in cases where a judgment may have been rendered six years ago he practically has not got his money back yet? Would the gentleman advance money in that way for an ordinary fee?

Mr. JACKSON. I will be glad to answer the question, if the gentleman will permit me. I will say that if an attorney represented only one single claimant that rate of compensation would be quite reasonable. I am inclined to favor this legislation, because I realize what it means to have one's home despoiled and one's property destroyed as has been done in the case of these people. I understand how liberal we have been with the soldiers in the Union Army in granting pensions and recompense for injuries. I simply ask these questions, because I, as a Member of Congress, do not want in any case to be placed on record as voting a large sum of money to any one placed on record as voting a large sum of inearly to any firm of attorneys. If it means that some one single firm of at-torneys here in Washington, or elsewhere, is to receive a third or a quarter of a million dollars of the money that this House means shall go to the individual who suffered these damages, I should be inclined to oppose it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman says, I do not know of any such firm.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in reply to the gentleman from Kansas that I do not represent a great many claims that have been placed in this bill, but I do know that four different attorneys represent claims of constituents whom I represent here.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, then are we to understand from the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] that about 33\frac{1}{2} per cent, and from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] about 25 per cent, of this $1,556,-311.06 does not go to the parties named in the bill, but goes to the attorneys for attorneys' fees and expenses? Is that what is meant?

Mr. SIMS. It goes to the parties named in the bill, and those parties can pay their attorney fees out of this or out of any other fund. That is a matter resting entirely with the parties

Mr. POWERS. I want, Mr. Chairman, to suggest whether this is not true, that the committee has nothing to do with the employment of attorneys? That is a matter, as I understand, wholly resting with the parties prosecuting the claims, and whether or not they have made a good or a bad contract does not affect the merits of the individual claims.

Mr. SIMS. That is correct.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, the fact is that when this appropriation is made for these claims a warrant on the Treasury will be issued, payable to the claimant himself in each case, and the attorney can not collect it unless the claimant indorses that warrant. Out of that he pays whatsoever fee may have been agreed upon prior to that time.

Mr. SIMS. That is entirely correct, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the First Baptist Church of Jacksonville, $1,170.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 15, on page 15, the following: "To the rector, wardens, and vestry of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla., $12,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee for a moment or two while I call atten-tion to this amendment. This is a claim which was referred to the Court of Claims in 1905. In 1906 the Court of Claims reported its finding, which, of course, is simply a finding of facts, and that finding is that in March, 1863, the United States forces took possession of Jacksonville, Fla., and on the night of March 28, 1863, the church edifice of St. John's Church was used by the Eighth Maine Volunteers, and on the following day—March 29, 1863—when the United States troops evacuated the said city of Jacksonville, the said soldiers set fire to, burned, and totally destroyed the said church building. The reasonable value of the said church building, including the organ and the fixtures of every other kind and description contained therein, was the sum of $12,000, for which no payment appears to have

This is from the finding of the court. On two separate occasions the Senate of the United States has passed a bill appropriating the money to pay this claim. There are innumerable precedents for the payment of claims of this character, and I can not for the life of me see the distinction between making the payment in an omnibus bill and making it in a separate, single bill.

I call the attention of the committee to a report on an omnibus claims bill made by Senator Teller in 1908. In this report he cites a number of cases exactly on all fours with this one, a number of them not so strong as this case.

The first case, as I understand it, where Congress made a departure from that settled rule was that of the Presbyterian Church of Murfreesboro, Tenn. I read from the opinion of

Judge Nott, of the Court of Claims:

Judge Nott, of the Court of Claims:

The present case, in finding the value of the building, may seem a departure from the rule which has hitherto governed the court—the first and only exception out of the hundreds of cases of war claims which have been tried and disposed of in the course of the last 15 years. The reason for this departure from a well-settled rule is this: The proceeding in cases coming into this court under the Bowman Act is not to obtain a judgment fixing with finality the legal rights and liabilities of the parties, but simply a proceeding to procure for Congress authenticated information necessary for them to possess in matters coming before them for legislative action. It is consequently the duty of the court to ascertain and certify to Congress such facts as will be available and useful when the question of legislative relief shall come before the two Houses.

In cases of religious and charitable institutions and institutions of learning, Congress has in repeated instances laid down a different rule than that hereinbefore adverted to as the rule of this court for what may be termed the measure of damages. In other words, whenever Congress has given relief for the destruction of such a building, the legislative rule in repeated instances has invariably been to allow the value of the building as a building. The case before us is a case of that description. The court accordingly finds the value of the building as it stood when the military authorities took possession of it. Whether the owners are entitled or not entitled to that or to any relief is not a question before the court. It rests entirely within the legislative discretion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the com-

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to a number of instances in which Congress has paid claims similar to this.

In the Forty-first Congress the Kentucky University, of Lexington, Ky., was paid $25,000 for the use and occupation of its buildings by United States troops.

The Forty-third Congress paid the East Tennessee University

$18,500 for the use of property.

The Forty-eighth Congress donated 46,800 acres of public lands to the University of Alabama to be applied to the erection of suitable buildings for said university, which was destroyed by fire on April 4, 1865, during the military operations at Tuscaloosa.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WITHERSPOON). The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent for five

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Fiftieth Congress paid the Mr. CLARK of Florida. Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tenn., $18,729.09 for stone and material taken and used by the military authorities of the United States during the Civil War (25 Stat. L., 1188); the Baptist Female College, Lexington, Mo., $3,167.67 as compensation for rent of the college building while used by the United States Army for four years from 1861 (25 Stat. L., 1189).

The Fifty-second Congress paid to William and Mary College of Virginia $64,000 to reimburse said college for the destruction of its buildings and other property destroyed without authority by soldiers of the United States Army during the Civil War.

(27 Stat. L., 744.)

The Fifty-third Congress paid to Washington College (now known as the Washington and Lee University), located at Lexington, Va., $17,848 for injury to its buildings, apparatus, libraries, and other property injured or destroyed by troops of the United States Army during the late war. (28 Stat. L., 1039.)

The Fifty-fifth Congress paid to the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South $288,000 as compensation for property of said corporation, including the buildings and grounds and all machinery and all material of every kind used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army, or for its benefit in any way, during the years 1864 and 1865. (30 Stat. L., 1401.)

The Fifty-seventh Congress paid (32 Stat. L., 234, 235) the following claims: To the trustees of the German Evangelical Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., $2,500 on account of the destruction of their church building and its furniture, on February 17, 1863, while they were in possession of a portion of the military forces of the United States; to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg, W. Va., $1,850 for the use and occupation thereof by the Federal troops from March, 1862, to April, 1865; to the bishop and trustees of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., $2,880 for use and occupancy of said church by the Army of the United States during the War of the Rebellion; to the Cumberland Female College, McMinnville, Tenn., $5,000 for the use, occupancy, and consumption of its property for hospital and other Army purposes during the late war of 1861 to 1865 by the military authority of the United States; to the Richmond College, Rich-$25,000 to reimburse said college for the occupation of its buildings and grounds by the United States troops and officers for 18 months commencing in April, 1865, and for injury and destruction of the buildings, apparatus, libraries, and other property of said college by said troops and officers; to the Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), at Clarksville, Tenn., $25,019.96 for use and occupation of the buildings and grounds, for material used, and for injury to its buildings, apparatus, and other property by the United States troops during the Civil War; to the Catholic Church at Macon City, Mo., $725 for use and occupation of said church during the Civil War; to the St. Charles College, Missouri, such amount, if any, found upon investigation by the Quartermaster's Department to be due for use of its buildings and grounds by the United States military authorities during the Civil War.

The Sixtieth Congress, first session, by private act 37, approved March 26, 1908, paid $403,030.19 to the Archbishop of Manila, in the Philippine Islands, as the representative (and trustee) of the Roman Catholic Church in said islands, in full satisfaction of the claim for use and occupation of property of said church in said islands and for damage done thereto by the military forces of the United States prior to January 15,

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to this committee that these are ample precedents. The record is full of precedents for the incorporation of this amendment in this act. It is just as equitable, it is just as proper, to be paid as any item in this bill, I do not care what the item is. Now, I want to appeal to this committee. Here is a bill that has passed the Senate on two occasions. Undoubtedly it will be put in this bill by the Senate when it goes over there, but I appeal to my colleagues to do me and my constituents the justice to incorporate this small item in this bill, and thus pay this most just and equitable claim of this church in the city of Jacksonville.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the precedents cited by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and he has cited them correctly. I do not remember of but four specific cases, and I think the gentleman has named them all. It is true that Congress has full power to appropriate the money to pay for these buildings. Now, all these cases, recollection is, went back to the seventies except one. Possibly the Virginia or Alabama case was in the nineties, but it seems to have been a case in each instance of pure favoritism. is no general rule. Since I have been on this committee we have turned down-I do not want to say hundreds, but a large number,—and refused to report claims for the destruction of property as an act of war. We have turned down similar claims from Pennsylvania, from Maryland, from Kentucky, from Tennessee, and from every quarter from which they have Congress has the power to pay for property destroyed in war, but it has not been the rule of nations to do so when incident to war, but only to pay for the benefits received by the Government.

The very decision of the court from which the gentleman from Florida read uses this language with reference to the rule of law:

Now, the general principle which governs the court is that the amounts allowed are to be only to the extent of the benefit which the Government received by the taking, not for the injury which the owner suffered.

That is the general principle of law. In the use or occupation of St. John's Church, at Jacksonville, it was taken possion of on March 28, and on the 29th of same month it was vacated and burned. That is the court's finding, and we must presume that it was burned as an act of war; that there was nothing connected with it, only the destruction of the building. How innumerable would be the cases if we commenced to pay for the destruction of bridges, for the destruction of court-houses, for the destruction of churches, for the destruction of colleges and universities by fire or otherwise as an act of war? The liabilities of the Government would amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, and it would not all go to the South; a good deal of it would go to Maryland and Pennsylvania and other States.

A case was brought to us from Kentucky, in which the soldiers used the houses of private citizens for breastworks, and in the battle where the Confederates made the attack the buildings were shot to pieces and destroyed. Those buildings protected the Union soldiers from Confederate bullets. would be nothing immoral or wrong in paying those citizens for the buildings; they were loyal in that part of Kentucky, and Kentucky did not withdraw from the Union. They lost their property, and it was used in defense of their own soldiers, but we have refused to pay that claim or anything like it. There was a claim from up in Frederick, Md., or a claim that originated there, of the same character, and also one from Chambersburg, Pa. In the adjoining county to the one in which I live is a case where a church was used and burned in the use, not maliciously but incidentally, and while there are a few claims referred to by the gentleman from Florida where the Government has paid, there are hundreds of cases negative in character not before the House, and therefore can not be seen unless collated and brought together.

The committee in making up this bill followed the rule I have stated. We have included no claim for damages or use of property that was not for the benefit of the Government that received the use, and therefore an implied contract arising I would be as willing to pay for St. John's Church as any. There is a bill here from Virginia where a church at Spottsylvania Court House was shot to pieces in a battle by the Federals. The court finds the fact, but the court does not declare the law; the very decision the gentleman from Florida read, but did not quite read the whole of it:

The court accordingly finds the value of the building as it stood when the military authorities took possession of it.

The gentleman did not read the following, but of course not intentionally:

Whether the owners are entitled or not to have the relief is not a question before the court; it rests entirely within the legislative discretion.

And so it does.

This amendment can be put on here and hundreds of others just like it can be put on. I say "hundreds." I know a vast number of them. Can we pass the bill, however, with these amendments added? I think it will be impossible. And in view of the fact that here are 1,058 claims, about which there is no question at all as to the benefits received by the Government of the United States, I appeal to the Members of this House not to put this bill in jeopardy by including in it a single claim not in harmony with the general rule laid down. I shall be delighted to have the case from Florida presented to the committee. If the committee reports it favorably to the House, the House can pass upon it, and numerous cases just like it. .I was appealed to in the one case from Tennessee, another from Virginia, another from Georgia, and there are numerous cases, and if Congress decides to pay claims for burned property, then my State, perhaps, would be benefited to the extent of many millions of dollars, for it was a battle field from one end to the other. Nearly all of the bridges and the courthouses in the State were destroyed, as were many of the churches and colleges. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to the Methodist Publishing House claim. The house was not destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unaninous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. The publishing house and machinery were used by the Government for printing purposes. The destruction must have been of material that was simply consumed in its use, and is not a claim of the kind presented by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Does this committee allow these claims according to a fixed rule? Has it in this bill allowed every claim that came within that rule and excluded every claim that did not come within that rule?

Mr. SIMS. That was our purpose and intention.
Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that if this bill is amended in accordance with the desires of the gentleman from Florida, the fate of the bill will be the very same as the fate of the bills that have been passed in this House during the last six years. If you put on that amendment, you have got to put on a large number of amendments of the same character. We have a peculiar situation. The bill is always amended at the other end of the Capitol. A conference committee is appointed. Do not let our conferees go into that conference room with anything but clean hands. Let them go into that room and be able to say to the conferees from the other end of the Capitol, "We have hewed to the line, we have not crossed it for the gentleman from Florida or the gentleman from Georgia; we have not played politics, we have excluded every one of those bills which came without the rule laid down by our committee, and we shall require you to do the same thing." If you send your conferees into that conference room with that kind of a bill to stand on, the probabilities are that you will get something through this House, but if you commence to load it down with amendments, no matter how meritorious they may be, it will include a vast body of others of the same kind, and you will kill the bill just as sure as the sun rises and sets. I am against the amendment, not because it should not go on the bill, but I am against the amendment because I want the claims in this omnibus bill passed.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Does the gentleman think adding a claim that is meritorious will kill this bill?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The trouble is if you add this claim you have got to add more.

Mr. BOOHER. Well, if a hundred claims are right and ought to be paid by the Government, why should they not be added to the bill? [Applause.]

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The question of whether or not they are right is a question that has not yet been decided. This House has never decided in an omnibus bill that property destroyed in that way should be paid for. The question has been decided, it is true, and occasionally a bill has gotten through, but the question has never been presented to the House as it will be in this particular instance. If you want to go on and finish it up and kill it, adopt this amendment, and adopt the rest of the amendments. If you want to pass this bill and pay these million and a half of dollars to these claimants, let it go through as this committee has prepared it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to ask, if this bill passes, whether or not if these other claims mentioned are meritorious they can not be hereafter considered and included in an omnibus bill? Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Every one of them can.

Mr. RUSSELL. And would it not be better to pass this bill against which there seems to be no probable objection rather than to take the chance of defeating this bill by adding those other bills that may be considered doubtful?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I agree with the gentleman; certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. And the fact that the committee may leave out this bill now does not militate against the possibility or probability of it hereafter being considered and passed.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then we want to stand by this bill. Mr. CALLAWAY. I asked the chairman of the committee awhile ago if this bill is in accordance with the given rule which the committee had laid down, and he said it was. I asked him whether it contained all the bills which were in accord with that rule, and he said it did. Now, I want to ask the gentleman what that rule is.

Mr. SIMS. I can tell you what the rule is. First, that the claimant has been found loyal to the Government to start on; second, that it has been found by the court that the property was taken and used by the United States Government for the armies, which is the same thing, and its value. Now—
Mr. CALLAWAY. Now, in regard to the question of value.

Is that the value-

Mr. SIMS. And that it has not been paid.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is that the value to the party from whom it is taken, or is that the value to the Government in the use to which it put it?

Mr. SIMS. Well, the latter statement of the gentleman is substantially correct; the benefits received by the Government are intended to be paid for rather than the value to the owner of the property f the property.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Now, is it the purpose of this committee to pay every claim of any person found to be loyal to the Government the value of that property taken to the forces that took it?

Mr. SIMS. That is the law.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Now, have you got all those claims in this bill?

Mr. SIMS. Why, we have got all that we have findings from the court of that sort. Of course we have not—
Mr. CALLAWAY. Then the claim presented by the gentleman from Florida does not come within that rule?

Mr. SIMS. No. It was destroyed as an act of war. It is not shown that the church is worth $1,200 to the Army which used it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended until he can finish an answer to my question.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized if the Chair will do so in order to reply to the gentleman from Texas to a question if it is a proper one.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit. I did not understand a moment ago, but I understand that some said this claim I offered has not been to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SIMS. No; I said the court found the value of the church, but did not find its value to the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The court found the fact of loyalty and found the value of it.

Mr. CALLAWAY, I understood the chairman of the committee, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri, to state that hereafter claims might be presented indefinitely and passed on by the committee and brought in here. Now, if all the claims have been passed on by this committee and they have brought them in here under the rule, I want to know how this committee is going to pass on those claims in the future and indefinitely bring them in?

Mr. SIMS. That is easily answered. We are only appropriating money here to pay for claims acted on by the Court of Claims, and this committee will continue to send claims for the court's action in the future and will pay in the future, no doubt, claims of this character when passed upon by that court favorably.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will ask the gentleman a further question there. I understand that the rule suggested, that you pay the amount of value to the Army, applies to individual claims, but that churches, Odd Fellows, Masonic halls, and organizations of that kind are paid in proportion to the value of the property to them and not to the Army.

Mr. SIMS. I could not state that, but I will read the decision of the Supreme Court-

Mr. CALLAWAY. I am asking you what you draw your line on.

Mr. SIMS. This bill is to pay what the court has decided; what the court has found and fixed as the value.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand that the court has decided in reference to each of the claims in this bill, and therefore we are asked to pay it.

Certainly. The court has found on each of these claims, and upon that finding this committee has acted, and upon nothing else, and has not gone beyond that finding to ascertain what evidence was before the court.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to say to the gentleman that these items stand on a par with the judgment of the court, and in cases where the court has not acted and judgment has not been found no provision for payment has been made in this bill, but this bill includes all cases of this certain

Mr. CALLAWAY. That does not answer my question. have asked him whether or not there was one rule by which to pass on the claims of individuals and another rule by which to pass on the claims of lodges, churches, and other organizations.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] will yield to me, I think I can explain the

Mr. CALLAWAY. I yield.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The first step in this proceeding is to introduce a bill or resolution referring the case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. And the Court of Claims determines whether the party is loyal or not.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It determines the value of the property, and the findings are certified back to the House. This committee allows in each case, when it comes to the item of value, what the Court of Claims adjudged the property to be worth.

Mr. CALLAWAY. To whom?
Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. What the value of the property is worth to the Government according to the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You do not get my question.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Now, in the case of certain claims, where they are allowed for the use of property, the question is the value of the use. The court determines what the use of church, lodge, or school property was worth to the Government, and adjudges it in figures, and this committee simply follows the judgment of the court. It does not change the figures in any case. It is an adjudication of the claim. The committee follows the findings of the court as to value of the property or value of its use.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But I understand from the report here that when they allow claims of orders, as I have suggested, that they allow the value of the property to the order, and when they allow the claim of an individual they allow the value of that property to the Army. For instance, I see one illustration given here, where they took a milch cow, which had been imported, and they allowed the value of cow as beef, but had they taken that cow from an organization they would have allowed the value of the imported cow.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not understand that to be the rule of this Congress.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I see another one, and I am asking the chairman if that is the rule of the committee. It says took the brick of a building and put it into bake ovens, a brick building that belonged to the order, and they allowed the value of the building as it stood to the order, but had it been an individual's property they would have allowed the value of second-hand brick?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not understand that to be the rule. I know of one case of that kind, and the claimants were allowed simply the value of the property as if they had bought the brick from the brickyard and not the value of the building. But in every case the Court of Claims determines the value, and this committee follows the findings and conclusions of the court in fixing the value. The committee does not change the figures or amounts in cases of churches or organizations or individuals. They take these findings of the court as to the value of the property and allow them in every case.

Mr. CALLAWAY. They exclude from before the court everybody except those who are loyal, except it be an Odd Fellows' hall, or Masonic temple, or a church. I want to know why they have not applied the same rule in those cases?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. They do not apply the question of disloyalty to charitable institutions like hospitals, churches, and

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, some very ingenious lawyer a few years ago happened overnight to strike an idea that an artificial entity could not be disloyal, and got the court to sustain that opinion.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And Congress to sustain it. We can say whether we will allow it or will not allow it, but here we are following the track, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, of an ingenious lawyer, when overnight he devised this scheme whereby these organizations could get what the sufferers from the depredations of the Union Army could not get, though they stood exactly on the same footing.

Mr. SIMS. Let me make a remark right there. these institutions, but not always, who are the beneficiaries are a hospital or orphan asylum, or something of that sort, and could not become loyal or disloyal, and we-

Mr. CALLAWAY. Neither can a corporation, Mr. Chairman, become loyal or disloyal, but every member of that corporation might be disloyal, and yet the corporations come in here under this devious scheme and claim themselves in, when an individual could not claim it.

Mr. SIMS. Well now, my friend, all I have got to say about it is this: We have included nothing but claims favorably reported on by the Court of Claims, and only those where loyalty has been found or where it has not been required to be found. I am in favor of paying every one of them, whether for colleges, lodges, churches, or hospitals. If the gentleman does not want to provide for them he can move to strike out the items covering them.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in a number of cases that I hold in my hand I desire to say that the court does pass upon the question of the loyalty of the church.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentle-Mr. CALLAWAY.

man from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hands the items included in the bill from South Carolina. Of the 11 items 8 are for churches. I find here the case of the Ebenezer Methodist Church. It appears from the evidence that the church was loyal to the Government of the United States during the war. A similar finding is made in every case in every item of that kind.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Then, they have found that as a matter of fiction, have they not, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am unable to say whether the gentleman is correct or not in saying that the court found it as a matter of fiction or a matter of fact.

would dislike to say it was a matter of fiction. The court to which Congress sent the claim reported to Congress, as a matter of fact, that the church was loyal to the Government, and that finding is in every item in this bill where an appropriation is sought to be made, payable to a church for property used by the Federal troops during the war.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this bill [laughter], not because I think these claims ought not to be paid, but I am going to vote against the bill because of its partiality, because it is a distribution of pie over 43 States. I am not going to follow the Court of Claims, Mr. Chairman, nor this committee. And, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the individuals in that country whose property was destroyed at home, on their private homes, their clothing destroyed, and their food taken, their sustenance by day and their covering by night, should be given the same ear by this House, whether they have been allowed that right before the Court of Claims, because of a law enacted by this House, or not, and they should have compensation for what the Union forces took and used for their own benefit and they should receive what it was worth to the Union Army. The law of civilized warfare is whatever of private property be taken from the individual not actually engaged in war at the time should either be paid for or a receipt given which will enable the individual to present his claim to the Government whose army destroys his private property after the war is terminated. This has been the rule of civilized warfare for a hundred years. In section 6, page 282, volume 7, Digest of International Law, an order was issued by the Duke of Wellington July 9, 1813, in which he said:

The rules, therefore, which have been observed hitherto in requiring, and taking, and giving receipts for supplies from the country are to be continued in the villages on the French frontier; and the commissaries attached to each of the armies of the several nations will receive the orders from the commander in chief of the army of their nations respecting the mode and period of paying for such supplies.

On October 26, 1846, Gen. Taylor, acknowledging receipt of instructions of Mr. Marcy, Secretary of War, stated that—

It had been impossible to sustain the Army by forced contributions. The country between the Rio Grande and the Sierra Madre was poor, furnishing only corn and beef. These articles have been obtained by paying for them. The prompt payment in cash had, besides, neutralized much of the unfriendly feeling with which the Americans were regarded, and have contributed greatly to facilitate their operation. Moreover, if their crops were so taken they would have no inducement to plant again.

So the rules of civilized warfare for a hundred years have been that when private property was taken for the use of the invading army it should be paid for. The property destroyed by that war then was either not destroyed by civilized warfare or the people of the South were considered on a different footing from ordinary beligerents. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to taking crumbs and acquiescing. If we are not entitled as a matter of right—plain, candid, open, manly right—to these claims I do not want them. We have begged, trimmed, and fawned for these claims too much; have, as the gentleman from Illinois said, discovered sharp interpretations by which we secure small hand-outs, not even-handed justice. I believe we should have even-handed justice for all claimants or ask for nothing. My objection to this bill is that it lays down one rule for an organization and another rule for the individual, for in the law of nations all claimants of private property, as a matter of common justice, should have an equal standing before this House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman that the position that loyalty is not required of these institutions is in accordance with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and not a decision of the Court of Claims.

They are artificial persons.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I am not talking about artificial persons. I am talking about simple justice. This House and not the court is to determine whether or not we shall allow these claims. If a bill is brought in here putting all just claims on an equal footing, where it is shown that we are doing justice to every person in the United States alike, then I will vote for it. But here in this bill some are included on one footing and others are excluded, on the ground that one is an artificial person and the other is not an artificial person. I believe that the widow whose husband died on the firing line, the widow who was at home with her little children, who had her house burned down from over her head, who had her horses taken, who had her mules taken, who had her hogs eaten, who had her corn bin robbed and her wheat bin stripped, should have a claim against this Government just the same as the lodge to which her husband and his fellows belonged.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to restrict debate, but I ask that in five minutes debate be closed on this paragraph. Mr. AUSTIN. I will be glad if the gentleman would give me two minutes' time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on all amendments to this item be closed in 10 minutes, and that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Mays] be granted 5 minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] 3 minutes, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be given to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Mays], 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], and 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark]. Is there objection?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question. In cases the Court of Claims did not pass upon the question of loyalty, but did pass upon the question of property and said the claim should be paid, and that it was a just claim—in such cases what right has this committee to cut out such claim?

.Mr. SIMS. Because the court does not make any such finding as that.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Let me read the one I have before me.

Mr. SIMS. They do not say it is a just claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Let me read it to you.

Mr. SIMS. At least I have not seen it. The gentleman can take time and read it when the item is before us. It is not before us now.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It will be soon.

Mr. SIMS. Then the gentleman can do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for the extension of time?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know the purpose of adjusting these war claims. If it is for the purpose of doing justice to the people who have made these losses, then why not treat them fairly? Why make a distinction in these claims? It is a fact that St. John's Church, in Jacksonville, was occupied and used by the Federal troops, and was destroyed by them upon leaving it. If that does not make a just claim, then there is no just claim in this bill. It has been adjudicated and found that such was the fact, and, using the phrase of the distinguished ex-Speaker on the other side of this House [Mr. Cannon], I want to say that if kissing is to go by favor, then the purpose for which this bill is brought before this House seems to me to be entirely lost sight of. When I read some of the immense claims that are being allowed in this bill to different States, and when, looking over these claims, I can see no difference between them and this claim coming from Florida, I can see no reason why this claim should not be paid, and every reason why it should. My friends, it makes no difference that it comes from a church. It is a just claim. We are told that we can not amend this bill for fear of killing it, although the claim presented as an amendment is a just one. If that is so, then I think this bill comes far short of what ought to be its purpose. I hope this House, in all fair play, and in justice to itself, will allow this amendment to be put upon the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to pay tribute to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] who has reported this bill, and also to make my acknowledgments to the ranking Republican member, Mr. Morse, for their faithful and efficient service in preparing and reporting this bill. While I sit on the opposite side from my colleague [Mr. Sims], I wish to say that in his long and many years of service in this House he has been faithful and efficient in the discharge of his public duties; and not only is his district greatly indebted to him for his invaluable services, but the great State of Tennessee owes him a debt of gratitude and the entire South as well. [Applause.] It is my ardent hope that the Democratic Party of the district which he represents will have the wisdom to continue his distinguished services in this House so long as he may desire to sit here with us. [Applause.]

A word in reference to this amendment. No man on the floor of this House, hailing from a southern State, had in his district a larger number of men, women, and children who were loyal and devoted to the Union during that great civil strife than those who lived in the district I represent—the second Tennessee district. Both armies camped there and lived among and on the people. My father was a devoted Union man. The House in which I was born in Decatur, Ala., was destroyed by the Union forces in order to prevent its being used as a shelter for the Confederates who were surrounding that town. Yet under a decision of our Supreme Court, and under the laws of the land, a loyal man who suffered for his loyalty, a refugee from home and family, has absolutely no claim against the Government to which he was loyal for tearing down every brick in his home, and the only home that he had.

Here is a claim that the Court of Claims has passed upon, for a church in far-off Florida, where my genial colleague, Mr. Clark of Florida, often talks about the splendid oranges which they grow, some of which, I hope, one of these days will reach his colleagues in the House [laughter]; where the mocking birds sing all the year round and genial and perpetual sunshine prevails. Now, here was a splendid edifice, a Methodist church, and under its roof Union soldiers found comfort, shelter, and relief. After they passed out of that historic church, in which many of the local people were united in the holy bands of matrimony, and where funerals of loved ones were conducted, and where their children were baptized, these soldiers, filled, perhaps, with malice or rancor or the great passions of the strife of the Civil War, without cause ruthlessly burned it. Forty-nine years after this act, which no honest man can defend, the Representative from that district and that city asks Members of this House to do an act of justice that should have been performed half a century ago. My vote shall be for it, and I shall not be deterred by any threats of the loss of this bill. This bill was lost in the last Congress on account of the French spoliation claims being added to it. Let us do justice at all times, certainly to that far-off delightful land of Florida, and vote $12,000 to a church of the lowly Nazarene. [Applause.]
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield the two minutes remaining to my colleague, Mr. Sparkman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I know but little about the various items in this bill and can not speak as to their merits. I have not had an opportunity of even reading the bill or of acquainting myself with its various provisions, but I do know that the claim for which this amendment has been offered is a just one. It is one that ought to be allowed if any item in this bill is to be passed. It should have been paid long ago.

I know nothing of the rule upon which this bill has been framed or the principle by which the committee was guided in the selection of the various items in the measure, but it appears from the findings of the Court of Claims that this claim has been passed upon favorably by that court. It appears also that the United States troops actually took possession of this building, if that is a consideration that is to have any weight here or had any weight with the committee in framing the bill; that they held possession for a night, or perhaps 24 hours, and as they were leaving set fire to the building and burned it to the ground. Now, in all fairness, it would seem that such a state of facts certainly presents a case that should receive favorable consideration at the hands of this committee. These are worthy people. That goes without saying, and the same is no doubt true of all the other claimants. Their claims are no doubt just and should be allowed. Certainly this is just and should be paid. Indeed, it should have been paid long ago. It has been allowed by the Court of Claims. It has been found just by that tribunal, and this finding should be indorsed by Congress and the claim paid without further delay. these people have waited half a century and should not be forced to wait longer. I hope the amendment may prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amend-

The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sims) there were—ayes 30, nays 45.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Catherine Kelton, of Fulton County, $500.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 18, page 17, of the pending bill, the following:
"To the administrators of Rosa M. Wyatt, late of Clark County, Ga., the sum of $5,015."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SIMS. I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. State your point.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Georgia did not rise in me. The Clerk had begun reading another section. Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman is mistaken. I was addressing the Chair before the last word of the section was out of the Clerk's mouth. He has not read one word below "Illinois."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. TRIBBLE is right, because I am interested in the last section read by the Clerk, and the truth is the Clerk did not get entirely through before Mr. TRIBBLE addressed the Chair.

Mr. SIMS. Well, then, the amendment calls for the wrong line on the page.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, in the bill I had and prepared the amendment for, it was line 18, but in the bill I now have it should come in at the end of line 17. There are two prints of this bill, and I will ask to have the amendment changed to go in at the end of line 17.

Mr. SIMS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the party in question had a claim before the Court of Claims and that court rendered a decision. As a matter of fact, in this case the question of loyalty was not a question at issue. During the proceedings in this case a motion was made to dismiss the suit on the grounds of disloyalty, and the court refused to dismiss the case and rendered the decision, which I have and will now read.

The law provides that the court shall dismiss cases if the question of loyalty is an issue in the case without further finding. In this case it was raised and the court refused to dismiss the case and rendered a finding in favor of Mrs. Wyatt.

Is this a Tucker or a Bowman Act case? Mr. TRIBBLE. The name of the act is immaterial. the statute before me, with which the gentleman is familiar.

Mr. SIMS. I have got to know. Under the Tucker Act loyalty is not jurisdictional. Under the Bowman Act it is. They do not dismiss the Tucker Act cases by finding disloyalty.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand the gentleman; but what difference does it make to this House if the question of loyalty is not in the case and the court set up her property rights.

Mr. SIMS. Which is this reference—the Tucker or the Bowman Act?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman can take the names as he I am standing on my legal rights and not on names of I decline to be further interrupted on names of acts. I am presenting to this Congress on the finding of the court what I conceive to be a just claim, and I will read what the finding of the court was:

During the war for the suppression of the Rebellion the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the Army, took from the claimant, in the county of Bryan, State of Georgia, property of the kind and character above described, which was then and there reasonably worth the sum of $5,015, the same being the claimant's one-fifth interest therein. No payment appears to have been made therefor. The same was never presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court as aforesaid.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the finding of the court, I have before me the affidavit of the claimant in this case that she lived in the city of New York, that she did not go to the Southern States during the war until a short while before the end of the war, when the Union Army was camped upon her farm. She went there then to protect her property, and that is the only time, as the evidence in this case disclosed, that she went there. The court finds that her property was taken and gives the value, and I am here calling on this Congress to appropriate for this woman what she is justly entitled to. I presented this matter to members of the committee. I went to the chairman of the committee and presented my claim, and he said, "You need not bring it in; we will not pass upon it; you need not bring it to us." But I am here now, Mr. Chairman, before Congress asking that this claim be paid, notwithstanding the rejection by the committee. It seems to me the finding of the court should largely control the action of the committee. The court was created for the purpose of relieving the committee and Congress of this detail work. In my limited time I can not make a thorough legal presentation of this claim. The question of loyalty is not an issue. The presumption of disloyalty does not attach to a citizen living in a loyal State. Living as she did in New York she was not required to show loyalty in the trial of her claim. There is denial of the fact that her property was taken and used by the United States, and this money should have been paid long years ago.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, loyalty is not found, and it is a Tucker Act case, because if loyalty was not found they could not go any further. Therefore I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta, $800.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what the peculiar facts are relating to this church case?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I can say this to the gentleman from Florida that this is a claim that has been passed upon by the Court of Claims. That is the distinction between this claim and the amendment the gentleman offered awhile ago.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The Court of Claims did pass upon the case that I offered.

Mr. HOWARD. This is not a burned church.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What is it? I want to know what

Mr. HOWARD. This is for use and occupation, and not destruction.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to get the facts about it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Florida that apparently this is to reimburse the rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta,

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For what?

Mr. MANN. Oh, it does not make any difference what the reimbursement is for.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think it does, and I want to find out.

Mr. MANN. We have a surplus of money in the Treasury, and this is a method of proper distribution. [Laughter.] This is one of those cases where they are seeking to pay some churches in the South some money out of the Treasury, to even up for some of the money that we pay to the old soldiers in the North.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If that is true, then I want to say to the gentleman that I am not getting my share in my district.

Mr. MANN. I am very sure of one thing, that the gentleman from Florida has never failed since he has been a Member of this House to get not only his share but a part of mine.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Florida, by authority of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], who has charge of the Georgia cases, that he says it was for use and occupation. Mr. CLARK of Florida. How long was that church used?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia to make

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember the exact time, but it was during the occupancy of Atlanta by the Federal Army-quite a while, two or three weeks, perhaps, or longer. The court found it to be a just claim, and it came within our rule.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But can not the chairman of the committee or somebody tell me the exact time that this church was used and how much was allowed-a month, a week, or a day-for the use of it?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, we report the court finding, whether it be a day or one year, of its value for the time it was occupied. It is not material how much it was, but the court found the value to the Government after an examination in court and a trial.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But did not the court find, as a matter of fact, the length of time it was used?

Mr. SIMS. Possibly it did.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman does not know that? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Lee] is on the Mr. SIMS. committee, and the Georgia cases, as a matter of courtesy to him and to the committee, were turned over to him, and I personally did not examine them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am asking the chairman of the committee; the gentleman from Georgia is indefinite.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, he is a member of the subcommittee that had charge of it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that it was because of the fact that the gentleman from Georgia was on the committee; does it require a Member to be on the committee in order to have these claims put in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. Not at all; but he was on the subcommittee, and the Georgia cases were given to him because he was supposed to know more about it.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. We took up the matter and found it came within this rule.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What were the findings of the Court of Claims?

As soon as we can have the findings secured the information will be given. We have already passed this para-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, we have not. I moved to strike out the last word of this paragraph; so we have not passed it.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask that we pass this paragraph by unanimous consent until the findings of the court can be found. They are all scattered around here.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right; I am willing to do that in order to get the information.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to know from some member of the committee what rule the committee adopted in putting claims in this bill? I have heard so much of the rule and now I would like to know what that rule was?

Mr. SIMS. I have stated to the committee several times the rule which was followed.

Mr. BOOHER. I have not heard it.

Mr. SIMS. We report Court of Claims findings only in the bill and those where loyalty was found, where the value of the property was found and the fact that it had not been paid— Mr. BOOHER. May I ask the chairman of the commit-

Mr. SIMS. And whether the property was taken and used by the Government of the United States and the value of the property to the Government.

Mr. BOOHER. Have all of that class of claims been included in this bill?

Mr. SIMS. Very likely not.
Mr. BOOHER. What good reason then is there for others of that class not going in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. I will state that we have not got any claims of that sort offered just now. We do not as a rule put on claims referred by the Senate.

Mr. BOOHER. Why?

SIMS. Because the Senate refers it and a Senator usually wants credit, I suppose, for doing so, but we put them in this bill where they were incorporated in the bill passed a year ago, or where a Member of the House requested it

Mr. BOOHER. Suppose a Senator has died or is out of the Senate before the claim is passed upon and is no longer a Member of the Senate and has no longer any connection with the claim? Can not a Member of the House from the district in which the claim originates present it to the committee if it is a just claim and have it included in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, well—— Mr. BOOHER. You have got several of that kind right in this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Let me state to the gentleman. When a claim is reported by the House and acted upon by the Court of Claims the Court of Claims certifies it back to the House. Senate refers a claim to the court it certifies it back to the Senate and we are not presumed to know anything about it.

Mr. BOOHER. But the committee can know. Mr. SIMS. But they are not sent to the House nor referred to this committee at all.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to give the committee all the credit I possibly can, but it does not make any difference, it seems to me, whether the court sends its reports to the Senate or to the House; we have the right to have them acted upon by this committee.

Mr. SIMS. Each branch of Congress is supposed to transact its business peculiarly within its own province.

Mr. BOOHER. If a Member brings a bill here before this committee that has been reported to the Senate, do I understand the chairman to say they reject and refuse to put it in the bill simply because it is reported to the Senate?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. We do not know anything about it unless some Member calls my attention to it, because it is not sent to my committee at all.

Mr. BOOHER. If a Member calls your attention to it and you take it, you reject it, do you not?

Mr. SIMS. Not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Not at all. Mr. BOOHER. Have you not done that with cases in this

Mr. SIMS. No. Mr. BOOHER. I will show you before you get through that the committee have rejected just such claims.

Mr. SIMS. Show them now.

Mr. BOOHER. We have not got to the proper place in the bill yet. It seems to me the committee has taken certain claims and determined they would put those claims in this bill, and that none others would go in. I, like the gentleman from Florida, feel that I have not been fairly treated by the com-

Mr. SIMS. Has the gentleman presented any claims?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes, sir.
Mr. SIMS. Within the rule?
Mr. BOOHER. Within the rule. It was passed by the Court. of Claims, and the use of the property that was taken by military authority was properly certified. The clerk of the court writes me that the only reason that the claim has not been paid is because Congress has not appropriated the money.

Mr. SIMS. Did the gentleman bring that claim to the com-

Mr. BOOHER. Yes, sir; and I have a letter from the chairman of the committee sending the claim back, with the statement that I have it put in the bill in the Senate. right to have it put on in the House. If the Senate has the right to put it on, then the committee of the House has the right to do so.

Mr. SIMS. If it is the same kind of a claim as these, I am perfectly willing to put it in.

Mr. BOOHER. If the Senate can put it in, why can not this committee do so? When we reach the proper place in the bill I shall offer an amendment to include the claim to which I refer in the bill. There is not a more just claim in the bill, and I can not understand why the committee refused to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Andrew L. Carter, of Sangamon County, $48.16.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I had supposed until within the last moment or two that the committee in reporting this bill had gone over both the House and the Senate findings, so called, and had included in this bill those findings both of the Senate and the House which they thought were proper to be paid and had excluded those which they thought ought not to be paid, and thereby would be familiar with the findings if the same items should be added as Senate amendments. I learn now from the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] that apparently the House committee has not been over the findings of the Court of Claims resulting from references by the Senate, and apparently will not be prepared, if this bill should be in conference in the closing days of Congress, to examine the Senate findings or to pass upon them as to whether they ought to be paid or not, because it is not a thing that can be done quickly.

There are always many more findings coming to the Senate than there are to the House. And I beg to ask for information from the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee if he is able to inform the House what proportion of the Senate findings under the Bowman and Tucker Acts have been examined by his

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, all the Senate claims that were in the bill that passed the House in the Sixty-first Congress and are in this bill were examined. All the Senate findings that accompany any item in this bill from the Senate have been examined, but such Senate findings, if there are such, of which the committee has no knowledge, have not been examined, of course. I am of the opinion that we have a majority of those findings—the great bulk of them, in fact. But inasmuch as those findings are not sent to the House Committee on War Claims, I would not say, and could not say, that we have all of them. I want to say this, that so far as I am concerned, the findings sent to the Senate will be included. I think we have nearly all of them. I think everything from Virginia was referred by the Senate, as well as a number of other cases of that sort. I am not sure there are findings on Senate references that were never sent to the War Claims Committee or given to it by any Member. I could not be positive about that, because I do not

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Joseph D. Wyatt, a resident of the National Military Home in the State of Indiana, $102.80.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following as a new paragraph, after line 15, page 23: "To pay Josiah Stanley, a citizen of Cass, Sullivan County, Ind., $1,246."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, this claim was originally introduced as a bill in Congress and was referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act. The court, in passing on it, found the value of the various items, the aggregate of which is the amount of the amendment which I have offered-$1,246. One thousand dollars of this was cash. Fifty dollars of it belonged to a soldier in the company of Capt. Stanley, and after Capt. Stanley had been captured, after his money and property had been taken from him, including this $50 deposited with him, after the war was over and he out of prison, he repaid the soldier the $50.

Now, the court says in its findings, after the statement of the court that he was a citizen of the United States, residing at Cass, Sullivan County, Ind., and has always borne allegiance to the United States:

I. The claimant was, as alleged, second lieutenant and captain in the United States Army. In February, 1865, while on a foraging expedition in the State of South Carolina, he and 15 other United States soldiers were captured by a Confederate force, and after being captured there were taken from the claimant by the Confederates the above items of property and money enumerated in his petition. He remained in captivity until the close of the war, when he was discharged.

It does not appear that he has received any compensation from any source for any of the property or money taken from him, as alleged in his petition. During the time of his captivity he was kept as a prisoner of war in Libby Prison and discharged as aforesaid.

The articles claimed to have been lost by the soldier were Now, this claimant has lost $1,246. He lost this money while in the service of the Government. It was taken from him, $1,000 of it, as I have said, in money. There is no reason, it seems to me, why payment should longer be withheld from him. He is a very old man now and is in impoverished circumstances. He has nothing upon which to live, and he is unable to work.

I submit that this amendment ought to be adopted and that the money and the value of the property which this man actually lost should be refunded to him, although he has been deprived of it ever since 1865.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the finding of the court shows that this property was taken from the claimant by Confederate soldiers. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana if my under-standing as to that is correct?

Mr. CULLOP. That is correct.
Mr. SIMS. As a matter of course, Mr. Chairman, it is unheard of to pay what soldiers lost when they were captured. If the money was taken from this claimant by Confederate soldiers, of course the United States Government is not liable for it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, just one word before we have a vote. I submit that that in itself is the very best reason why the claim should be paid; that if property is taken from a man while engaged in the defense of the Government, while serving the Government under its orders and direction, if he sustains loss, that is the best reason why he should be reimbursed. submit the amendment should be adopted. [Cries of "Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Johannah H. Houps, widow of Michael Houps, deceased, of Dubuque County, $442.74.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have watched the course of the proceedings here this afternoon with a great deal of interest. I have seen what appeared to be perfectly proper claims rejected. I have seen-wonder of wonders-an attempt to carry some money from the Public Treasury to the State of Indiana defeated. [Laughter.] I have come to believe that this is not a good day on which to present amendments covering perfectly just claims for the consideration of this committee. one amendment which I intended to offer and which I shall offer if opportunity arises—an amendment embodying a claim which is so good that I thought it would appeal to everybody and be immediately inserted without a word of protest.

But the rule of reason appears not to apply to the insertion of these items in the bill; and I wondered how the bill had been constructed until I heard the beautiful and poetical oration of the Representative from east Tennessee [Mr. Austin] a few moments ago. You will remember how he first flattered the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] by referring to the golden fruit that comes from that State, a fruit whose equal in flavor, size, and appearance it is difficult, if not impossible, to find; how he told us that the mocking birds sing always and the sun never ceases to shine upon the orange groves in Florida, and closed his beautiful oration by pronouncing a eulogy on the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from west Tennessee [Mr. Sims], whom he nominated for Congress for life and promised him the sympathetic support of Democratic east Tennessee.

I could not understand it, Mr. Chairman, until I remembered the voracious appetite of my friend from east Tennessee, and counted the items in this bill, and found that that Commonwealth had 192 items as against 4 for another Commonwealth several times larger. I then came to believe that the eulogy pronounced on my friend Mr. Sims, that beautiful picture of his usefulness to the country, that forecast of the disasters that would come if he ceased to be at the head of this committee, were all due to the fact that of these 192 claims which go to the State of Tennessee a large percentage at least must go into the district of the gentleman from east Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. [Laughter.]

I hope that the gentleman will not persist in his efforts to pass this bill this afternoon or to go through all those items. hope that this congregation of misers, who are unwilling to pay to the citizens of this country sums justly due them, will be recruited by more generous-minded and fair-minded Members of the House, who will come in here and make some effort to pay just debts due by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Put it off until next winter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No, Mr. Chairman, we will then have all preparations made for the inauguration of an absolutely economical administration in all of its branches, and I am afraid that we will never get another claims bill through. I want to do it while at least two-thirds of the Government is in the hands of people who are indifferent to expense. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, we passed an item to get the find-ing in the case of St. Phillip's Church, of Atlanta, Ga. I have got them now, and I will read them, so that the gentleman from Florida will know what they are.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to hear them. Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. Mr. SIMS. I did not know the Chair had recognized the gentleman.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, in no spirit of delay, but for my information, in order that I may intelligently vote on this important measure, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, in good faith, what distinction he makes as a lawyer between the cases presented by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tribble], which cases the committee has seen fit, probably for just reasons, to reject, although those cases were passed upon favorably by the Court of Claims, and the cases which have been reported favorably by the committee under similar circumstances? I confess that I have not been able to follow the legal intricacies of the matter.

Mr. SIMS. In the Florida case the claim is for the destruction of a church by fire, and the policy of Congress has not been, and it is not the law, to pay for property destroyed by fire or otherwise. In the case presented by Mr. TRIBBLE, of Georgia, the finding of the court was that the loyalty of the claimant was not to the satisfaction of the court.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman pardon me, that I may get at the facts; is it clear that in the case presented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] the claim was not sustained by the court?

Mr. SIMS. We are not substituting our judgment for that of the court. We are not sitting here as a court of review; we do not go into the evidence that the court had. This bill is to pay the amount determined by the court, where loyalty is found and where the property was taken, the value of which has not

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The court in the Tribble case decided that the claimant was not a loyal citizen.

Mr. CULLOP. V Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Does the gentleman mean to say that the policy of the committee is simply to pay for the use of property which has been depreciated in value and not paid for and does not pay for property that has been wholly destroyed?

Mr. SIMS, The committee has no policy about it, it is an absolute law.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman says the law provides that the Government will not pay for property wholly destroyed or

Mr. SIMS. Let me read the law to the gentleman, if he did not hear it when I read it before. I will read the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It begins on page 7 of the report:

of the report:

The invariable rule which has governed the court in this class of cases—that is, of cases for war damages—is this:

The court allows only for property taken to be used and only for the value to the Government of the thing taken. That is to say, the court has never allowed for property taken to be destroyed or for the damages which the owner suffered by reason of the taking. Where houses were torn down and trees felled for military reasons nothing has been allowed. Where fruit trees and shade trees and fences were taken for fuel the owner has been allowed only for so much cordwood. Where a building was torn down and the material used the allowance has been for so much old brick and secondhand lumber.

Mr. CULLOP. That does not say that there is no law against it; that has only been the policy of the court. Congress has a right to make law.

Mr. SIMS. This is the law, and from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CULLOP. It has been the policy of the court in the past on these claims. But the court is not the law-making power of the Government. Congress is the law-making power, and Congress has the right to provide for the payment of any claim that it sees fit, because it has that power under the Constitution.

Mr. SIMS. The Bowman Act, under which these claims go to the court, provides on its face that they shall not pay for the destruction of property. That is an act of Congress and is law until it is repealed.

Mr. CULLOP. I do not understand that it provides that Congress can not pay for the destruction or consumption of property. It has not been the policy of the committee to so do. illustration the case presented by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark], where the property had been totally destroyed, and yet you say by law that they can not come in and recover for their property that had been used and totally destroyed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me a moment on that point?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on this amendment has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The proforma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Abram Treadwell, of Clayton County, $450.40.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the law of these cases seems to be so little understood, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I can not be taken off my feet that way.

Mr. MANN. I took the gentleman off his feet.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But the gentleman can not do it while I am on the floor. The Chair had recognized me and I while I am on the hoof. The chair had recognized he and I had offered an amendment. I do not believe that any Member can take me off my feet in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Florida can not speak, nor can anything else be done after the point of no quorum is made until that point is determined.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But can the point be made when I am on the floor addressing the committee?

Mr. MANN. That is the way the point is usually made. Mr. CLARK of Florida. But the gentleman could not be recognized to make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois was recognized and he made the point that there was no quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I had risen and had addressed the Chair and offered an amendment, and was proceeding to discuss it. The parliamentary inquiry is, How any other man when I am on the floor, and I had not yielded it, get the attention of the Chair to make the point of no quorum, or to make any other point or motion?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the parliamentary school advocated by the gentleman, I withdraw the point [Laughter.] of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a Member can not secure the floor under the five-minute rule and then yield his time to another Member.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now Mr. SIMS. rise, and I ask unanimous consent to print the report of the committee in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor and had been recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he incorporate within his motion that the committee report the bill H. R. 8853, which was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I incorporate that within my motion.

The report of the committee is as follows:

[House Report No. 288, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS IN ACCORDANCE WITH FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS REPORTED UNDER BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1915) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts, submit the following report:

This bill, as indicated by the title thereof, has for its purpose the making of an appropriation necessary to pay various claims which have been referred by preceding Congresses to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman Act and the Tucker Act, which have been tried by the Court of Claims and reported back to Congress for final action. These acts are hereinafter set forth.

Owing to the fact that it has been nearly seven years since provision was made to honor these findings of the Court of Claims, the amount carried by this bill is $1,551,583.56, covering 1,057 claims. Proper legislative regard for the decisions of the Court of Claims would dictate the making of necessary appropriation for payment of such findings at least once in each Congress; but that has not been done, and the result is the present Congress is confronted by a large number of adjudicated claims, some of which have been awaiting appropriation for about seven years past.

Most of the claims included in this bill have already received the anglusted of the claims included in this bill have already received the angluster of the claims included in this bill have already received the angluster of the claims to the claims and the received the angluster of the claims to the claims and the received the sum of the claims to the claims and the received the sum of the claims to the claims are constituted to the claims to the claims are constituted to the claims to the claims are constituted to the claims to the claims to the claims are constituted to the claims to the claims are constituted to the claims to t cated claims, some of which have been awaiting appropriation for accuseven years past.

Most of the claims included in this bill have already received the approval of both Houses of Congress, in Senate bill No. 7971, Sixty-first Congress, which passed the Senate on December 20, 1910, and in H. R. 32767. Sixty-first Congress, which passed the House on the legislative day of February 17, 1911. So far as war claims were concerned, said bills were practically identical, but neither of them received the approval of both Houses of Congress.

PREVIOUS APPROPRIATIONS UNDER THE BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS. The first general appropriation for payment of findings of the Court of Claims under these acts was made in the Fifty-first Congress. Prior to that time various individual appropriations had been made for payment of Bowman Act findings, aggregating $128,158.73.

The total of appropriations heretofore made to pay claims allowed under these acts is as follows:

207)
Fifty-eighth Congress (act Feb. 24, 1906; 33 Stat., 743) 1, 197, 272, 60
Sixtleth Congress (individual act) 3, 390, 00

Total 4, 069, 723. 52

The claims covered by this bill may be divided, generally, into three different classes, as follows:

(1) Claims of officers and soldiers of the Union Army for the difference between the pay received by them and that which they should have received, arising, in most instances, from failure of the Government to pay them for the period between date of reporting for duty and date of actual formal muster in, amounting to $59,576.93.

(2) Claims of churches, Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges, schools, hospitals, and a few municipal corporations (not at seat of war), for use and occupation of their buildings, with incidental damages thereto, and also, in some instances, for materials taken from buildings and used for military purposes, such as construction of quarters, etc., amounting to $456,386.21.

(3) Claims of individuals for Army stores and supplies found by the Court of Claims to have been taken under proper authority for Army use, amounting to $1,035,560.42.

ANALYSIS OF BILL BY STATES AND BY CLASSES OF CLAIMS.

ANALYSIS OF BILL BY STATES AND BY CLASSES OF CLAIMS.

While it is needless to say that the committee in the preparation of this bill has been guided solely by the merits of each claim, as set forth in the findings of the Court of Claims, without regard to the particular class to which it belongs or to the geographical point at which the claim arose or in which the claimants reside, it is thought proper to inform the House just how the appropriations are distributed, both by classes of claims and according to States, and below will be found a table giving this information.

Under the head of "Churches, lodges, colleges, etc.," are included a few claims of municipal corporations not at seat of war, such as cities and counties.

Referring to the above table, it may be remarked that it is almost self-evident that the actual distribution will be even wider than indicated, owing to the fact that many of the claims, while formerly presented in the names of administrators in the States wherein the decedents formerly lived, are actually prosecuted in the Interest of numerous heirs, who are now scattered over the entire United States. In one instance brought to the attention of the committee one-half of a claim listed as an Alabama claim will be actually paid to a resident of New York City. In another case the beneficiaries of a Virginia claim reside in the State of Washington. The table, however, is prepared from the findings of the Court of Claims.

Every claim included in this bill has been made the subject of favorable findings at the hands of the Court of Claims under either the Bowman Act or the Tucker Act, so that the facts of each case have been judicially determined.

These claims were referred to the Court of Claims either by resolu-tion of one of the Houses of Congress, under the terms of section 14 of the Tucker Act, or by your committee, under the terms of the Bowman the Tucker Act, or by your committee, under the terms of Act.

After such reference the claimants have proceeded to establish the facts of their claims under the rules prescribed by the Court of Claims by adducing testimony of witnesses, as well as record proofs when pertinent. In some instances the taking of the property for which claim was made was established by production of original receipts given by Federal officers.

In connection with proceedings before the Court of Claims, concerning which there seems to have been at times some doubt and misunderstanding, it may be stated that the proof of a claim before that court is no mere formality. All witnesses are examined in the presence of counsel representing the Government, familiar with this practice, and each witness is subjected to the test of cross-examination. In cases of considerable size separate investigations are also conducted by counsel for the Government, and if this field investigation discloses any facts adverse to the claim testimony is taken on behalf of the Government, also subject to cross-examination by counsel for the claimant. Owing to the fact that witnesses to material facts have become widely scattered, it not infrequently occurs that testimony is taken in several different places, and sometimes in several different States, the attendance of counsel for both the United States and the claimant being a necessary incident to the taking of depositions.

In short, the proceedings under the rules of the Court of Claims are practically such as are taken in ordinary courts, with both sides represented by counsel, the principal difference between the trial of such cases in the Court of Claims and the trial in ordinary civil courts being that the Court of Claims does not permit counsel representing the United States to admit any material fact, but in every instance holds the claimant to strict proof of all the basic facts of his case.

One fact the committee desires to emphasize, and that is, that this bill does not include by any means all of the claims which have been tried by the Court of Claims under the Bowman and Tucker Acts. Many such claims, in fact the great majority of them, have been made the subject of adverse findings which has caused them to be eliminated from consideration in connection with the preparation of this bill.

The reports of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the defense of cases in the Court of Claims show that since the enact-

Many such claims, in fact the great majority of them, have been made the subject of adverse findings which has caused them to be eliminated from consideration in connection with the preparation of this bill.

The reports of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the defense of cases in the Court of Claims show that since the enactment of the Bowman Act on March 3, 1883, and of the Tucker Act on March 3, 1887, practically two claims out of every three that have been referred to that court under these acts have been either dismissed or made the subject of adverse findings, and it further appears that even when allowances have been made by the Court of Claims the claims have been so scaled down or reduced by the court that the total of favorable findings during the long period mentioned, of about 28 years, has been only about 8 per cent of the total amounts claimed in all the cases referred.

It is thought by your committee that even this small percentage includes some claims wherein findings have been made favorable on property, but adverse on loyalty, and which under existing practice will therefore not be p. id.

In the natural court, of events, the proportion or percentage of favorable findings in war claims must be less in the cases still pending than in those already tried, owing to lapse of time and the impossibility of adducing the amount and character of proof demanded by the Court of Claims.

The records of your committee also show a decided diminution in the number of new claims presented for reference to the Court of Claims which have been made the subject of consideration by the committee in the perparation of this bill have been omitted from the bill by reason of the unusual facts or questions of law involved, even though the committee has been inclined to recommend payment. It was deemed advisable, however, to have such claims presented separately, by individual bills, in order that the House might any reasonable difference of opinion.

More detailed explanation of the various classes of claims

CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS OF THE UNION ARMY.

It would appear to have been a general rule of the War Department, doubtless proper in its ordinary application, to deny to an officer of the Volunteer forces pay of any rank in which he had not been formally mustered. In short, the muster rolls were made the sole criterion by which to determine whether or not the officer was entitled to the pay and allowances of a certain rank; if the rolls showed him to have been mustered in as of a certain rank, he was held entitled to that pay and those allowances appurtenant to that rank; otherwise not.

It was found, however, that often this rule worked a great hardship, in that officers were duly commissioned by the governors of their States and that they actually performed the duties and functions of the rank to which they had been commissioned, notwithstanding the fact that they had not been mustered in as of that rank.

In recognition of this hardship, Congress passed the joint resolution which was approved July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. L., p. 368), reading as follows:

Joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army.

Joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army,

Joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army.

Be it resolved, etc., That in every case in which a commissioned officer actually entered on duty as such commissioned officer, but by reason of being killed in battle, capture by the enemy, or other cause beyond his control, and without fault or neglect of his own, was not mustered within a period of not less than 30 days, the Pay Department shall allow to such officer full pay and emoluments of his rank from the date on which such officer actually entered on such duty as aforesaid, deducting from the amount paid in accordance with this resolution all pay actually received by such officer for such period.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the heirs or legal representatives of any officer whose muster into service has been or shall be amended hereby shall be entitled to receive the arrears of pay due such officer or the pension provided by law for the grade into which such officer is mustered under the provisions of the first section of this resolution.

Approved, July 26, 1866.

Approved, July 26, 1866.
Later legislation upon this subject is that of the act approved February 24, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 593), reading as follows:

An act to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces.

the volunteer forces.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who was duly appointed or commissioned to be an officer of the volunteer service during the War of the Rebellion, and who was subject to the mustering regulations at the time applied to members of the volunteer service shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States in the grade named in his appointment or commission from the date from which he was to take rank under and by the terms of his said appointment or commission, whether the same was actually received by him or not, and shall be entitled to pay, emoluments, and pension as if actually mustered at that date: Provided, That at the date from which he was to take rank by the terms of his said appointment or commission there was a vacancy to which he could be so appointed or commissioned, and his command had either been recruited to the minimum number required by law and the regulations of the War Department, or had been assigned to duty in the field, and that he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so appointed or commissioned; or if not so performing such duties, then he shall be held and considered to have been mustered into service and to be entitled to the benefits of such muster from such time after the date of rank given in his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: Provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been absent by reason of wounds, or in hospital by reason of disability received in the service in the line of duty, at the date of issue of his appointment or commission, if a vacancy existed for him in the grade to which so appointed or commissioned, shall be entitled to all the benefits to which he would have been entitled under this act if he had been actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was appointed or commissioned at said date: Provided further, That this act shall be construed to apply only in those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when the commands of the persons appointed or commissioned were not below the minimum number required by then existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the pay and allowances actually received for the period covered by the recognition extended under this act shall be deducted from the sums otherwise to be paid thereunder.

Sec. 2. That the heirs or legal representatives of any person whose muster into service shall be recognized and established under the terms of this act shall be entitled to receive the arrears of pay and emoluments due, and the pension, if any, authorized by law, for the grade to which recognition shall be so extended.

Sec. 3. That the pay and allowances of any rank or grade paid to and received by any military or naval officer in good faith for services actually performed.

In that case the court also used the following language:

"The court is not unmindful of the learned argument addressed to it by the Assistant Attorney General, but it is also remembered that this suit affects not the claimant alone, but a class of citizens who deserve well of their country and who their country desires should receive the full measure of legal justice to which they may be entitled. For them there is no appeal to the Supreme Court; for the defendants there is. If this suit be decided adversely to the claimant by this court, the decision will be final against all of these soldiers. They are men who rose from the ranks by hard fighting and good conduct, earning their commissions before they got them and working for them after they came; and it seems a strange anomaly that six years after the war ended such men should be driven to seek the fruits of their promotion in a court of justice."

On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the decision of the Court of Claims was affirmed in favor of the claimant. (See U. S. v. Henry, 17 Wall., 405.)

INCOME TAX DEDUCTED FROM PAY OF OFFICERS.

INCOME TAX DEDUCTED FROM PAY OF OFFICERS.

The Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision on the income tax erroneously deducted from pay of officers, to wit:

"Where a right to pay and allowances accrued prior to August 1, 1870, the income tax authorized by laws enacted prior to that date is a proper stoppage against such pay and allowances, but where the right to collect pay and allowances for services rendered prior to August 1, 1870, did not exist until created by a law enacted after July 31, 1870, no part of the pay and allowances is taxable." CLAIMS OF CHURCHES, MASONIC AND ODD FELLOWS' LODGES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, HOSFITALS, AND MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS NOT AT SEAT OF WAR.

COLLEGES, HOSPITALS, AND MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS NOT AT SEAT OF WAR.

The greater number of these claims, which aggregate the sum of $429,936.21, are for use and occupation of buildings, by proper military authority, for Army purposes, usually for use as hospitals.

These claims were referred to the Court of Claims under the terms of the Tucker Act, the exact provisions of which will be hereinafter stated. Where the claim is for use and occupation of buildings it usually includes the item of incidental damages, it being the obvious duty of the Government to leave the buildings in as good condition as they were in when taken into the possession of the military forces.

Others of the claims of this general class are for the demolition of the buildings, the materials from which were used in the construction of quarters, or, in case of brick buildings, for building chinneys and bake ovens in camps, etc. In these cases, following its uniform practice, the Court of Claims has found the value of the buildings as they stood at the time they were torn down.

In this regard the practice in claims of religious, educational, and eleemosynary institutions is different from that in the claims of individuals. If the house belonging to an individual be torn down and the materials converted to proper military use, the Court of Claims would require that it be shown how many feet of lumber or how many thousand bricks were secured from the building, and it would then make an allowance for so many thousand feet of second-hand lumber or for so many thousand second-hand bricks. Under this rule it might well happen that for a building worth $5,000, when torn down, the allowance made by the court would be only a few hundred dollars.

This rule (and the distinction between claims of these institutions and those of private persons) is stated by the Court of Claims in its decision in case of the Presbyterian Church at Murfreesboro (33 C. Cls., 339). The opinion in that case reads as follows:

"The invariable rule which has governed the cou court has never allowed for property taken to be destroyed or for the damages which the owner suffered by reason of the taking. Where houses were come down and trees felled for military as one nothing has been allowed. Where fruit trees and fences were taken for fuel the owner has been allowed only for so much cordwood. Where a building was torn down and the material used the allowance has been for so much old brick and second-hand lumber. Where a blooded stallion was taken for Army use the allowance has been simply for a Cavalry horse. Where an imported cow was killed and eaten by the troops the allowance has been only for so much beef. Where the property taken was of a kind which could not properly be regarded as quartermaster or commissary stores, or as hospital supplies, or engineers' material the taking has been allowed. In a word, the general principle which governs the court is that the amounts allowed are to be only to the extent of the court of the court of the court and the property taken was of a kind which could not properly be regarded as quartermaster or commissary stores, or as hospital supplies, or engineers' material the taking has been allowed. In a word, the general principle which governs the court is that the amounts allowed are to be only to the extent of the court of the property which the owner suffered.

"The present case, in finding the value of the building, may seem a departure from the rule which has hitherto governed the court—the first and only exception out of the hundreds of cases of war claims which have been tried and disposed of in the course of the last 15 years. The reason for this departure from a well-settled rule is this:

"The proceeding in cases coming into this court under the Bowman Act is not to obtain a judgment fixing with finality the legal rights and inbitities of the parties, but simply a proceeding to procure for Congress such facts as will be available and useful when the question of legislative relief shall come before the two Hunses.

"In the proceeding in

ordinary individual claims for stores and supplies.

Ordinary individual claims for stores and supplies.

Claims of this class are shown by the petitions forming a part of the statements of each case as certified by the Court of Claims to usually embrace such items as horses, mules, cattle, hogs, corn, meat, fodder, fencing used and considered as cordwood, and, in some instances, use and occupation of real estate at regular military posts, sometimes for considerable periods.

In this class of cases, covered by this bill, the Court of Claims has found the person from whom the property was taken in each case to have been continuously loyal throughout the Civil War, and that the property was taken by proper authority, for use of the Army, or, in claims for rent, that the reasonable rental value of premises occupied during the period of occupancy, with the damages incident to the occupation, amounts to a certain sum.

As set forth in the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Presbyterian Church at Murfreesboro, no allowance is made for depredations, such as the taking of poultry, money, jewelry, etc.

The jurisdiction of the Southern Claims Commission, to which more extended reference will be hereinafter made, was a narrow one as prescribed by statute and was rendered still more so by the rulings of the commission.

That commission had no jurisdiction of a claim for rent; it held that a corporation was not a citizen and therefore that it could not prosecute a claim before the commission, as it had authority to inquire into the claims of those who during the war were aliens could not be presented to that commission, as it had authority to inquire into the claims of only persons who were citizens of insurrectionary States, and who were found loyal.

It was held by that commission that a claim presented by one who had passed through bankruptcy must be rejected.

On the subject of loyalty, it held that not only must loyalty be proven of the person from whom the property was taken, but, in event of his death, o

"First. Was the person from whom the property was taken, i. e., the owner of the property, loyal to the United States Government throughout the Civil War?
"Second. Was the property for which claim is made appropriated, by proper authority, to the use of the Army, and what was its value to the Government?"

In the cases embraced in this bill, the first question has been answered in the affirmative by the Court of Claims, and it has further found the property to have been taken by proper authority, for use of the Army, and has reported its value to the Government, according to the then current prices being paid by the quartermaster and commissary departments of the Government.

LACHES.

This is a question occurring only in cases referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act. No case can be referred to the court under the Bowman Act which has become barred by nonrepresentation. In its actual application to war claims this means, in effect, that if a claim was properly presented to the Quartermaster General or to the Southern Claims Commission, and was rejected, it might be referred to the court for further judicial inquiry and the submission of additional evidence

Later the rule was amended by the commission so as to apply only in claims for $5,000 or more. The hardship of even the amended rule was evidently recognized by Congress, and by act of May 11, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 97), it was provided that testimony must be submitted before the commissioners in person only in claims of $10,000 or more.

It would seem from an examination of the index of claims filed before that commission that many claimants were unable to comply even with this requirement, as many claims for more than $10,000 were reported as barred for nonprosecution.

While it would appear that in providing for the establishing of this this requirement, as many claims for more than $10,000 were reported as barred for nonprosecution.

While it would appear that in providing for the establishing of this commission Congress intended that claimants should be given opportunity to secure a fair hearing of their claims, the reports made by the commission show that proceedings before the commission were characterized by anything but fairness.

Special agents were appointed by the commission, who made investigation of claims after the claimants had adduced their evidence. This investigation was purely ex parte and secret. The reports of the commission show that even when a claimant desired to be present, either in person or by his counsel, at the examination of witnesses called by the special agent for the Government, this privilege was denied. In many instances claims are shown to have been rejected solely upon ex parte affidavits thus taken by special agents, and in some instances statements were submitted in opposition to the claim, which statements were not even verified.

It is small wonder that people in general had but slight confidence in the good faith and fair intention of a tribunal which adopted such star-chamber methods of procedure.

Finally, only 10 months after the enactment of the statute which permitted the taking of testimony locally in claims for less than $10,000. Congress enacted the act approved March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. L., 577), which provided:

"That the commissioners of claims shall not receive any petition for the allowance of any claim or claims unless such petition shall be presented to and filed with them on or before the 3d day of March, 1873."

From the very terms of the statute, taken in connection with the date of its approval, it will be seen that it went into effect on the very day it was approved. In other words, the right of citizens to file their claims before that commission was abrogated without a day's notice.

Careful examination of the act establishing the claims commission shows that it contained no provision limiting the time within which claims might be filed before the commission, and no time limit for presentation of claims to the commission was ever fixed until the passage of the act of March 3, 1873, which cut off the right to file such of section 14 of the Tucker Act and of the substituted section 151 of the codification, and so clear was the demand for the elimination of that provision that the two Houses of Congress agreed to an extraordinary manner of elimination by the adoption of a concurrent resolution to that effect, directing that the provision be stricken from the bill before final enrollment.

That action, taken by both Houses, would seem susceptible of no construction other than that of an express approval of what has been said by this committee, to the effect that when a claim has been found by the Court of Claims to possess merit, and it is a case of a class in which no real, complete, adequate, and legal remedy had been afforded, then no laches is imputable, but the claim should be paid regardless of delay in its presentation.

With relation to this matter of delay or laches, it is further the view of your committee that if a line is to be drawn against any claims by reason of delay in their presentation, and the drawing of which line would preclude their payment, then, as a matter of plain justice to the claimants, it should be drawn when the claim is presented to Congress, so that the claimant in such case could be apprised at the outset that his claim is not such a one as will receive favorable consideration.

When the claim has been entertained by Congress, however, and has been referred to the Court of Claims; when the claimant has secured services of counsel; has adduced his evidence in support of his claim, and has brought his case to trial before the Court of Claims; and when that court has actually heard the arguments and has tried the case, and has reported that the claimant remained loyal throughout the Civil War, and that property of a certain value was taken from him for the use of the United States; when all these steps have been heretofore paid by Congress, as constituting at least an equitable demand upon the United States; when all these steps have been taken, it is the judgment of your committee that it is then

THE TUCKER ACT.

[24 Stat. L., p. 505.]

An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

(This is an act providing for the prosecution of general jurisdiction cases, except section 14, which relates to congressional cases, and is as follows:)

SEC. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 8, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

Approved March 3, 1887.

REPEAL OF BOWMAN ACT AND AMENDMENT OF TUCKER ACT BY THE JUDICIAL CODE.

On March 3, 1911, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," was approved. (Public act No. 475, 61st Cong., lating to the judiciary, was appeared as a second and provision of the Revised Statutes and acts and parts of acts are hereby repealed:

"SEC. 297. The following sections of the Revised Statutes and acts and parts of acts are hereby repealed:

"An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government, approved March 3, 1883."

The provision quoted repeals absolutely the entire Bowman Act, under which many claims have been heretofore referred to the Court of Claims by order of the Committee on War Claims and of the Committee on Claims. That act presented a method of referring claims to the Court of Claims, provided the claims were not "barred" by any statute of the United States, which relieved the Houses of Congress of the necessity of formal action by the adoption of resolutions of reference, and its repeal is regretted by this committee.

This repeal leaves only one method for the reference of claims by Congress to the Court of Claims, which is provided by section 151 of said act of March 3, 1911, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 151. Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may, for the investigation and determination of facts, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with such rules as it may adopt and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be calimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy, together with such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim, legal or equitable, o said court."

The above-quoted provision in effect is a substitute for section 14 of the Tucker Act, under which claims have been referred to the Court of Claims since 1887. It means that each claim presented to Congress must be made the subject of an individual bill for relief of the claimant, and that such bill must be referred to the Court of Claims by resolution of the House in which such bill is pending, just as has been heretofore done under the Tucker Act.

Said act of March 3, 1911, went into effect on January 1, 1912.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the committee do now rise and report the bill H. R. 8853 with an amendment, with a favorable recommendation, and that the committee had come to no resolution on the bill H. R. 19115.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WITHERSPOON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8853) for the relief of John L. Baird and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass; and that the committee had also had under consideration the bill H. R. 19115, the omnibus claims bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the bill (H. R. 8853) for the relief of John L. Baird.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 3, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee infinite Spirit our heavenly Father for the widespread and growing interest in the world-wide peace, and we most fervently pray that it may continue to grow until it possesses the minds and hearts of all the peoples of all the earth, that the vast expenditure of means, energy, and life may be conserved for the higher and nobler pursuits of life. This we ask in the name of humanity, in the name of the Prince of Peace, in the name of God our Father. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of Senate bill 252, to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, and ask that the same be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, is that motion in order at

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that motion is made by direction of the Committee.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is not made by direction of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not in order. The Chair will read the rule:

By unanimous consent, or on motion of the committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that as at present advised there has been a proper reference, and, therefore, until I can acquire other and different information on the subject, I shall be constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

AMENDMENT TO BULE XXVII, CLAUSE 4.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report (No. 297) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 407.

Resolved, That Rule XXVII, clause 4, be amended so as to read as

House resolution 407.

Resolved, That Rule XXVII, clause 4, be amended so as to read as follows:

"4. Any Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from further consideration of any public bill or joint resolution which may have been referred to such committee 15 days prior thereto. All such motions shall be entered in the Journal and printed on a calendar to be known as a Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. After the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday, and motions to suspend the rules have been disposed of, it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least 7 days prior thereto.

"Recognition for such motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered. When such motion shall be called up, the bill shall be read by title only prior to a second being ordered by tellers, and no such motion shall be entertained as to a bill or joint resolution the title of which contains more than 100 words; after the reading of the bill by title the motion shall not be submitted to the House unless seconded by a majority by tellers; if such motion falls of a second, it shall be immediately stricken from the calendar and shall not be thereafter placed thereon. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be immediately stricken from the calendar and shall not be thereafter placed thereon. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be immediately of a majority of the membership of the House. Whenever such a motion shall prevail, the bill so taken from the consideration of a committee shall thereupon be placed upon its appropriate calendar, and upon call of the committee from which any bill has been so taken it may be called up for consideration by any Member prior to any bill reported by said committee at a date subsequent to the discharge of said committee: Provided, No Member shall have upon such calendar more than two motions at the same time."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of th

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time that side would like?

Mr. DALZELL. How much would the gentleman suggest?
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will 20 minutes on a side be enough?
Mr. DALZELL. Oh, this is a very important matter, and I think we ought to have more time than that.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DALZELL. I think we ought to have at least three-quarters of an hour on a side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think there will be no objection to that, and if that is satisfactory to the gentleman I make the request that the time be limited to 45 minutes on a side, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one-half by myself, and that at the end of the hour and a half the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution.

Does the gentleman desire to cut off the right Mr. MANN.

of amendment?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not believe it will be a good idea to have any amendment offered to it. I do not think we ought to consider an amendment offered in a hurried fashion. The rule has been worked out very carefully and probably we would better not take up the question of amending it further.

Mr. DALZELL. What was the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I asked whether it was in order under the gentleman's proposition to offer amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. I very much desire an opportunity to offer one amendment to this rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understand, and tried to confer with the gentleman this morning, but as this has been worked out so carefully I can hardly see how any amendment would be opportune at this time.

Mr. POU. I would like to ask the gentleman if he offered his amendment when this matter was pending before the committee?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the gentleman that I was not present at the meeting of the committee through no fault of the committee. I was not present at my office and did not receive the notice until after the committee had adjourned, so that I had no opportunity to offer the amendment which I would have offered had I been there.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe the gentleman would object to the amendment which the gentleman from Wisconsin has.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. He might not, but probably it had better go to the Committee on Rules and let them consider it there first. I renew my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to one hour and a half, 45 minutes to be controlled by himself and 45 minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], and that at the end of the time stated the previous question will be considered as ordered on the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists on the previous question being considered as ordered as a part of his motion, I think I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LEN-ROOT] objects.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think I shall have to insist, and move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The resolution having already had some debate, if the previous question is now ordered will there be 20 min-

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was not intended as debate.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair would construe what has happened literally, there would be 40 minutes' debate, but the Chair will not do anything of the sort.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think the Chair is right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Division, Mr. Speaker. The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 37.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 157, nays 103, answered "present" 5, not voting 127, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Sheppard, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business.

AMENDMENT TO BULE XXVII, CLAUSE 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to amend the rule pertaining to what is commonly known as the Calendar to Discharge Committees. The proposed amendment simply contemplates putting suspensions of the rules second in the proposed of leaving these suspensions. the provisions of the calendar instead of leaving those suspensions to be third, as the rule now provides. In other words, instead of motions on the Discharge Calendar being called second on the day for calling the Unanimous Consent Calendar it shall hereafter be third. That is to say, the Discharge Cal-endar shall be called third, and the suspension shall be called second. It reverses the present order as to the suspension and discharge calendars. That is all there is in the proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DALZELL. I very much regret that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] insisted on calling for the previous question and thus shutting off debate on the amendment, for the reason that this resolution now presented affects one of the most important rules in the House. It is the rule that was passed on the 17th day of June, 1910, by the concurrence of all the various factions of this House. It was concurred in by those who are called "Regulars," and it was concurred in by those called "Insurgents" or "Progressives," and by the Democrats on the other side of the aisle, then in the minority, as a measure of reform.

In reporting the rule as chairman of the Committee on Rules I said it was a unanimous report from that committee. The gentleman who was then the leader of the Democratic Party on the floor of the House, now our honored Speaker, said:

When it became apparent that Members were anxious to have a rule on the subject reported before the end of this session, the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules day before yesterday spent four whole hours in cogitating about this rule, and the result of that cogitation was that I introduced this rule into the House myself.

And he says:

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMs] inquired if this is the one of reform. No; it is not. It is, however, a long step in the right

The gentleman from Kansas, my friend Mr. Murdock, one of the high priests in the temple of reform, said:

I am for it for a third reason. It will take away from the Speaker, in large part, the right of arbitrary recognition on suspension days, for it will in a measure do away with all suspension business, as all motions under this rule will have precedence over motion to suspend

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If this amendment should prevail, would the power reside in the Speaker to refuse to recognize one whom he could not refuse to recognize on a suspension day?

Mr. DALZELL. Absolutely. The intention of this rule is to clothe the Speaker of this House with the power that was taken away from him by the adoption of the original rule. The reason for the adoption of this original rule was that there did not reside in this House the power to discharge a committee having custody or jurisdiction of a bill that the House wanted to consider and which the committee did not wish to report.

The only legitimate way of discharging a committee from the consideration of any bill before it, that existed prior to the passage of this rule, was by a motion to suspend the rules and discharge the committee. The whole power rested in the hands of the Speaker, and the reason why this rule was passed was that that power should be taken out of the hands of the Speaker. Now, if you put the motion to suspend the rules in advance of the motion to discharge the committee, it is in the power of the Speaker to dictate what committee shall be discharged and what committee shall not be discharged, or whether any; what bills shall be taken from the committee and brought into the House, or whether any. In other words, the passage of this amendment to the rule is simply to rescind the rule and absolutely to destroy its effect. It will take away from the individual Members of this House the power of initiative and place that power in the hands of the Speaker. Ah, gentlemen of the majority, you are on the back track. Your reforms are all sham reforms. You have transferred the power of appointing committees from the Speaker to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means selects the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Ways and Means Committee ostensibly select the members of all the other committees of the House. You have simply changed names. Instead of Cannonism and Reedism and Crispism you have Underwoodism. [Applause on the Republican side.] My friend from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] wears his robe and carries his scepter as one to the manner born. You have practically taken from the Committee on Rules every function except that of ordering investigations. Under the old rules it required a majority vote, or a majority of a quorum in this House, to vitalize any resolution proposed by the Committee on Rules relative to the legislation of the House. Now, all you have to do is to have a majority of a majority; that is to say, the majority of a Democratic caucus, and now you propose to go one step further and reclothe the Speaker with the power that you took away from him. You propose to take away from the individual Members the power that under the rule you gave to them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes. Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, if this rule is adopted, you Democrats will undo in 40 minutes what it took a campaign of 2 years to do. That campaign was waged in the newspapers, in the magazines, on Chautauqua platforms, and on the stump, The country was fanned into a fury for a reform that would give power to the representatives of the people by taking that power away from the Speaker. Many rules were adopted, but those who wanted real power for the representatives of the people were not satisfied until the rule was adopted that enabled the House to discharge a reluctant committee from the consideration of a bill. When that was done, it was pro-claimed to the country that we had brought this House back to the people, and upon that boast and that issue the Speaker of this House and the leaders of the present majority went be-fore the country and made a campaign. They said, "We now have rules that were made by reformers. It is necessary that we shall retain these rules, and in order to do that we must have a Democratic majority, because the wicked Republicans will make an opportunity and inaugurate a reaction against these rules." The country believed it, and many of you gen-tlemen on that side are holding seats pro tempore made on that campaign. Your terms began 11 short months ago; you have conducted the business for general legislation 3 short Your terms began 11 short months ago; you months; and to-day you have inaugurated a reactionary move-ment. Are you not satisfied with the exercise of the power that was given you by clause 4 of Rule XXVII, giving you the power to take away from a reluctant committee a bill that it refused to report? Why are you giving this power so recently taken from him back to the Speaker of this House?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I can not yield; my time is too short. Mr. Speaker, why has this reaction been inaugurated? Is the Speaker tired of occupying an easy chair; does he long for the old power, responsibility, and political leadership of the office in other days? Is it his desire for power, or is the gentleman from Alabama tired of the lash and the reins together? From this day on we shall have two sitting on the box, the Speaker of the House holding the reins and the gentleman from Alabama using the lash. [Laughter and applause on the Repub-Heretofore the gentleman from Alabama has done both. Is that the reason you have offered an amendment that will emasculate this rule, or is it because you are tired of being driven, like reluctant slaves, between tellers, voting down bills that you have declared that you were in favor of? You have already voted against many bills that you have declared for on every stump in the country and in your districts. against the following bills under the rule you to-day nullify:

A bill providing for the physical valuation of railroads, A bill to regulate the hours of work of post-office clerks employed in first and second class post offices.

A bill granting pensions to soldiers confined in so-called Confederate prisons

A bill providing that the statute of limitations shall not be interposed in any suit brought by any laborer, workman, or mechanic in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover wages claimed to be due him under the national eighthour law.

A bill to extend the penny-postage rate on local-delivery firstclass mail matter to post offices where the system of free delivery is established.

A bill to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of widows."

A bill to create a tariff board (by Mr. PAYNE).

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

A bill to provide and pay additional compensation to the rural free-delivery carriers of mail in the United States and providing an appropriation therefor.

You voted all these bills down. Every Democrat voted against them while every Republican voted for them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] were as accurate as he appears earnest he perhaps would contribute more to the value of this discussion. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] What have we here? A simple proposition, which in no way goes to the method of procedure under the discharge rule, but which simply declares that motions to suspend the rules shall have preference over the Discharge Calendar. That is to say, that the Speaker may recognize gentlemen to make motions to suspend the rules before he orders the Discharge Calendar called. Why? Because it is found to be necessary to make the change in order to do the business of the House. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Why, that is a very candid statement about the matter. newed laughter. I realize gentlemen on that side laugh at candor. The reason it is found to be necessary is that upon the last discharge day—not in good faith but for purely fili-bustering purposes—that side of the House abused the discharge rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It was then used to carry on a facetious filibuster by gentlemen on that side who did not desire to do the public business and who are not now, and will not be for many years, charged with the responsibility of carrying it on. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied two minutes. Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is a very simple proposition, notwithstanding the mountain the Republican side seems disposed to try to make out of it. It was never intended by any sensible legislator that the Discharge Calendar rule should be anything but a piece of extraordinary legislative machinery. It was never intended to invest any Member of the House as a matter of ordinary right with the privilege of challenging any committee that was ordinarily and fairly responsive to the will of the majority of the House. It was only intended to fit an emergency like that which existed in this House in days gone by when the great committees in this House denied to the people of the United States of America the legislation to which they were entitled. When the committees of the House failed to meet such demand it was necessary to devise some sort of machinery by which we could grant the demands of the American people. Let me say frankly to both sides of this House that the rules of the House are intended to conduct business, and they are only distasteful to the American people when they put legislation on the people that the people do not want or do not approve, or deny to the people the legislation that they demand.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. And if you gentlemen had heard the people in the years gone by, possibly your side would be in the majority this time, but the gentlemen would not hear.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was about to suggest that if the gentlemen on that side do not continue to hear they will

Mr. HARDWICK. Not on account of a lack of acuteness of hearing. Our ears are to the ground.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then, from a lack of percep-

Mr. HARDWICK. Possibly, in the gentleman's judgment, but to that suggestion we do not agree.

But, Mr. Speaker, the proposition is simple enough. We simply say this extraordinary piece of legislative machinery ought not to be used to block the ordinary and usual machinery of this House. I admit my good friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has demonstrated that it is quite possible to so block that machinery on every suspension Monday since this rule has been in force. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman having demonstrated that expert filibustering can use the rule in its present shape to block the ordinary business of the House we present shape to block the ordinary business of the House we propose to so amend the rule that it can not be so used, and give the House the opportunity to transact business under ordinary conditions, leaving the rule in existence to meet an emergency, whenever that emergency arises. I hope such emergency never will arise, as it so often did when the other side was in power. I hope the time will never come when this side of the House will stand in the way of legislation demanded by the American people.

The argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] is utterly unsound. The proposition that is presented here to-day does not change the suspension rule a single iota; it does not increase the present power of the Speaker in reference to suspensions.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Would it not be within the power of the Speaker to absolutely prevent reaching the Calendar of Motions to discharge committees?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all. Mr. DALZELL. Five recognitions by the Speaker of motions to suspend the rules would exhaust a legislative day, and he could prolong the legislative day beyond limit by multiplying his recognitions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the gentleman that the Speaker now, as the rule is written, has exactly the power that the gentleman refers to in motions to suspend the rule. The power of recognition is still vested in the Speaker, as it has always been vested in the Speaker, and no man on either side of this Chamber has ever proposed to vest it in anyone else.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true, but the exercise of that power by the Speaker would prevent the operation of the rest of the

Mr. HARDWICK. Unless the gentleman stands by a proposition that he wants to repeal entirely motions to suspend the rules and pass a bill, unless the gentleman stands on this floor and advocates a proposition that he thinks the Speaker ought not to be intrusted with any power of recognition, then his argument is more meaningless than any I have heard him make since I have been a Member of this House. The truth is that this rule does nothing except say that we will put the ordinary, usual piece of legislative machinery ahead of the extraordinary and unusual piece of machinery, but that we will preserve the latter for an emergency, and for an emergency only, [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, if we pass this rule which is now proposed, it would have the same effect as though you wrote across the rule now in the book the following words: "This rule shall have no effect and be of no validity except in cases where the Speaker wants it to be." [Applause on the Republican side.]

You clearly place it within the power of the Speaker to com-pletely nullify the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, just as much as though it were not written in the rules The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] of this House. says that rule was intended only to meet an emergency. Let us admit that. This change will cripple it so that it can never meet an emergency unless the Speaker wants it to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. NORRIS. Not at the present time. If I had the time I would be very glad to yield. Let us see exactly what the parliamentary situation is. Under this rule as it now exists, as it came originally last Congress from the Committee on Rules with a majority report, voted for practically by every Member of the House, on days when it is in order to move to suspend the rule we have a Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, which can be taken up for consideration. The rule provides that the motion to discharge committees shall have precedence over the motions to suspend the rules. This proposed rule now changes it and gives the motion to suspend the rules precedence over motions to discharge committees. What will be the result? The Speaker, as the gentleman from Georgia says, has supreme power of recognition in motions to suspend the rules. He may recognize or not recognize. He may recognize one Member and decline to recognize another. He has that power now, if we can reach it. The way this rule will be nullified, if the Speaker wants to nullify it, will be for him to recognize some friend on that day to move to suspend the Then another friend can demand a second and 40 minutes of debate can be taken up. He can do that over again, and with roll calls coming in he can exhaust a week instead of a day if he wants to. Then what will become of your motion to discharge committees?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. NORRIS. I will yield first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker], who first asked permission to ask a question.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. In connection with what the gentleman was saying awhile ago, I want to ask if we have any rule now by which it is possible to discharge a committee? In other words

Mr. NORRIS. I will take that question up. We do have——
Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. In other words, does not the rule now on the book make it impossible to discharge a committee because of the vote required to discharge it, and is it not very

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that the rule ought to be more liberal than it is. I will be glad to vote for a proposition that would make it more liberal, but this proposition absolutely nullifies it.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. It is nullified now; it is not worth a cent.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time. I will agree to the proposition that I would like to make the rule more liberal than it is now. All the fight that has been going on in this House for the last three years could be put going on in this House for the last three years could be put down in a nutshell in one sentence. It was a fight to take power away from the Speaker. This is a proposition to take some of the power we have taken away from the Speaker and given to the House and give it back to the Speaker. [Applause on the Republican side.] Every Member who believes the Speaker has now too much power, as I think he has in some respect, ought to be opposed to this backward step absolutely. It is contrary to the great advance that has been made in this House in regard to the great advance that has been made in this House in regard to lessening the power of the Speaker and giving power to the It is a step backward. It is a surrender individual Member. of the rights of the individual Member and a wonderful increase of the Speaker's power. We fought hard, long, and bitterly to take away the tyrannical power of the Speaker. This is to surrender part of the gai. and make an absolute czar of the Speaker on suspension day, and to do even that by the application of the gag.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand there is to be but one speech on the other side in closing?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is right.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes. Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, as we have observed the action of the Democratic majority from time to time in reference to questions of procedure in the House, we are often led to exclaim that "It is hard to tell from the looks of its track whether it is going or coming back." But, in this particular instance, Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt whatever as to which direction the Democratic majority is facing. It is backward. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] say that this is a simple proposition. It is; but I am sorry they have not frankly stated what the proposition is, for its effect is to repeal the rule so far as it relates to the Discharge Calendar, and nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, if this rule is adopted so long as either the Speaker of the House desires to prevent the call of the Discharge Calendar, or so long as the Speaker of the House is impartial enough to recognize Members upon the floor without discrimination to move to suspend the rules, just so long will this Discharge Calendar fail of being called at any time in the future. It is said by the gentleman from Georgia that this is to prevent a filibuster. Why, the gentleman from Georgia must know that if the Speaker is willing to recognize Members for suspension, as I believe this Speaker would be, for he has shown himself to be impartial and fair; so long as he is willing to do that any little group of half a dozen Members might prevent the call of the Discharge Calendar although four-fifths of the House might desire the call of the Calendar to Discharge Committees.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield to the gentleman; I have only

Again, it is said that this Discharge Calendar is an emergenc, proposition, and that suspension of the rules is the ordiroutine of the House. Mr. Speaker, it is my deliberate judgment that the suspension of the rules should be an emergency proposition quite as much as the Discharge Calendar, and no gentleman upon that side in this debate has referred to a single bill now pending for the passage of which public interest demanded a suspension of the rules. He can not do it; and the only purpose of asking for this rule now is not to expedite the public business, but in order that certain gentlemen—I will not make any charge as to who they are—may have some recognition for their own particular minor bills as against other measures of equal importance. Again, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any proposition that will restore suspension of the rules without opportunity for Members of the House to know before the motion is made what bill will be called up under suspension. The amendment that I desired to make, if afforded an opportunity, was simply that if this suspension of the rules is to be restored, that there should be a suspension calendar, and that no motion would be in order for suspension of the rules as to any particular bill unless that bill had first been placed upon that suspension calendar, so that the Members of this House might have notice as to what would be called up under suspension.

No man who has had any experience in this House can fail to realize that this matter of suspension has been abused in the past; that time after time bills have been called up and passed through this House without any opportunity for Members to investigate or study them. It is not necessary under the suspension for a bill to be placed even upon the ordinary calendar. It may be reported from the committee to-day, and if it is suspension day it may be immediately passed after 40 minutes' debate.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not necessary that it shall even be reported. They can move to suspend the rules and pass a bill that has never been introduced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. Mr. Underwood]. Mr. Underwood. Mr. Speaker, the proposition offered by the Rules Committee to the House meets with my approval. The rules now provide that on every second Monday the Calendar for Unanimous Consent shall be called. After that is finished the Discharge Calendar shall be called, and when that is disposed of the motion to suspend the rules shall be in order. Motions to suspend the rules have been a part of the procedure of this House from the beginning. It is one of the most important rules of the House and one of the rules that is most favorable to legislation here. The only reason that it is necessary to make this change proposed by the Rules Committee is that the gentlemen on that side of the House have filibustered against this Discharge Calendar, so that it has become impossible for the House to work under the rules of the House as they are now constituted. Let me call your attention to what that side of the House has done with this Discharge Calendar that it claims to be of so much value. I agree with them that it is a matter of value to this House if honestly, fairly, and properly administered.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I decline to yield. Here is the calendar, which I hold in my hand. There are now on this calendar 67 motions to discharge committees of this House from the business before them. More than that, of these 67 motions to discharge committees 44 were placed on this calendar before this House had been in session 30 days in the extra session. We met on the 15th day of April, and you filled this calendar with over 44 motions-because some of them have already been disposed of-before the 15th day of April. A large percentage of them were to discharge the Committee on Invalid I'ensions from the consideration of bills before that committee. You knew it could not act at that extra session. You knew that the Democratic caucus had pledged itself not to go into general legislation, and also had pledged itself to report a pension bill to this House, and notwithstanding that you put these motions on the calendar to block the consideration of other business.

The House has acted, as it pledged itself to do, on a pension bill. And yet gentlemen on that side of the House still maintain motions on the Discharge Calendar of the House, calling on the House to discharge the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the consideration of bills.

Mr. MANN. There was no way to get them off under your rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; there is. Unanimous consent can take them off in a minute.

Mr. MANN. It can not. There is no way to get them off under the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We can do anything in this House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. We have to get the recognition of the Chair for that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the Chair will give you recognition.

Mr. MANN. He has refused to do so and has stated so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You have blocked this calendar, not with matters of emergency, not with matters that were of such great importance as if you had found a committee of the House was blocking legislation. You fillbustered this Discharge Calendar and filled it full of motions so that nothing could be reached before the legislative committees in this House had had the opportunity to consider the bills that you proposed to discharge them from the consideration of.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, that is the real situation here. The motion to suspend the rules and pass legislation is more important and more effective in this House than even a motion to discharge a committee and place a bill on the calendar. And why? In the first place it requires a two-thirds vote. It can not be taken advantage of by a party majority. Whenever we suspend the rules and pass a bill at least some of the Members on that side of the House must join with this side in order to do it. It can not be a partisan question. It must be a question of such vast importance and such far-reaching merit that men will lay aside partisanship and agree to its immediate Its effectiveness is far greater than the process of discharging a committee, because under the Discharge Calendar rule you merely discharge the committee and put the bill on the regular and proper calendar in the House to which it must belong, and after that it must have the opportunity to be reached on the calendar before effective legislation can be worked out. But when you come to the rule to suspend the rules you do not even have to have a report of a committee. If a bill is on the calendar, you can take it up from the calendar. question is of such moment and such vital importance that twothirds of this House are in favor of it you can, on suspension day, by merely getting the recognition of the Speaker, immedi-ately pass the bill or resolution and send it to the Senate.

Now, as to the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], that we are trying to restore something to the Speaker that we have taken away from him, nobody has ever raised the question that the Speaker should not have the power of recognition in this House. He must have it in order that the House may conduct its business in an orderly manner. Nobody is willing to rise on this floor and charge the Speaker of this House with a desire improperly or unfairly to administer his office by intending to recognize men improperly to suspend the rules in order to filibuster and block the Discharge Calendar, as you gentlemen who sit on that side of the House have filibustered and blocked the calendar to suspend the rules of this House.

If it is necessary to pass this rule to make this amendment in the rules of the House, there is nobody responsible for the action that is necessary to be taken other than the gentleman who sits on the farther side of the center aisle from me. Look at the list of the men who report the motions on this Calendar to Discharge Committees before the committees had a chance to act. They are all from that side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this resolution be extended for two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] and one hour by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the request stated by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this resolution be extended two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] and the other hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I object. Mr. MANN. I am not surprised that you are afraid of discussion.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed, "nay."

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 153, nays 102, answered "present" 6, not voting 131, as follows:

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Butler, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. BARTLETT. I voted in the affirmative. I desire to change my vote and to answer "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who spoke on the resolution may be allowed to extend their remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that those who spoke on the resolution have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire for how long a time?

Mr. DALZELL. I make the request at the instance of another Member. I should say five days.

The SPEAKER. Five legislative days? Mr. DALZELL. Yes. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 18956, the Army appropriation bill, and pending that I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince] whether we can agree upon time for general debate.

Mr. PRINCE. In answer to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I will say that I have a number of applications for time, and I wish the gentleman would let the debate run for a while until we can determine something as to the desire for debate.

Mr. HAY. Very well.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. HAY was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the

When Mr. SAUNDERS took the chair there was general applause on the floor of the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill reported by title. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation of $88,853,757 for the military establishment for the next fiscal This is a reduction of $3,734,028.79 over last year's bill and a reduction of $8,074,231 over the estimate made by the War Department for the Army. [Applause.]

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in arriving at this sum for the support of the Army the committee is very well assured that the amount appropriated in this bill will be amply sufficient to maintain and carry on with efficiency the military service of the Government. In the strictly appropriation items of the bill there are no items which are particularly new. There are some changes in verbiage and some new provisions which can better be explained when we come to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

There are certain legislative provisions upon the bill which have been placed there for the purpose of economy, for the purpose of reducing annually and perpetually the expenses of maintaining the military establishment. It has been said that these provisions ought not to be placed on an appropriation bill; that it would be better to introduce them in a separate bill. Well, Mr. Chairman, if there were any likelihood of their being considered elsewhere and being passed upon at this session of Congress, or during this Congress, it might be that we would have reported them as a separate measure. But in order to have these provisions acted upon and considered we have thought it best in the interest of the country, in the interest of economy, to put these provisions upon this bill. Nor have they been hastily considered. They were contained in va-rious bills introduced during the extra session of Congress, They were considered by the committee at that time, hearings were had, and an opportunity was given to everyone to come before the committee and state his views. Since the beginning of this session of Congress the Secretary of War and Army, officers have been before the committee and have discussed these legislative provisions.

The first provision to which I will call the attention of the committee is one which provides that the term of enlistment in the Army shall be made five years instead of three years. Upon its face it will manifestly produce a large economy; as a matter of fact, we have the figures from the War Department which show that if this becomes a law the annual expense of the military establishment will be reduced $2,230,000 a year. It is stated by those who oppose this provision that it will increase desertions; that it will make recruiting more difficult; and that it will impair the efficiency of the service. All these propositions I deny.

The evidence before us is overwhelming that the service will not suffer in any way by increasing the term of the enlisted men; that there will be no more trouble in obtaining recruits than there is now; that there will be no more desertions than there are now; and that we will have a better Army, a betterseasoned soldiery, than we have to-day.

It has been said that it will increase the number of men on the retired list. There can be no foundation for a contention of that sort, because there will be no more men serving in the Army under the five-year enlistment than now serve under the three-year enlistment.

It has been stated that it will increase the pension list. The mere statement of the proposition is to show to anybody that instead of increasing the pension list it will decrease the pension list, because under the five-year enlistment during a period of 15 years three men would enlist, while under the three-year period in 15 year's time five men would enlist. So there would be five men who would be more likely to be placed on the pension list than if there were only three men serving during that

So, without at this time going any further into the discussion of this question, we confidently affirm that this provision will not in any way impair the efficiency of the Army and that it will work out a great economy in the military establishment.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Section 2, page 48, of the bill has relation to the uniforms in the Army. I wish the gentleman would explain the proposition in reference to that.

Mr. HAY. The provision to which the gentleman refers is one which provides that no change of uniform of officers and enlisted men shall be made by the War Department without the approval of Congress. That provision was put in the bill by the committee because of complaints of Army officers of the great expense to which they have been put by the constant change in uniform, and because it has caused a great deal of expense to the Government in the uniforms of enlisted men, because as fast as they adopted one uniform they changed it, and the old uniform became obsolete. That caused expense to the Government.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I see that the bill provides that it shall be in accordance with the orders of the War Department made on the 25th of May, 1911. Is that the last order of the War Department with reference to uniforms?

Mr. HAY. No; I think it is not. The last order has been recently made, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment which will conform to the last order, because under the last order, I assume, a great many officers have bought their uniforms and the enlisted men also have been furnished uniforms. Therefore I shall make it conform with the last order, so that no further change can be made without the consent of Congress.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. So the uniforms will remain, then, practically as they are now.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I now come to the third section of the bill, which provides that there shall hereafter be no per cent added to the salaries of officers and enlisted men for foreign service. Under the present law every officer who serves in the Philippine Islands gets 10 per cent additional and every collisted man gets 20 per cent. In 1908 Congress increased every enlisted man gets 20 per cent. In 1908 Congress increased the pay of the Army from 25 to 40 per cent for officers and enlisted men, and when that matter was before the Committee on Military Affairs it was stated by Army officers that if we would increase the pay to the amount which they then advocated it would not be necessary to continue this increased pay for foreign service. That pay was not increased in a separate bill. It was increased by an amendment placed upon the bill when it went over to the Senate and the matter of foreign-service pay in conference. This foreign-service pay was con-By cutting off this foreign-service pay we would save $1,016,000 a year. The conditions under which that pay was first granted are very different from what they are now in the Philippine Islands. This pay applies only to the Philippine Philippine Islands. This pay applies only to the Philippine Islands. The conditions there are very much better from every standpoint, and the Surgeon General, in his report, shows that the health of the Army in the Philippines has in every way improved and continues to improve. I do not believe that there is any reason for continuing this foreign-service pay.

I want to call attention here to something with which per-haps some Members of the House are not familiar, and that is that every officer of the Army, including all officers up to and including the rank of captain, get for every 5 years of service 10 per cent added to their pay up to and including 20 years of service, when they get 40 per cent added to their salary. For instance, the pay of a captain is $2,400 a year. After he has served 5 years 10 per cent is added to that, after he has served 10 years 20 per cent is added, after he has served 15 years 30 per cent is added, and after he has served 20 years 40 per cent is added, so that the pay of a captain who has served 20 years is $3,360 a year.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does that apply to officers below the grade of captain?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it applies to lieutenants and captains. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if an officer has served 10 years and is then commissioned as a captain, does he get $2,400 plus 20 per cent?

Mr. HAY. Yes

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And if by the time he has reached the grade of colonel, when he will probably have served 20 years, will he receive the salary of a colonel plus 40 per cent?

Mr. HAY. No; the salary of a colonel is $4,000 a year, and under the law he can not get more than $5,000; so if he has served 20 years he gets $5,000 a year as a colonel.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The effect of that is that colonels get $5,000 a year? Mr. HAY. Always.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No man ever reaches that rank in less than 20 years?

Mr. HAY. It would be a very rare case if he did. The pay of a lieutenant colonel is $3,500 a year.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There was one other question that I wanted to ask on a branch of the subject that the gentleman has just passed, and that was as to the health in the Philippine Islands. The gentleman says that the Surgeon General's report shows that the health of soldiers in the Philippines is very much better than it was a few years ago.

Mr. HAY. A great deal.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How does it compare with the health of soldiers in other places than the Philippines, as in the Hawaiian Islands or in Alaska?

Mr. HAY. I do not recall that he has any statement or comparison as between different foreign possessions of the United

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How would it compare with the health of soldiers here on the mainland?

Mr. HAY. It is not quite as good as the health of the sol-diers within the confines of the United States, but it is constantly improving and the conditions under which they serve are a great deal better than when the foreign-service pay was

As I say, the foreign-service pay only applies to the Philippine Islands; it does not apply to troops serving in Alaska, in Hawaii, or in Porto Rico. And I might also state that an en-listed man serving in the Philippine Islands is credited with double time, so that after he has served there 15 years he is put on the retired list, and in this country he has to serve twice that time before he is put on the retired list.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That does not mean 15 years continuously?

Mr. HAY. No; every year he serves there counts two years toward his retirement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, does that apply to the commissioned officer also?

Mr. HAY. No; it does not apply to the commissioned officer. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is this discontinuance of foreign pay recommended by the Secretary of War?

Mr. HAY. It is not. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does he oppose it?

Mr. HAY. I think he does.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. On what grounds, please?

Mr. HAY. Well, I really can not state his position. If the gentleman will read these hearings—since the gentleman asked me the question, I do not believe the Secretary of War expressed any opinion upon that particular subject.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I will say to the gentleman I will be glad to read the hearings, but it is only one of many things we have to read, and this is about the best way of obtaining information.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman seemed very much interested in the subject.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I will be glad to read them if I

Mr. HAY. But I recall now the Secretary of War did not express any opinion upon this particular phase of the bill. As I was going to say, the pay of a lieutenant colonel is $3,500, and he can get under the law $4,500 after he has served 20

The pay of a major is $3,000, and after he has served 20 years he gets $4,000 a year; and not only do these officers get the pay and this additional per cent, but they have a great many emoluments in the way of allowances of various sorts and kinds, which it is not necessary for me to go into but which amount to a good deal, and I do not think that any people in any other walk of life are better taken care of than does the United States take care of the officers and men of our Army.
Mr. TILSON. May I ask the chairman a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not an undisputed fact that an officer who goes to the Philippines has additional expenses that he does not have in this country?

Mr. HAY. I suppose some of them have; yes. Mr. TILSON. They have to keep up two establishments, for instance-either do that or take their families to the Philippines.

Mr. HAY. If a man has a family, of course he has. If he has not, he does not. It depends upon whether he is married

Mr. TILSON. Does he not have additional expenses in the way of additional uniforms that he must have, in order to go to tropical countries, that he does not have to have here?

I suppose so; but I will say to the gentleman-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly. Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not true that when the pay of officers and enlisted men was increased in the year 1908, I think it

Mr. SLAYDEN (continuing). It was done to meet the argument advanced and the conditions referred to by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that in this service in the Philippine Islands they had some expenses which they did not have at home? That was an argument advanced for increasing the pay.

Mr. TILSON. But the fact remains that there is still an nequality if this is taken away from the men who go to the

Mr. SLAYDEN. Inequality between whom? Mr. TILSON. Between the men who go to the Philippines and those who do not.

Mr. HAY. All go to the Philippines. Mr. SLAYDEN. They all go; that is an incident of the service

Mr. TILSON. They do not all go at the same time?
Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly not; one goes now and another to-morrow, and so on, and it equalizes itself.
Mr. TILSON. But their service in the Philippines is not of equal length?

Mr. HAY. That is not the fault of Congress; that is the fault of those who order them there; but I will say, Mr. Chairman, that while I desire in every possible way to provide in a most generous manner for the officers and for the enlisted men of the Army, yet I think that we are not here altogether to legislate for their benefit, but that we must take into consideration in some degree the interest of the taxpayers of this

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman recall that any officer or other person appeared before our committee in favor of taking away this foreign-service pay?

Mr. HAY. I do not-you mean before the present committee?

Mr. PRINCE. I do.

Mr. HAY. I do not.
Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman recollect of any officer appearing before the committee opposing the taking of it away? Mr. HAY. I do. I think all of them do, and I think it is very natural. Mr. PRINCE. Well, I wanted to let the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union know that this provision was the act of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. I stated that.
Mr. PRINCE. I was busy and did not hear the gentleman.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think it is a self-evident fact that would need no inquiry.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. On page 61, line 9, of the bill, it reads:

That hereafter service as a cadet of the United States Military Academy or as a naval cadet or midshipman shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army.

I would like to ask the gentleman if he regards that as retroactive?

Mr. HAY. I regard that as taking away from those who are now enjoying it the additional 10 per cent or 20 per cent, or whatever it may be, if this becomes a law. It will stop, and they will only get that per cent for actual service in the Army and not for service in the Military or Naval Academy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It never was provided for by law. Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. As you construe it, would it be retroactive?

Mr. HAY. No; it is not retroactive in the sense that the word is used in applying it to the civil law.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. It would apply to those Mr. HAY. Who are on the active or retired list. I am coming to that provision, but will discuss it now if the gentleman desires me to do so.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would like to ask if the Secretary of War approves of that?

Mr. HAY. I do not know, but I believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] or some other Member of the minority told me that he did. Did I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] to say so?

Mr. PRINCE. Please put the question again.

Mr. HAY. I understood from some member of the minority the other morning, and I think it was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony], that the Secretary of War had approved of that provision in the bill as to the service of the cadets at the Military Academy not being computed when you come to compute their pay. It is the last provision in the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not recall having any conversation with you about it. Perhaps it was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] with whom you talked.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. SLAYDEN. What statute is repealed by this proposed law taking from the cadets at the Military Academy an increase of pay because of length of service?
Mr. HAY. There is no statute whatever on the subject. It was the result of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I take it from the reading of the bill that that would operate to reduce the pay of the officers who now receive it.

It would reduce the pay of the officer who gradu-Mr. HAY. ated at the Military Academy and now receives increase of pay because of four years at that institution.

Mr. MANN. If the House passes this, as I apprehend it will, if it is not subject to a point of order—which matter I have not investigated-will it put the House on record so that it will pass with the gentleman's approval those claims that have been hanging around for a long time to allow this longevity pay to officers who had-

Mr. HAY. To what claims does the gentleman refer? Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that this was th The gentleman knows that this was the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, including the length of service at the two academies?

Mr. HAY. Made years ago-in 1881, I believe.

Mr. MANN. I think not as long ago as that.
Mr. HAY. Well, in 1881 or 1882.
Mr. MANN. Of course, when that decision was made the officers filed their claims.

Mr. HAY. It was in 1884.
Mr. MANN. They filed their claims for their pay, so far as they could file their claims, with the Court of Claims, but the statute of limitation barred a lot of them. We have in the House here, as amendments to the omnibus claims bill, a whole stack of those amendments, running back to 50 or 60 years, and very insistently urged upon Congress. I know at one time I got myself very much disliked both in and out of the House by insisting that those claims had no moral standing, and as they had no moral standing they ought not to be paid.

Mr. HAY. Well, now, what is the gentleman's question? Mr. MANN. My question was whether the gentleman will agree with us, or with me, so far as I am concerned, that when we pass this that settles the claim business?

Mr. HAY. Certainly. It is not necessary for me to agree again with the gentleman. I had already agreed with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to have a public expression from the gentleman, so that we would not be bothered with them

Mr. HAY. I have not heard of them at this session. Mr. MANN. They are hanging around still, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman has called my attention to this provision of the bill, although it does not come in order, I might as well discuss it now. Under this decision of the Supreme Court every man who graduates at West Point is given this 10 per cent increase on his flat pay after he has served in the Army only one year.

Mr. MANN. And in the Navy it is still worse. The term of instruction is six years at Annapolis?

Mr. HAY. Yes; but I am not discussing the nature of it These men are at West Point receiving instructions, receiving an education at the expense of the United States Government. They are paid a certain salary while they are there, and they count that term of four years spent at the academy as a part of their service in the Army. It is a fact that a majority of the officers of the Army are not graduates of West Point, but have been appointed from civil life. The man from civil life has to serve five years in the Army before he can get this additional 10 per cent, so that it is not only unjust to the United States for the Government to pay a man for a service that he has not performed, but it is an unjust discrimination against those officers of the Army who enter it from civil life.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HAY. I do. Mr. AMES. I want to get the facts before the House, as I know the chairman also wishes, in their true light. When the gentleman says that the cadet at West Point is paid a salary, he simply means that the bare necessities of life are paid for by the Government?

Mr. HAY. He gets $620 a year.

Mr. AMES. And out of that he gets nothing but his clothing, his heat, his light, his books, and the things he has to use clothing to wear and food to eat.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does he not accumulate a surplus?

Mr. AMES. No. On the other hand, I understand he incurs a deficit.

Mr. HAY. How many young men throughout the country are there who would not be glad to receive $620 a year to be expended for food and clothing and fuel and light and books, in addition to receiving an education?

Mr. AMES. There are two classes of boys who go into the Army; one class which goes into the Army directly and the other which goes there through the Military Academy. The boy who is willing to take the oath of allegiance to the United States for eight years goes to the academy and serves four years there before he gets his commission in order that he can get an education and be a better soldier. The other boy is appointed from civil life, and he is not as good an officer because he has not had the same preliminary training. Why should not their longevity pay determine from the same date?

Mr. HAY. It should determine from the beginning of their service in the Army.

Mr. AMES. Under that it would take eight years.

Mr. HAY. That is an incident to the boy's getting into the Military Academy.

Mr. AMES. Is he not a better officer?

Mr. HAY. Whether he is or not is a question. Some are and some are not.

Mr. MANN. Will the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill yield to me for a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly. Mr. MANN. I understand the purpose of the gentleman is to place all these officers on the same basis?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform us how an officer becomes a commissioned officer in going up from the

Mr. HAY. He gets his time because he has been serving the Government of the United States in the Army in the ranks. I think that is only fair.

Mr. MANN. They are not now all on the same basis?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. MANN. I asked the question for information. I did not know what the ruling was

Mr. HAY. Yes. I think that is such a clear proposition that it is not necessary for me to dwell upon it.

Now, the third section of this bill is the most important section, and, in my judgment, it will bring about a great deal of economy as well as increase materially the efficiency of the Army. It provides for a consolidation of the Paymaster's, the Quartermaster's, and the Commissary Departments into one department, to be known as the supply corps.

This proposition has been recommended by many Secretaries of War. It has been recommended by all of the eminent mili-tary authorities of this country, and I believe that this is the first time that a measure of this sort has been brought before the Congress in such a way as will enable us to carry it out.

This section will save annually, in dollars and cents, $538,000, and it is estimated that in the efficiency which will be brought about by the consolidation of these departments a great deal more will in time be saved. Under the present system the Paymaster General attends to one branch of the supplies for the Army, the Commissary General attends to subsisting the Army, and the Quartermaster General attends to all the other activities which go toward supplying the Army with what is necessary for its support. If all these departments are brought under one head, you will have a coordination and an efficiency which you have never had before. I have quoted in my report at length from the opinion of the Secretary of War, from the opinion of the Chief of Staff, and from the opinions of other officers, showing that they desire and believe that this consolidation ought to take place. They object to some—Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. AMES. While what the gentleman says is quite true, that the Secretary of War and Chief of Staff do approve of such consolidation, do they approve of the consolidation as you have laid it out?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman had possessed his soul in patience, I was just going to point out the objections which these gentlemen have made to the provision which has been embodied in this bill by the committee. I was joing to say that they object in the first place to cutting off the officers that will be cut off from the Army under the provisions of this bill-40 in number-because they say that they have not enough officers in the Army now. When you consolidate a great business one of the purposes of that consolidation is to effect an economy in employees, and when we consolidate these three departments we want to effect, if we can, besides efficiency, an economy in officers. We have done that, not arbitrarily, but upon statements made by the heads of these three departments to the Secretary of War that it could be done. We have done it upon the statement of the Chief of Staff himself that an economy of personnel could be effected. We have done it upon the statement of the president of the War College, Gen. Wotherspoon, that an economy of personnel could be effected.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Certainly. Mr. HAY.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that at the present time a considerable share, at any rate, of the duties of these departments, especially of the Quartermaster's Department, are performed by officers of the line, who are for that purpose taken away from the troops which they ought to command?

Mr. HAY. It depends very much upon what the gentleman calls the duties of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. TILSON. Are there not a number of these officers who are doing quartermaster's duty and taken away from their commands?

Mr. HAY.

No; not taken away from their commands.

N. They are not performing their duties with Mr. TILSON. their commands.

Mr. HAY. They are not detached from their commands.
Mr. TILSON. No; but they are not performing their duties with their commands. They may not be detached in the technical sense of the word, but they are not performing their duties in the line.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman very well knows that there is in every regiment of Cavalry and Infantry a surplus of nine officers. Mr. TILSON. I should not agree to that at all. They have their duties to perform.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman will not let me finish my statement. Every regiment of Infantry, for example, is composed of 12 companies, and it has 15 captains, 15 first lieutenants, and 15 second lieutenants.

These nine extra officers were provided by Congress for the purpose of doing staff duty, and it has been the custom since we had an Army, that line officers stationed at posts or stationed in the field performed the duty of post quartermaster and post commissary, and there is no good reason why they should not do it now. As I said a moment ago, they have been doing it all the time.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. HAI. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. While doing that some other officer of the line is performing their duty with the command.

Mr. HAY. They can perform these duties in addition to the line duty, and they do it constantly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman's memory is probably more accurate than mine, but my recollection is that the act of re-organization of February 2, 1901, specifically provided an addi-tional supply of officers for the purpose of having them do quartermasters' work.

Mr. HAY. Quartermaster work and commissary work and other work.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PRINCE. True it is, as our colleague on the committee says, but is it not also true that we have about 700 officers now doing work away from their commands—doing military duty and quasi military duty with the militia and at schools, or any work other than purely military work?

Mr. HAY. Yes; and you may say that we have 258 officers in the city of Washington, outside of those at the Washington Barracks.

Mr. PRINCE. That may be true, but are they not all properly at their places and discharging military duties?

They have all been ordered there; yes.

Mr. PRINCE. The question seems to be this: Provision has been made in the law for these extra officers to do the kind of work that they are doing, and the line has suffered by reason of taking officers away from the line to do work other than that which they ought to do, and yet the public demands it. would join with the gentleman in saying that every officer should be put at his place—send officers of the line to take their position-or that we should have enough officers to perform the requirement that the public demand of these officers, and I prefer the latter rather than the former; that is, to have the additional officers. I say to you that if you reduce the number of officers by 40 you will to that extent cripple the efficiency of the Army. I will not disagree with you on the consolidation. You will find no objection to that in our report, and you find no objection on the part of the Secretary of War to that, but to reduce the officers of the Army to that extent we do object.

Mr. HAY. I want to emphasize, in the first place, that the heads of the different departments have stated that this work can be done by this consolidated corps with 40 less officers than are now in that corps. Now, the question arises, Where do we save those officers? We necessarily have to save them from the officers of the line, because the staff officers are by law in their positions and they can not be legislated out of office. This bill does not legislate anybody out of office; it only provides that when a vacancy occurs under certain circumstances that vacancy shall not be filled. So that nobody's commission is taken away from him.

Now, the gentleman says the efficiency of the Army will be impaired by losing these 40 officers. I do not understand that that is true. In the last session of Congress we passed two laws—one giving 200 officers to the Army and another under which 75 officers were added to the Army, making in all 275 officers which have been added to the Army in the last two

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Will the Mr. HAY. Certainly, Mr. KAHN. Is it not Is it not a fact that the War Department requested 660 additional officers in order to properly carry on the work of the Army?
Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; they said "to properly carry it on."

Mr. KAHN. And the committee allowed 275? Mr. HAY. They allowed 200 officers on that, and the other 75 came from the passage of the bill adjusting rank.
Mr. KAHN. Of which 30 went to the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the Quartermaster General in his report stated that he required 216 officers to properly perform the duties of his department alone?

Mr. HAY. I am, and I am also familiar with the fact that the Quartermaster General stated that if this corps was consolidated with the others-that is, if the work of these three corps was consolidated-then all of the work of those corps could be done by the number of officers provided for in the bill.

Mr. KAHN. One hundred and eighty-three officers?

One hundred and eighty-three officers, or what-Mr. HAY. ever the number is.

Does the gentleman think that if one depart-Mr. KAHN. ment of the three to be consolidated requires 216 officers to perform the duty of that department alone, the work of the three departments can be performed by 183 officers?

Mr. HAY. I only know that the Quartermaster General of the Army is one of the most accomplished officers in the Army.

Mr. KAHN. I agree with the gentleman in that.

Mr. HAY. And I know this, that the Quartermaster General would never have made the statement that the work of these consolidated corps could be done by the officers provided for in this bill if he had not believed that it could be done; and I would rather take the opinion of the Quartermaster General on a proposition of that sort than the opinion of the gentleman from California or anybody else, because the Quartermaster General is fully informed about what work will have to be done and how it will have to be done. Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield further?
Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman I agree with the

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman as to the capabilities of the present Quartermaster General, but I simply desire to call to his attention, and to the attention of the House, the fact that in a report made a year ago he said he required 216 officers to do the work of his department alone. The gentleman now proposes to consolidate two other departments with that, and it is said that they can do all the work with 183 officers. I say that is an inconsistency, and it seems inconceivable that you can do the work of three departments with that number of officers when it has been stated that it requires 216 officers to do the work of one department alone.

Mr. HAY. It is not inconceivable at all. The very thing that we are trying to do is to bring about a consolidation and a coordination which makes it conceivable that 183 officers can perform these duties. Why? Because every officer in this corps can be used to perform all the duties which three officers are performing now. You have to have a paymaster to pay the troops, you have to have a commissary to issue subsistence stores, and you have to have a quartermaster to perform the duties of the quartermaster. Under this plan you can take one officer and he can perform the duty now being performed by three officers. That is the way it is conceivable.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not mean that statement in the way he makes it. The number of officers in the Pay Department is not the same number of officers as are in the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HAY. I know that.

Mr. KAHN. Nor is the number in the Commissary Department the same as in the Quartermaster General's Department. Therefore it does not take three officers to do the work of one.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California seems to be singularly dense about this matter. I said it takes one officer-

Mr. KAHN. I am dense about some things that have been stated with reference to this bill, and the gentleman will have to "show me," even though I come from California. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. I will try to do so. I did not say it in the way in which the gentleman from California said it. I said that now you have to employ an officer to pay the troops, and you have to have a commissary officer to subsist the troops, and a quartermaster to attend to the duties of the Quartermaster Department; but under the provisions of this bill 1 officer could do what the 3 officers are now doing at a post, for in-

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.
Mr. BATES. Under the present regulations will the chairman of the committee inform us if the man denominated as paymaster performs any other duty than that of paymaster?

That is all.

Mr. BATES. Are they purchasing agents at present?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. BATES. Is their time all taken to pay the officers and men, or does the gentleman's scheme intend to draft their idle moments into the duty of quartermaster and commissary, as For instance, in the Navy there is no officer to in the Navy. correspond with the quartermaster.

In other words, we have consolidated

Mr. BATES. Nor have they a commissary, but the paymaster in the Navy pays all three. He is the paymaster; he is the commissary; and he is the quartermaster, although part of the Navy are on shore and part afloat.

Mr. HAY. That is what we want to do with the Army

Mr. BATES. And the paymaster, so denominated in the Army, at present only performs the duty of paymaster.

Mr. HAY. That is all. Mr. BATES. And he is not the purchasing agent at all or the accounting agent?

Mr. HAY. He does nothing but pay the troops.
Mr. MANN. And draw his salary.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. In section 4 there are three establishments—quartermaster, commissary, and paymaster—and there is a total in the quartermaster's office of 216 officers. How many are there in the others?

Mr. HAY. There are not 216 officers in the Quartermaster

General's Department.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How many are there in each of these departments?

Mr. HAY. There are 223 in all.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Can the gentleman tell us how they are divided?

Yes; I can do that. Mr. HAY.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Thank you.

Mr. HAY. I can tell the gentleman in a moment, if he will bear with me. I am taking too much of the time of the committee as it is. There are now in the Subsistence Department 44 officers; in the Pay Department, 53 officers; and in the Quartermaster's Department, 126 officers; making in all 223

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Thank you. Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield further? Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that the Quartermaster General in recent years in his report has asked for 96 additional officers in that department alone?

Mr. HAY. He has in recent years, but he has not done it with a view to a consolidation, and the gentleman from California, instead of discussing what may be the duty of these officers in this consolidated corps, continues to dwell upon the fact that the Quartermaster General a year ago, or two or three years ago, asked for more officers for his special corps.

Mr. KAHN. I will ask the gentleman whether he can do the work of the three corps, one of which requires 216 officers alone, with 183 men? Does the gentleman himself believe it can be

I believe so upon the statement made by the Quartermaster General, whose opinion on this matter is worth as much or more than the opinion of any man, I do not care who he is, in the Army or anywhere else. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, continuing what I was about to say in regard to the objections to this proposition, another objection is that this bill provides that the chief of the supply corps should be a major general. The reason for that is this: Under the provisions for this supply corps the man at the head of it will have the disbursement practically of all the money carried in this bill, certainly $80,000,000 a year. He will be in command of 223 officers and about 9,000 men, and you ought to give to a man pay and station commensurate with the responsibilities which he has to bear. It has been asserted that if you do this you will make him the most important man in the Army. Well, that is not true, because he only has this rank while serving at the head of the supply corps. He is not a major general except when he is serving, and there is a provision in another section of the bill which provides that a man when he comes to the end of his detail at the head of this corps can be returned to the position from which he came.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. AMES. Was not the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs as to the rank of heads of supply corps or commissary department, which is the same thing, that the rank of major was what obtained in other armies, not that of major general?

Mr. HAY. Not at all; the evidence as I remember it was not anything of that sort. I understand that in the German Army the rank of the head of the supply corps is equal to that of a major general. Somebody may have testified that they only had a major at the head of a supply corps in some foreign army—I do not say they did not—but my recollection is that Gen. Sharp, the Commissary General, who had given this particular subject careful attention, testified that the rank, both in the French, in the German, and in the English Armies, was equal to that of a major general.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state what the rank of Gen. Meigs, the great Commissary General of the Civil War, was?

Mr. HAY. His rank was that of a brigadier general, but he did not have the Commissary or Pay Department under him.

Mr. TILSON. But he had an immense army under him? Mr. HAY. Yes; he did.

Mr. TILSON. Of many times what our Army is?

Mr. HAY. That is true. The Commissary General was at that time a brigadier general, I think. I do not recall that. But I do not think that is a parallel case with this. It has been said that the Chief of Engineers is as important as the chief of the supply corps and Chief of Ordnance. I do not think that can be seriously contended, because I am sure, if anybody examine into the duty of the chief of this supply corps and the responsibilities which rest upon him, it will be found that he will have responsibilities which no other officer in the Army will have. Mr. TILSON.

Do you not think that it might be embarrassing and subversive of discipline if the head of this supply corps should outrank the Chief of Staff?

Mr. HAY. I do not think the head of this supply corps could in any possible way outrank the Chief of Staff, because in this bill, in the last provision, it provides that the chief of the supply corps shall be under the supervision of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; but could he not outrank him?

Mr. HAY. Well, he might have a senior rank, but he is only a major general while so serving, and I think it would be a very rare thing if it ever happened at all.

Mr. TILSON. But it might occur under this bill.

Mr. HAY. Oh, it might possibly occur. The moon might drop out of the heavens, too.

Mr. TILSON. Do you not think it would lead to friction by having the Chief of Staff junior to the head of the supply corps?

Mr. HAY. The bill provides that the head of the supply corps shall be subject to the supervision of the Chief of Staff. So I do not think there is anything in that contention. I do not remember now any other objection to this supply corps. I believe we are agreed, both the majority and minority, that the principle of this supply corps is a good thing and ought to be put into operation. We simply differ on details as to the major general and as to the cutting off of the 40 officers.

Mr. KAHN. And as to the advisability of enacting this legislation before the Army itself is reorganized, so that the supply corps should fit a proper reorganization of the Army.

Mr. HAY. I understand that is a general objection to all the provisions, but I want to say that I have been hearing about this general reorganization for some time, and we can not afford to wait to bring about efficiency and economy until these gentlemen get ready to bring in this reorganization plan.

Mr. AMES. For the purpose of putting into the RECORD a statement by Maj. Shelton, I will read from volume 3, page 155, as follows:

If we had an organized Army, and with that proviso, I should agree in principle with this section. I think that there is no doubt that the duties of the Inspector General's Department are purely General Staff duties.

The gentleman can read that in his own time.

Mr. AMES. It was a question of recollection.

Mr. HAY. I will admit, if you please, that Maj. Shelton believes that a man ought not to be any higher than a major, but if you will read it you will find that he said that about The Adjutant General's Department, and not about the supply

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well if we can narrow the issue between the majority and minority as to this section. It seems to me this, that you want to dispose of and separate from the Army, by easy stages, 40 officers. We want to keep those 40 officers in the Army to do the work that officers are called upon to do, and we are opposed to the making of the head of this department a major general. On the economy sought there seems to be no dispute. So these are the only two issues in this section.

Mr. HAY. Yes; I understand that to be true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is recognized.

Mr. HAY. I want to say on this question of the necessity for officers in the Army, I am not advised that the Army is so much in need of this large number of officers. As I said a moment ago, there are 258 officers in Washington, outside of Washington Barracks, and they are sent to different parts of the country to do all sorts of work, a large part of it not military in its character.

I do not believe that the Army is going to suffer one particle by cutting off the 68 officers which are provided to be cut off by the provisions of this bill. If I did, I would not advocate it. I am not in favor of and I will not advocate any measure which would look toward decreasing the efficiency of the Army. I have always been ready, and I am ready now, to do anything in my power to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States; but while I am willing to do that I also desire, if I can do it without impairing the efficiency of the Army, to decrease in some measure the immense and enormous military appropriations which this Government is annually compelled to make. [Applause.]

Now I come to section 5 of the bill, which is designed to create a service corps. This proposition is for the purpose of having enlisted men perform a large number of duties which are now performed by civilians. The provision has been so drawn that it does not interfere with the clerks in any way, and it is also so drawn that these men who have been in the service a long time will not be displaced. It rests in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The people whom we propose to replace by enlisted men are teamsters, packers, wagon masters, and men of that sort. It is a matter which is not new at all. It has been advocated constantly by various Secretaries of War and by various Army officers, and the only reason why I should hesitate at all to advocate it would be the fact that we are enlisting under this bill 6,000 men in the Army, and before I would consent to doing that I had to be assured that these men whom we were enlisting would not cost as much as the civilians that we are now I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that these men will not be fighting men. They will be noncombatants, just as the members of the Hospital Corps are.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this does not interfere with the clerks in the department?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.
Mr. KAHN. It does not interfere, as I understand, with the clerks in the department here at Washington?

Mr. HAY. No. I mean to say there is no provision in this bill that authorizes the Secretary of War to remove a clerk from his position.

Mr. KAHN. Well, is there not a provision in this section which does provide for the retirement of the clerks and the putting in of a corps of enlisted men? Does not this section provide for that very thing?

Mr. HAY. It does; but it does not propose to get rid of them at once. I may say to my friend from California that when a clerk resigns or dies, if he fills a position which can be filled by an enlisted man, the purpose is to put an enlisted man in his place. That is all.

Mr. KAHN. But this section as it is drawn gives the Secretary power to put in enlisted men immediately. Mr. HAY. Oh, no. This section provides:

That as soon as practicable after the creation of a supply corps in the Army not to exceed 4,000 civilian employees of that corps, receiving a monthly compensation of not less than $30 nor more than $175 each, not including civil engineers, superintendents of construction, inspectors of clothing, clothing examiners, inspectors of supplies, inspectors of animals, chemists, veterinarians, freight and passenger rate clerks, employees of the Army transport service and harbor-boat service, and such other employees as may be required for technical work.

They are exempted especially in terms, and they comprise 889 employees, among whom are the clerks, as I am informed.

Mr. KAHN. The language which the gentleman has read refers entirely to the men who would do technical work, or practically so. The only kind of clerks that are exempted are freight and passenger rate clerks. Those are the only ones.

Mr. HAY. It is not so intended, as the gentleman perhaps knows, if he has talked with the Secretary of War about this particular section. It says "as soon as practicable," which leaves it within the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Now, everybody knows that the Secretary of War is not going ruthlessly to turn people out of employment and put enlisted men in their places.

Mr. MANN. Would he not be required to? Mr. HAY. Not at all, because it says "as soon as practicable."

Mr. MANN. "As soon as practicable" does not leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of War, except to determine whether it is practicable or not.

It may not be practicable in his judgment. Mr. HAY. will state to the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Illinois that I am willing to accept any amendment that will cover these clerks who are in the civil service. If they are not covered now, I am willing to accept any amendment which will cover them.

Mr. KAHN. That is what we have been asking for all the

Mr. HAY. I never heard the request made before.

Mr. KAHN. It was spoken of by myself in the committee. Mr. MANN. What the gentleman wants to accomplish, as I understand, is that as these clerks go out of the service they shall not be replaced by civilian employees.

Mr. HAY. Yes, that is right; and I think that is all that is contemplated or intended.

Mr. MANN. That will put a responsibility upon the Secretary of War that I would not want to assume if I was Secretary of War.

Mr. HAY. I admit it will be in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Now, if this section is adopted it will save $1,961,000 a year, and in computing that every possible cost which can attach to an enlisted man has been counted. His right to go on the retired list, his pension, if he should happen to get one, and everything has been taken into consideration, and, all those things considered, the amount of saving will be $1,961,000 annually.

One of the evils of the present system is that under it there are now 2,400 soldiers detached from their commands, privates and enlisted men, doing extra-duty work which ought not to be done by soldiers, but the service can not get along without detaching these men for that purpose. One purpose of this bill is to replace those men with these noncombatants or service-corps men, sending these soldiers back to their companies to perform the duties for which they enlisted in the Army.

Mr. MANN. In that connection will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Does the

Does the gentleman think it will be practicable to obtain enlisted men to perform this service at the rate of pay which can be given to them under the law?

Mr. HAY. In the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs both Gen. Sharpe and Gen. Aleshire stated that they would have no trouble in getting all the men they desired.

Mr. MANN. Would not these enlisted men of the service corps have to go in at the ordinary pay of enlisted men?

Mr. HAY. No. The pay of this service corps is the pay of the Signal Corps. If you will look at the provision you will find that there are provided 15 master electricians, and so on down. A master electrician gets $75 a month besides his clothing and subsistence; a sergeant, first class, gets $45 a month; a sergeant, $36; a corporal, $24; privates of the first class, $18; privates, $15; and cooks, $30 a month.

Mr. MANN. These officers which the gentleman enumerates

Mr. HAY. All enlisted men?
Mr. HAY. All enlisted men.
Mr. MANN. And they now receive the salary or pay which he indicates, and also subsistence? Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; they receive subsistence and clothing.
Mr. MANN. How much does it amount to

Mr. HAY. There is a statement in the hearings showing how much they receive. I regret to take up so much of the time of Mr. MANN. The gentleman is giving valuable information to the House.

Mr. HAY. There is a statement in the hearings showing what they would get, which I will find.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that in cities like Washington, San Francisco, or other large cities he can get the class of men to do the work performed by these clerks for the pay which enlisted men in the Signal Corps receive?

Mr. HAY. Yes; that is the information from gentlemen who ought to know.

Mr. MANN. I have great deference for the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia, if he has gone over it, but it seems to me rather a novel proposition.

Mr. HAY. I will say that the law provides in addition to the flat pay an increase of pay on reenlistment of $4 to the master electrician, first sergeant, and sergeant; $3 to corporals and privates; and $3 during the second and third year of enlistment. So, if they continue in the service, their pay necessarily increases. They also get clothing amounting to $44.84.

Mr. MANN. That is, uniform?

How much is the commutation for clothing?

increases. They also get clothing amounting to $44.84.

Mr. MANN. That is, uniform?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How much is the commutation for clothing:

Mr. HAY. Enlisted men do not get any commutation. enlisted man gets a certain clothing allowance, and if he has not used up all of his clothing during his term of service he gets pay for his clothing which he has not used.

Mr. MANN. Will all these men be in uniform?
Mr. HAY. I suppose they will—in the uniform of the supply

Mr. MANN. Clerks? Mr. HAY. I do not know about that; I would presume so. It is just like an enlisted man in the Hospital Corps; he does not fight, but he is in uniform.

Mr. MANN. He is not a clerk; I appreciate that. Mr. HAY. They do that kind of duty in the Hospital Corps. What is the objection? If a man has enlisted, what is the objection to having him clothed in uniform?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection; but the man might have an objection. It makes him too conspicuous.

Mr. HAY. That is true; but I do not see any reason why any man should have a hesitation in serving his country in the country's uniform. I do not think it is any reflection on any man to be a private or a noncommissioned officer.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman about that. I think it is far from being a reflection; but I notice that few people in this world desire when working along with citizens to be in uniform

Mr. HAY. They would not be working along with citizens; they would be working in their own corps and not with citizens.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if they were working with the clerks they would work with citizens.

Mr. HAY Veg. for a while

Mr. HAY. Yes; for a while.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman incorporate in his remarks a statement showing the total amount that would be received by each of these classes, both pay and commutation or al-

Mr. HAY. I will read it to the gentleman now. Master electricians would receive $1,143.81 a year; sergeants of the first class would receive $1,113.81 a year; sergeants would receive $1,010.81 a year; corporals would receive $851.81 a year; privates of the first class would receive $788.31 a year; privates would receive $753.31 a year; and cooks, $933.31 a year.

Mr. MANN. Does that include commutation or subsistence:
Mr. HAY. That includes everything—pay, commutation for quarters, food, clothing, and everything that the enlisted men of the Signal Corps now receive. Mr. MANN. The gentleman, as I understand, means he would get this amount of money, but if he got the money he would not get the food?

Mr. HAY. No. That is what it is worth in money, and in other emoluments.

Mr. MANN. If he gets it all in money, he gets that much? Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Yes, Mr. SLAYDEN. But he could not get it all in money?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAY. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. The gentleman's figures which he has just read to the committee indicate what the man would get in pay plus rations, and so forth?

Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman, in figuring out the savings to the country, taken into consideration the medical attendance that these men will get free?

Mr. HAY. I understood the Quartermaster General, when he testified before the committee on this subject, to say that he had taken everything into consideration, but I do not believe that the medical attendance has anything to do with it, because we have the surgeons in the Army anyway, and they have to go and visit these men in the Army if they are sick, and it does not cost us anything more.

Mr. KAHN. In some of the large centers, where they have large bodies of these men and only limited hospital accommodations, they will probably have to enlarge the hospitals. Mr. HAY. Where is there one of those centers where they have no hospital accommodations?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, they have, but the hospital accommodations are not too large for the enlisted men in the Army to-day.

Mr. HAY. These men would be scattered all over the country and there would not be any very large number of them at any one post, because you must remember that of these 6,000 men 2,428 will replace the men who are already enlisted.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly, and many of the men who will take the places of clerks will go into the large cities, where there are now civil-service clerks, and large numbers of clerks at that. In addition to that, has the gentleman taken into consideration that if one of these enlisted clerks should desert, the authorities would have to go to the expense of capturing him, just as you do the enlisted man to-day? Has that been taken into consid-

Mr. HAY. I think so. I think Gen. Aleshire did that. I am not sure about that, however.

Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the additional cost for recruiting these people?

Mr. HAY. Yes; that has been taken into consideration. Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would cos Does the gentleman think it would cost any more to recruit them than it does now to get them through the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HAY. Not a bit. I do not think it would cost as much. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. SLAYDEN. Can the gentleman tell me from whom came the suggestion of a service corps?

Mr. HAY. It was recommended by the Secretary of War in his annual report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has it been recommended more than once? Mr. HAY. It has been recommended again and again and again.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then this is an administration feature in the bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes; a feature that has the approval of the administration, as I understand it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not a fact that in the creation of this service corps you create a retired list for 6,000 men?

No; because 6,000 men going into the service Mr. HAY. would not get on the retired list.

Mr. ANTHONY. They will ultimately, if they all stay in.
Mr. HAY. They would have to serve 30 years. I suppose some of them might die and some might resign, just as in the Army to-day

Mr. SLAYDEN. In practice what percentage of the Army pursue to the end?

Mr. HAY. Only 4 per cent of the enlisted men of the Army are on the retired list.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman any figures to show what the retired list would probably amount to?

Mr. HAY. As to those 6,000 men? Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I have not, but in making this computation as to the cost of it the question of retirement was figured in.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, there is another point I would like to have a little light on. A large number of these 6,000 men you propose to cover into the ranks from civil life will be skilled mechanics, carpenters, machinists, bricklayers, and men of that class who are now employed about military posts. What scale of wages do you propose to pay those men?

Mr. HAY. Well, it depends upon whether they are enlisted as sergeants, corporals, privates, or privates of the first class.

Mr. ANTHONY. The great bulk of them would be enlisted

Mr. HAY. You know they are not obliged to enlist unless they want to; it is a voluntary matter entirely on their part.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask if, in your opinion, you could get competent skilled mechanics who are now receiving at least 30 or 40 per cent more than the price you name for that work in civil life to enlist in the Army?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not suppose you could, but we can get all we need; all we want. That is what those gentlemen say who have given this matter careful consideration, and they claim that it will be a very great increase of efficiency, as the gentleman knows.

I want to say I agree with the chairman in Mr. ANTHONY. the creation of this service corps for the class of men who go in the field, what we call the mobile Army, for the coarser class of labor, but I very much doubt the efficiency in regard to the higher grades of skilled labor.

I do not know of any skilled laborer getting $3 or Mr. HAY. $4 a day who can do much better than be assured of $1,473 a year for life and at the end of his service be put on the retired list at three-fourths of that pay.

Mr. ANTHONY. But they all would not be rated as sergeants.

Mr. HAY. No; but you are talking about skilled mechanics who get a large wage now, and I am comparing that class with the master electricians and first sergeants who get very good wages under this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Where would the economy come in, I would like to ask, if they are all to receive this maximum wage?

Mr. HAY. Because, under the present system, a great number of these people receive a good deal more than the very highest that is paid under this bill. Some receive as much as $1,800 a year, and if you take the pay of civilian employees through you will find that almost every one of them would receive more per year than is paid under this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say that later on I have some figures which I desire to introduce, which will show that a large number of the employees of this service corps will cost more to the Government as enlisted men than they would now as civilian employees.

Mr. HAY. Of course the gentleman can put his figures in, but I think it has been demonstrated—certainly demonstrated to our entire satisfaction-that this service corps would be a great saving and would reduce the expense of the Army by one million nine hundred thousand and some odd dollars.

I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. AMES. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AMES. Under the operation of this proposed bill, as some of the existing civil-service employees went out their places would be taken by enlisted men, and would not you have this anomaly, that unless you keep wages all at the same scale that the civil-service employees would be drawing more pay for the same labor than— Mr. HAY. That is true; but then, as I have said before, the man is not compelled to enlist in this corps or in the Army, but the civil-service man does not go in to stay there, and I take it that this man is going in for the purpose of remaining in the Army.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield there? Mr. HAY. Certainly. Mr. MANN. One inducement that would be One inducement that would be offered by this proposition to the man who goes into the service in the first place is to have a chance for promotion.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Mr. MANN. And, in the second place, he is sure that in the future he will be taken care of for life.

Mr. HAY. If he serves long enough. Mr. MANN. Taken care of for life, whether he serves long

Mr. HAY. No; he can not retire unless he serves 30 years.
Mr. MANN. If he does serve for 30 years, of course he is taken care of for life.
Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. He has the opportunity of being taken care of Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. If he gets too old to perform the service, then he would be on the retired list, or if he is disabled in the performance of his duties, he goes on the retired list.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. He gets a pension.

Mr. HAY. He gets a pension.

Mr. KAHN. Has the chairman figured on the possibility of an increase of the pension list in that event?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I have. I got the Commissioner of Pensions to make me a statement, showing how many soldiers in the Regular Army have been pensioned during the last 10 years. It is a remarkable showing in favor of the Regular Army. I want to say that the pensions of the 6,000 men under this showing would be very small. I asked the commissioner for this information, and he advised me as follows:

No data is available to show the number of applications filed or the number of claims allowed on account of service in the Regular Army and Navy prior to the year 1904. In 1903 a reclassification of the roll was made in order to determine the number of pensioners on account of service in the Regular Army and Navy since the close of the Civil War, and a separate classification was then inaugurated, under the title "Regular Establishment," all such pensioners then on the roll being transferred to that classification. The number of Regular Establishment claims filed since 1903 is as follows:

Invalids _______ Widows and dependents______ _ 22, 112 The number of claims allowed under this classification since 1903 is as follows: Invalids ________Widows and dependents_______ Total ____ _ 11. 173

Mr. MANN. I take it there is not supposed there would be as large a percentage of pensions allowed for a clerical force as there is for a fighting force?

Mr. HAY. But I just wanted to cite this to show that the pensions granted to men who served in the Regular Army are appreciably small, and that what might be granted for those serving in the service corps is so small that it ought not to be taken into consideration to any great extent in computing the cost of this bill.

Mr. PRINCE. One question. What was the answer you gave to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] about 4 per cent?

Mr. HAY. I said there are only 4 per cent of the present force of the Army on the retired list.

Mr. PRINCE. That is under the three-year enlistment?

Mr. HAY. That is under the three-year enlistment. And in that connection, as it is a very good time to speak of it. I will say those people who are opposing the five-year enlistment are in favor of a five-year enlistment of three years in the colors and two in a reserve, and they are opposed to the reenlistment of privates, but they are in favor of the reenlistment of noncommissioned officers and privates who have certain technical information. And they claim that that would be very much cheaper.

Now, as to the retired list:

As to the retired list of the Army, it is a curious fact that of the enlisted men on the retired list there were 3,328 on January 1, 1912, and of these, 2,809 are noncommissioned offi-cers and only 519 include privates, cooks, and all other classes outside of noncommissioned officers. So that it would appear that the bulk of the men on the retired list of the Army are noncommissioned officers. Of course, the scheme to continue in the service the noncommissioned officers would increase the expenses if you had an enlistment for three years. Now I come to section 6 of the bill, which is a section which consolidates the establishments of The Adjutant General and the Inspector General of the Army with the General Staff of the Army. I do not know that there is any difference of opinion between the minority and majority members of the committee on that subject, other than the fact that the consolidation cuts off 20 officers. When this bill was first introduced there were provisions in it which it does not now contain, which provided that the 13 permanent officers that are now in the Inspector General's and The Adjutant General's Departments should be transferred to the General Staff, and no provision was made to transfer those officers anywhere else or to permit them to perform duty anywhere else than in the General Staff. But as the bill is now, that feature, which seemed to be objectionable to the War Department, has been eliminated, and it is provided that these 13 permanent officers can be detached to any part of the service that the President may choose, and other men may be detailed from the line to fill their places. We have endeavored in this section to meet every reasonable objection that has been made by the War Department.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.
Mr. PRINCE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that when this staff consolidation is made the President can assign the officers coming from these different staffs into the General Staff, and into the line, if he sees fit?

Mr. HAY. I did not say that.

Mr. PRINCE. I thought the gentleman said the President could assign them as he might see fit.

Mr. HAY. Not outside the General Staff.
Mr. PRINCE. Do not these officers remain permanent officers of the staff? Mr. HAY. Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman is perfectly familiar with the proviso under which it is proposed, and I thought it was agreeable to the gentleman. I understand the Secretary of War says, in the hearings, it is agreeable to him. I will read the language in the bill, page 58, the second proviso, beginning on line 9:

On line 9:

Provided further, That officers now holding commissions as officers of either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps may at any time, in the discretion of the President, and shall, whenever they shall have served four years as members of said corps, be detached therefrom and assigned to duty with the line of the Army, or to such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct, and they shall not be returned to duty in said corps until they shall have served for two years under detachment therefrom except in cases of emergency or in time of war, and during their detachment from said corps their places therein may be filled by the selection and detail, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, of line officers having the same rank, respectively, as the officers whose places said line officers are to fill.

If that does not meet every objection that has been made by

If that does not meet every objection that has been made by the Staff Corps and the Secretary of War, I do not know how their objections can be met. They are allowed to be detached from that Staff Corps duty and to be sent to perform line duty.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Will not this result in these staff officers who are detailed to the General Staff for four years and then to some other duty for two years and then brought back to the General Staff for four years again—will it not result in— Mr. HAY. The gentleman should state the provision fairly. There is nothing in the bill that provides that after they have served two years they shall be brought back to the General

Mr. TILSON. They may remain permanent officers of the staff?

Mr. HAY. They can stay out of the General Staff for their life if they are not retired.

Mr. TILSON. They can be brought back?
Mr. HAY. Yes; they can be, and so can every other officer of the Army be brought back.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would not the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut be to penalize certain distinguished officers because they happened to have commissions in the permanent corps of the Army?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

There are only 13 permanent officers in the two corps. There are 3 officers in the Inspector General's Corps who are permanent and 10 in The Adjutant General's Corps who are permanent. Under the act of 1901 all these staff corps were thrown open to detail, and by virtue of the operation of that act all the officers in those two corps have become detailed officers except these 13, and as they retire, or as they die, their places will be taken by detailed officers.

There are only 13 left, and it will be only a short time, relatively, when all the officers in these corps will become detailed officers; and under the provisions of this bill these 13 officers may, if the President desires it, be sent to perform any other duties rather than staff duties, or may be kept upon those duties until they die or retire. So that the objection which has been raised to this consolidation has been fully met, and I never understood from any officer of the Army that there was any objection to this consolidation except the objection of putting these 13 permanent officers in this General Staff Corps.

If the gentleman will permit me, it is true that the Secretary of War said he was opposed to having The Adjutant General's Department merged in the General Staff, but no Army officer has ever made that objection.

Mr. MANN. This provision does not apply to the Signal Corps, does it?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. It applies only to the Inspector General's and The Adjutant General's Departments.

Mr. MANN. It would not apply to the officers who have to do with airships or aeroplanes?

Mr. HAY. Oh, not at all. That is a separate corps-the Signal Corps.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, a further objection that has been made against this section is that General Staff as now constituted has 20 officers of the rank of This section would decrease the number of those officers to 10. Was not the testimony before the committee to the effect that it was advantageous to retain in the General Staff the larger number of officers of the rank of captain?

I believe that was the testimony of probably Mr. HAY.

two officers, Col. Bullard and Maj. Shelton.

Mr. KAHN. Did anybody testify that it was not?

Mr. HAY. Nobody else was asked the question, as I now recall. But I do not think that the objection is well taken. The duties of the General Staff Corps are such that 10 captains are amply sufficient to perform that duty in the way of research and study. I understood that was the reason given by Col. Bullard and Maj. Shelton and, perhaps, Capt. Palmer. I do not remember now whether Capt. Palmer testified upon that question or not. He accompanied the Secretary of War, but whether he made any statement about that I do not now recall.

Mr. KAHN. As I recall the testimony before the committee, it was to the effect that by detailing the captains to the General Staff it enabled young, bright, active, energetic officers of the Army to study the details of planning campaigns, to secure the information necessary to make the plans, and to gather ma-terial with respect to the coordination of the various branches of the service, and that it was highly important that a large number of younger officers should be detailed to that work.

Mr. HAY. As I say, that was the testimony, in part, of Maj. Shelton and Col. Bullard, but they put it upon the ground that these younger officers could do research work-work in the Army War College. There is no reason on earth why a major or a lieutenant colonel would not be better for the work that the gentleman has just outlined. However, as I say, I do not know of any other reason.

Mr. PRINCE. Let us clear this up and see if we can agree.

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. You take the position that when the permanent officers in the Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments become a part of the General Staff Corps they are then subject to be sent by the President-

Mr. HAY. Detached therefrom. Mr. PRINCE. Detached therefrom and assigned to duty in the line of the Army?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. And to perform any duty other than General Staff duty?

Mr. HAY.

Mr. PRINCE. And after they have made their tour they are put upon a tour with the officers of the line, and may be put back or may not.

Mr. HAY. May be or may not, just as the President or Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. PRINCE. Do you say that same provision holds good with reference to the supply department?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not. I am not talking about the supply department.

Mr. PRINCE. Are there any permanent members in the supply department?

Mr. HAY. Yes; some of those already in are permanent, but their places are to be taken by detailed officers; when one is retired his place is taken by a detailed officer.

Mr. PRINCE. Of a lower rank? Mr. HAY. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, section 7 of the bill provides for the cutting off of certain general officers, and has a provision in it which has already been discussed about the pay of officers for length of service.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, generally, in relation to the provision of the bill reducing the number of officers. I understand, it is not intended, as I gather from what the gentleman said and from a hasty examination of the bill, to make any present reduction of officers?

Mr. HAY. Well— Mr. MANN. Of course, I understand somebody may drop out right away.

It is not intended to take any man out of office. Mr. HAY. Mr. MANN. If it should develop in the future, as is possible, that the gentleman is mistaken in the number of officers necessary to carry out his duties, it is quite within the power of Congress to rectify that mistake at any time?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. MANN. There is no likelihood of any great reduction in the number of officers immediately?

Mr. HAY. There will be a reduction in the next fiscal year of 21 in the supply corps and 4 in the consolidated General

Mr. MANN. Of course in the whole Army no one can tell what the reduction will be.

Mr. HAY. As a matter of fact, there are 249 vacancies in the second lieutenancies. Now, there will be no reduction by cutting off any officer's head or taking away his commission. I will show the gentleman how it operates. For instance, there is a detail that ends in the consolidated supply corps, say, on the 1st of August, 1912. Now, when that officer's detail ends in that supply corps he goes back to the line. Instead of filling the vacancy, it is not filled, and the Army thereby loses an officer.

Mr. MANN. In the consolidation of the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Paymaster's Departments into one, the number of officers provided, the gentleman thinks, is sufficient?

Mr. HAY. I do. Mr. MANN. Suppose it should not prove to be sufficient; is there any leeway granted at all?

Mr. HAY. No; if it is not sufficient it has to be increased by Congress. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume any more time unless some Member desires to ask me some ques-

[Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to ask the committee for considerable time this afternoon for the purpose of discussing the monetary plan presented by the National Monetary Commission. It is a subject in which the country has been interested, and I assume that Members of the House are likewise greatly interested. When I present it to the House or the committee, I desire to have time enough to go into it somewhat fully and to have an opportunity of answering any questions which Members may desire to ask. It is now too late, Mr. Chairman, for me to undertake it this afternoon. I understand another gentleman is present who desires a shorter length of time, and I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that at the next sitting of the committee I may have the first hour and a half for the purpose of discussing this subject.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection whatever, but I wish to propound an inquiry to the gentleman.

that consent be given in committee?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the committee has that authority. Of course if the House should cut off all general debate it would not be binding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that at the next session of the committee he shall be allowed to proceed without interruption for the first hour and a half. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I feel that I owe some apology to the Members for detaining them here at this late hour, when the promise of release seemed to have come. I also owe something in the way of explanation to them for the attitude I may seem to take in discussing this subject, because, frankly, it will be the attitude of a school-teachernot under the assumption that I am a competent teacher, nor yet that the Members of this House require such treatmentbut because I shall be unable to present a subject as complex as the one with which I propose dealing in any other than a didactic way.

THE PROBLEM.

This subject, I may say, arises out of the very serious condition in which the country is placed with regard to the high cost of living, a condition becoming daily more aggravated. It has been declared, with how great degree of accuracy I do not know, that the farmers who raise our vital necessaries get about $6,000,000,000 for what finally sells to the consumers at about thirteen billions.

Last year's agricultural products were worth $9,000,000,000 to the farmers. The Government used farm values in getting figures for this total. Assuming that the farmers kept one-third of the products for their own use, the consumers paid more than $13,000,000,000 for what the producers received $6,000,000,000. The cost of getting the year's products from producers to consumers amounted to the enormous sum of $7,000,000,000. The real problem to deal with is not high cost of living. It is high cost of selling.—B. F. Yoakum, chairman St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1910 gives the following as the percentages, of the prices paid by the consumer, which the farmer received for the foodstuffs named:

	cent.
Poultry	55.1
Eggs, by dozen	69. 0
Celery, by bunch	60.0
Strawberries, by quart	48. 9
Oranges, by dozen	20. 3
Melons, by pound	50. 0
Potatoes, by bushel	59. 3
Watermelons, singly	33. 5
Turkeys	63. 4

Per	cent.
Cabbage, by head	48.1
Apples, by bushel	55. 6

TRANSPORTATION DIRECT FROM FARM TO CONSUMER.

I believe it is generally admitted that the problem before the country is how to get these vital necessaries direct from the producer to the consumer at something like the price at which they are produced.

It is conceded that relief for this condition requires a direct from-producer-to-consumer conduit of transportation, one that articulates the farm with the kitchen. And in order to do this such transportation must carry the shipment in quantities to suit the consumer's needs, and not in wholesale lots. Sizes to suit the consumer would permit of transportation direct from the producer to the consumer. If that question can be satisfactorily and favorably answered, Members will find that the remedy for the high cost of living, especially with reference to the vital necessaries of the table, has been found.

The subject I respectfully submit is one of the most serious before this House.

When we think of transportation, naturally we turn first to the railways of the country. I call the attention of the House to this circumstance in that connection. The railways are doing now, have always done, a wholesale business, as distinguished from a retail business. The ultimate unit of purchase rarely goes to a freight depot for his supplies. The railway minimum unit of shipment is a hundred pounds and its minimum charge 25 cents. But the consumer rarely requires a hundred pounds of anything, certainly not of meat, butter, eggs, or the other vital necessaries we use on our tables. So the railway can not handle the shipment in sizes small enough for him, and thus the shipment takes its way from the producer, not to the consumer, but by reason of its wholesale size it goes into the commerce of the country, ultimately, after many roundabout processes, to reach the consumer with a price multiplied perhaps by two.

It may seem to some that the railways are acting arbitrarily in thus drawing the line on a hundred-pound shipment and the 25-cent charge. Let me say that when you come to investigate railway practices you will find that the hundred-pound minimum and the 25-cent fee are reasonable enough, from their standpoint, When you come to consider the acts of attention which a railway must give a shipment, be it large or small, be the journey short or long, you will find there are 20, which all must bear I insert a list of them compiled by a railway traffic expert:

The railway company employee—

(1) Unloads articles from consignor's vehicle.

(2) Loads article in car.

(3) Ascertains rate to be paid.

(4) Makes out bill of lading.

(5) Makes out waybill and sends copy to auditor and the train conductor.

(6) Receiving agent destination receipts to conductor—

(10) Loads it on consignee's wagon.

(11) Agent gets money for shipment—

(12) Copies bill of lading into record of freight forwarded.

(13) Copies bill of lading into record of freight received.

(14) Sends statement of freight sent to auditor.

(15) Sends statement of freight received to auditor.

(18) Advises treasurer of money due by each agent.

(19) Makes statistical report from bill of lading.

(20) Calculates, per bill of lading, amount payable the different railways.

Of those 20 acts of "transportation attention," 15 are at this moment replaced by the postage stamp in the carriage of the shipment by the postal system. On the large shipment their hindrance is not so great, and it can move; but their effect on the small shipment is simply to penalize it out of the transportation of the country.

When you think of the small shipment, particularly, you think of the express company. It ought to carry the shipment. It does not carry it on sufficiently economical terms, and for two reasons: First, it is burdened down with the same condition of "transportation accounting" that prevails with the railways. I insert a list of the express acts, 11 in number, which are replaced by the postage stamp in the postal carriage of the ship-

The express company—
(1) Ascertains the rate to be paid.
(2) Makes out waybill.
(3) Copies waybill into record of shipment "forwarded."

(4) Copies same into record of shipments "received."
(5) Makes statement of "shipment sent" to auditor.
(6) Makes same of shipments "received."
(7) Auditor checks waybills against record of "sending" agent.
(8) Auditor checks same against record of "receiving" agent.
(9) In case of "through" waybills previous items repeated.
(10) Auditor makes division of percentages going to express company and the rallway or railways.
(11) In cases of "through" waybills auditor makes like division of percentages between express companies and railways.

The above acts, alone, account for an immense proportion of the expenses of the express companies, and are fatal to the making of a rate proportioned to the small shipment.

EXPRESS RATE MAKING ABNORMAL.

But there is another condition which is equally burdensome and prohibitive in its effect on the small shipment. It is a condition entirely anomalous in the transportation of any country and comes from the presence of an intruder—the express company—in the field of transportation. Let us put an expressrate maker at work in order to illustrate its character. Let us say he is making a rate on a 5-pound package from here to Baltimore, about 41 miles. He puts down first 6 cents, let us say, to pay for this accounting and some overhead charges; he puts down 5 cents to pay for collect and delivery, and adds 2 cents for profits to the company, making 13 cents in all. But the railway has to be paid, and he must add enough to the 13 cents to pay it. How shall he compute its share—according to service standards? No; not at all. He must compute it according to the contract between the express company and the railway, and that contract, on the average, provides that the railway must get 47.50 per cent of the final rate. So he adds 12 cents for the railway, which makes a charge of 25 cents. But that 12 cents means $1.42 per ton-mile on the 5-pound package, while at the same time under rates made by the same express-rate maker, traveling on the same train to the same point, the 100-pound package, carrying a rate of 50 cents, pays the railway only 14 cents a ton-mile. Because of the anomalous connection of the express company with the subject, its merely contractual right to be there at all, the package is overloaded 10 cents for railway transportation and the charge becomes 25 cents instead of 15 cents for about 2 cents for about 2 cents instead of 15 cents for about 2 cents instead of 15 cents for about 2 cents in the cents in 10 cents for railway transportation and the charge becomes 25 cents instead of 15 cents, for about 2 cents is what the package ought to bear for that purpose. Let me say at this point that, in my judgment, the railway would not, if it were making this rate, overload it in that way. I believe it would impose only the relative burden; but the express-rate maker has no alternative under the express railway contract.

Take the other horn of the matter. The express-rate maker is at work on a rate for a 100-pound package from New York to There manifestly the important thing is to the Pacific coast. pay the railway for its service, which is nearly the whole He sets down $6.41 for the railway. But the railway can not receive under the contract more than 471 per cent of the rate imposed on the shipper, and so the rate maker must add $7.09, making a total charge of $13.50, in order that the railway can get what it ought to get. So in either instance the regulatory boards of the State or Nation can not reduce these rates without doing injustice to the express company on the short or the railway company on the long journey.

EXPRESS RATES PROHIBITIVE AND DESTRUCTIVE OF TRAFFIC.

I have described these two conditions as responsible for excessive express rates in the United States. I wonder how many understand how very excessive they are. The feeling obtains, has always obtained, that they are excessive, but a feeling is not enough to support legislative action. Unfortunately, as students of transportation economics well understand, you can not take any particular rate and allocate the services connected with it with sufficient precision to determine whether that particular rate is too high or just reasonable. But you can judge the average rate by methods of comparison, and that is the method I have applied. I found, first, that the average charge for carrying a ton of freight in this country was $1.90 for 1909. I found, too, that the average charge for carrying a ton of express was $31.20. You have then a ratio of 16.42 to 1 for the express charge as compared with the freight. With this ratio clearly determined I proceeded to the other countries of the world.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman say 161 to 1?

Mr. LEWIS. About 161 to 1, sir. Some 10 of these countries report express statistics separately from freight, and thus are susceptible of comparison. We should expect the express charge to be higher, per ton, here than abroad—as much higher as our freight charges. But there is no economic justification for a higher ratio of the express charge to the freight charge in our country. I am inserting a table which gives the data collected by me from the original reports, having first deducted from the American express charge 11.50 per cent, which is the amount the collect and delivery service costs them, a service not rendered by some of the countries included in the table. Ratios of average express charges to average freight charges in 11 countries.

The ratio in other countries, then, is 5.23 to 1, instead of 14.53 to 1, as here. The result is, of course, the result that must follow prohibitive rates. Our express traffic amounts to must follow prohibitive rates. Our express traffic amounts to only one-half per cent of the freight, theirs to 1 per cent. Our express companies charge the public nearly 8 per cent of the gross freight charges. These other countries pay for their express less than 6 per cent of the gross freight charge.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield the charge from Missing from Maryland yield.

to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LEWIS. I will, sir.
Mr. MANN. Where they have the parcel post is there still a considerable express business carried on by the companies, separate from the railways?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; except that they have no express com-All the data I have given you comes from countries where they have parcel posts and applies to the express business carried on independently of the parcel post.

Mr. MANN. That is what I asked. Mr. LEWIS. But the express business in those countries is conducted by the railways, which are mostly operated by governments.

WHY REGULATION EXPRESS BATES ARE IMPRACTICABLE.

Mr. SLAYDEN. One other question. The gentleman complains, I think with perfect propriety, of the excessive rates charged by the express companies. But is it not true that we have provided by law that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power over these express companies, to regulate rates and to force them to a reasonable basis?

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman has very logically anticipated the development of the subject. Relief requires two thingsarticulation of the service with the country and a normal express rate of about one-half the present rates, neither of which can be secured by regulation. Ordinarily one would say that if a transportation rate were two or three times as high as it ought to be, the Interstate Commerce Commission would be the appropriate tribunal for relief. I am obliged here to use an expression that may seem harsh, but I use it as a term of description and not as an epithet. The express company is a transportation parasite. It is not a normal transportation agency, as can be seen in all its relations to this subject. The question propounded by the gentleman from Texas brings up one of the very anomalous characteristics of the express company. For years they have been paying, as a whole, near to, if not more than, 100 per cent profits on the real investment, and yet the proportion of the average rate which is profit was less than 7 per cent last year. A slight reduction in the rates would wipe out this margin and perhaps leave a deficit. Now, take a normal transportation agency and the facts are very different. In order for the railways to pay 6 per cent dividends 30 per cent of their average rates must be profit. If you wished to reduce their rates so as to produce dividends of only 5 per cent you would have this 30 per cent to play on, and a reduction of 5 per cent in the rate would produce the lowered dividend proposed and leave a profit margin of 25 per cent of the total rate. In the case of the express rates, one-half of 1 per cent profit in the rate would produce a 10 per cent dividend on the capital used in the business, but this margin would be so small that the slightest changes in business might convert it into a deficit. Of course, no Government tribunal would order such a margin, and I am not sure that it could safely reduce the present margin of less than 7 per cent, as a perturbation of the traffic might mean a deficit. Nearly all the efforts made by State regulatory tribunals have been struck down by the courts on this ground. Thoughtful men will recognize that you can not trifle with such a small margin. All this is true, because the parasitic character of the express company enables it to proceed with relatively no capital and yet capital enough to enforce the protections vouchsafed to proprietary rights. say to the gentleman from Texas that regulation seems entirely unfitted for this subject.

PARCEL-POST SCHEMES-OBJECTIONS.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GUERNSEY. In speaking of postal express as distinguished from the parcel post, do I understand that the gentleman would favor charges according to the distance instead of flat rates for packages?

Mr. LEWIS. I am coming now to that point. Regulation being impracticable the next proposal is one which is sometimes improperly confused with postal express, as designed in the measure of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goeke]. I mean the parcel post. There is considerable objection to the parcel post in this country. It comes from men who make their objections with an earnestness and spirit that should cause one to halt and consider. I mean the local merchants. What is the "parcelproposition as exemplified in all the bills I have seen on the subject? It is that the post office receive packages up to 4 pounds or 11 pounds in weight for transportation at flat rates generally of 8 cents a pound. Eight cents a pound is $160 a ton; while the average express rate, egregious as it is, is only $31.20 a ton. Let us look at this subject momentarily from the standpoint of the local merchant. Why 4 pounds or 11 pounds for a limit? he asks. Is not this limit obviously designed to be just large enough to get his patron away from him to the mailorder house, and yet so small as to exclude the local merchant, since he commonly ships in larger weights? And why a flat rate of 8 cents a pound? Evidently to put his distant rival on terms of unjust and unnatural equality with him, give the distant rival the cash transactions and leave the burdensome and doubtful ones as they are.

Obviously the right of the merchant to relief from express conditions is as meritorious as that of other people. Parcelpost schemes seem to exclude him, even if they contained relief for anyone; which, on a flat rate, they can not be made to do. Whatever its motive, partiality is always likely to work injustice; and the partial remedy proposed in these parcel-post schemes is no exception. The truth is that the economist or statesman can not approach this subject without seeing that relief involves the whole express system. The high cost of living involves it. The principle of equal rights to all shippers, The high cost of like equality before the law, involves it, too.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. With pleasure.

Mr. PEPPER. Is not the gist of the matter, from the gentleman's standpoint, whether postal express or parcel post, that there shall not be a flat rate for the transportation of merchandise?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer emphatically no; there should not be a flat rate, and the weight limit should be high enough to include all express shippers. I give up the man who would ignore distance in making these rates, the 4 or 8 cents a pound man and his 11-pound limit. The small shipment remedy must begin where the railway stops; that is at least the 100-pound minimum. The flat-rate man and the 11-pound man simply refuses to study the problem and see what the required relief demands. He refuses to consider the shipper's right on short journeys to pay simply for what he gets and get that for which he is willing to pay, while on long distances he threatens to mulct the Government in a transportation deficit. As it will cost to pay the railway, under postal law, 1 cent a pound for 250 miles and 12 cents for 3,000 miles, any flat rate, besides discriminating against the local merchant, must cheat the shipper on the short journey and cheat the Government on the long journey, saying nothing of its killing effect on the shortjourney traffic. And the general effect would be to rob Peter to pay Paul and make beggars of both.

Mr. PEPPER. Then the flat rate is wrong under any system? Mr. LEWIS. Under any system.

Mr. PEPPER. And under the system proposed by the Goeke bill—that is, postal express—there would not be a flat rate? Mr. LEWIS. No. The rates would be adapted to the relative distance as well as to moving the traffic to its natural market; they should not create unnatural markets by ignoring distance. The flat-rate idea represents a misapplication of the "principle of negligible costs" in rate making. It is rightly applied to letters, because the element of transportation cost with them is less than one-fourth of the total cost. But where weight is involved to any extent the transportation cost is not negligible, and even in the smallest countries, like Switzerland and Belgium, the rates recognize distance. I may say that under the Goeke bill acquiring the express companies we should begin to-morrow morning, if the transition occurred to-night, under the same rates and conditions which obtain with the express companies to-day. Gradually the remedial changes would be introduced. The rate-making department of the post office, subject to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission. would, after proper study, simplify the rates that now number about 200,000,000,000, counting place-to-place rates, and which produce so much confusion in express-rate quotation as to have become a scandal. The entire express-rate system of the country might be put on a page not bigger than your hand. In fact, this is now done in Prussia and nearly everywhere else.

RELIEF REQUIRES UNIFICATION OF TRANSPORTATION FROM FARM TO KITCHEN.

But even if we had a normal express rate to move the small shipment on economical terms, another deficiency of the express company is fundamental in its character. It is this: Some 40,000,000 of our people, the producers of the vital necessaries, live in the country, off the railway lines. The express companies, of course, and the railways, too, have no means of reaching this country population. Any system at all adequate to directly connect the producer and consumer, especially with reference to the vital necessaries, will have to connect the farmer with the railways and the towns. Only the postal system possesses the agency for that purpose. It possesses it in the rural free-delivery structure now almost complete and ready for adaptation to the larger service. We are spending over $40,000,000 on that service, and it is waiting, one might say, with empty wagons to receive and convey in retail quantities the necessaries of life from the farmer in the country to the hungry mouths that need them in the city. The express company, therefore, is excluded as the remedy to connect producer and consumer for two main reasons: First, its rates are prohibitive; second, its instrumentalities do not reach the farm.

It may be said that farm produce are now cheaply conveyed by wagonloads. This is true, but they are conveyed, not directly to the consumer, but to the commission men, and fall into the intricate processes of commerce only to emerge at last in the consumer's hands at a price which dumbfounds the producing farmer. Meanwhile the inevitable act of delivery to the consumer in quantities to suit him is even now performed, but with a doubling of economic cost because of not being done at first. The agencies of transportation are here, if they were connected, to take the foodstuffs by one act from the farm to the kitchen. But they are uncoupled and do not act in unison. Neither the railway nor express company can couple them. The postal system can, linking the farm with the railway by the rural delivery, and the kitchen with both through the express delivery system.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Will

Will it disturb my friend if I ask him a question or two?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman says that the express facilities are not such now as to reach this large population which lives distant from the railway, amounting to 40,000,000, and which is reached by rural delivery.

Mr. LEWIS. Reached to a large extent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it contemplated that a post office, through its rural carriers, should deliver to the farmers all sorts of packages from the merchants and in return carry to the market also produce from the farms?

Mr. LEWIS. It is so contemplated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Chickens, eggs, and everything of that sort? Mr. LEWIS. Yes, that is the object. It is contemplated that the postal express service shall be gradually extended, at least as far as rural delivery now extends.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman made or obtained any estimate as to how much of an outlay the Post Office Department in this country would have to make for special paraphernalia to perform that service?

Mr. LEWIS. No; the computation can only take place as the development of the traffic proceeds. The simplified and reliable motor truck is now in sight. I may say that the design of the bill introduced for postal express by Mr. Goeke, of Ohio, leaves this feature of the matter to the practical processes of administration. No abrupt change would take place, and the postal department would gradually adapt the rural delivery structure to meet the needs of the traffic as they become manifest.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would the gentleman in his description tell us of the possible harm that would be done to the business of the country by enhancing the department-store business, the mail-order business?

Mr. LEWIS. I will say that at a flat rate for all distances the parcel post might have this effect. But the Goeke bill is not a parcel-post proposition at all. It contemplates taking over the express companies and operating the business as a part of the postal function. I think that with the express rates cut in two, as a unification of the express companies with the postal system and postal economy of method would permit, not harm but great benefit would come to the business of the country. submit in an appendix a table of merchandise rates, under the proposed system, as compared with the express company "mer-chandise" rates. The bases for the tentative rates are stated rates. The bases for the tentative rates are stated in an economic study printed on the Senate side.

I should also say that in our days of wayward and shifting fashions the merchant's problem is to vary his stock enough to satisfy demands and yet keep his total investment down to a point that will permit some profit on his possible sales. leaders in mercantile affairs advise more frequent purchases, adapted to the specific demands of the trade as they arise, in small orders. This the prohibitive express rates largely prevent in the towns, and the nonarticulation of the express with the country wholly prevents for the country store. Surely no one stands to benefit more than the merchant by reasonable express rates and a wider extension of the service.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LEWIS. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman favor an unlimited parcel post or a parcel post regulated as to distance?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not favor a parcel post at all. I favor a system of postal express such as is contemplated in the Goeke bill. That means taking over the express companies, articulating the service with the country through rural delivery and with the consumer by the express delivery, and giving relief by getting the vital necessaries to them direct from the farmer, while giving express shippers and the public rates much lower than parcel post, and real relief from the onerous express charge.

ELASTIC RATES AND PROFICIENT RATE MAKERS.

In this connection I ought not to forget to say that any lawmade or fixed rate is utterly subversive of traffic necessities, and would probably kill more traffic than it would carry. Congress that ever convened would, to begin with, be competent to say exactly what the rate should be, and if it did happen to hit it right, traffic conditions change from year to year, and the rates would lose their adaptation to it. Members of this body will perhaps concur in the statement that it is only once in a generation that this slow-moving institution can reach a noncurrent subject, and if we once had ill-adapted rates the probability of their being reformed is not good within a quarter of a century.

So I say that the rate ought to be elastic. It ought to be made by men proficient in rate making, as the subject is an administrative and not a legislative one. Any fixed rate would, I repeat, prevent more of the potential traffic moving than it would move. I may suggest that you have all frequently looked into a freight car and seen 20 or 30 different shipments, perhaps, going from the same point to the same point. Some of them paid 6 cents a hundred, others 10 cents and 15 or 20 and even 30 cents a hundred. dred, although all receiving the same service from the railway. Why, you ask, should different rates be applied by the railway to these different commodities? The reason is this: The object of a transportation rate is to move the utmost of traffic to its natural market with a profit to the producer, and an average or service rate, the same on all the commodities, would prevent a large part of the normal traffic from moving at all. Indeed, when we come to analyze the subject we find that rates do belong to the genus of taxation, possess the ethics and incidence of taxation, and that, applied with a proper public-service motive, the maxim, "what the traffic will bear," is the method of rate making that will move the maximum of traffic in any

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly. Mr. VREELAND. Has the gentleman yet indicated the maximum weight on packages to be carried through the mail or by Mr. LEWIS. I have not, nor do I think it a legislative matter. Now, there is no maximum. The express company will carry a whole trainload for you if you are willing to pay the rate. The rate, by its costliness, determines the limitation of the express weights.

Now, a new problem would arise when the rural sections are articulated with the railway; we might not be able to deliver unusual weights at any time to the farmer, and a hundred pounds would likely represent the limit economically feasible when off the rails. The problem does not arise until the shipment is taken off the train; and as to larger weights the postal system might leave them to private delivery by the consignee. this is purely an administrative matter, too.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEWIS. Certainly. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman has indicated, as far as the rates are concerned, that he would have them elastic. Do I understand also that you would have the subject of the weights and size of the shipment by postal express elastic and under the direction of the administrative board?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; it is clearly an administrative question. The German limit is 110 pounds; the Belgian 125, I think. It is natural to suggest the 100-pound limit here, because that is the bottom point at which the railway refuses to treat the shipment, and the shipment in sizes to suit the consumer would nearly always be less than 100 pounds. Yet the question of economical delivery and preparing the rural-delivery structure for such a weight ought to be left to administrative decision, as the traffic developed.

A PUBLIC-SERVICE MOTIVE NECESSARY.

Now, besides proficient rate makers and elastic rates to move the traffic, something else is required in order to get the best results out of this small-shipment traffic. I hope I shall not be misunderstood when I suggest that the private motive has shown itself to be inadequate. Suppose you go to an express company to-day and say, "You moved 4,000,000 tons of express last year and your gross receipts were $132,000,000 and your profits were $11,000,000. Cut your rates in two this year and the traffic will amount to 8,000,000 tons. Your profits may be less, but the service to the public will be doubled." What would an express company do?

It would do just what the average individual would do, act on the natural private motive, stick to the higher profits and the smaller business. But you go to a public-service institution like the Postal Department, and you find a wholly different motive. The postal system would say, "If cutting the rate in two will double the service, I will take my chances with the That is exemplified in the reduction of postal rates throughout their history.

Even a small deficit for experimental purposes would be justified, especially if the rate were elastic and the postal department could protect itself by adjustments of the rate. you start out with the assurance that the service would be doubled and the deficit would be 1 per cent, to ultimately disappear with the development of the traffic, a public-service agency like the post office would be more than justified, because in that instance it is losing 1 per cent in one pocket but it is making 100 per cent in the other pocket-the people and the postal system being identical terms.

Now, the express companies constitute the most irrefragible monopoly; and where monopoly obtains rates can be made relatively high or low, according as you wish to regard the dividend. An English railway some 60 years ago had the question presented to it as to how to graduate its passenger rates to securing the best dividend. Much as one adjusts his opera glass in the theater to obtain the clearest line of vision these railway officers adjusted the passenger rates. They tried rates all the way from 6 cents a mile to one-half a cent a mile, and found that as the rate was 31 cents a mile or one-half cent a mile, the higher charge produced 6 per cent and the lower charge only 5 per cent dividends; and acting on the private motive they rejected the rate which produced the greater public service. But in such a case any man of common sense would say that a system in which we are all stockholders, like the Postal Department, would be foolish to prefer the 3-cent rate and kill so much useful traffic. Like the attendant at the theater, proficient rate makers in postal transportation would adjust their rates to move the greatest amount of traffic consistently with the cost of the service, and in order to reduce the average cost of each shipment the greatest possible amount of traffic should be moved. Our express traffic is now only about one-half what it is in other countries, and lower rates and articulation of the service with the farm and country store would likely greatly increase it—probably triple it—in a few years. While the railways alone can not articulate the farm with the kitchen without the postal agency adjunct for collecting and delivery in town and country, they would greatly profit by having a low-priced traffic converted into the highest class.

EFFICIENCY OF POSTAL ORGANIZATION:

Another thing we should need, and ought to have some assurance about, in the new system, is efficiency in the organization that is to conduct the service. I have shown you that one of the burdens which prevents the adequate movement of the small shipment is the appalling "transportation accounting" of the express companies, entirely eliminated by the postal method. Their character is such that the railways can not reasonably be expected to deal with the small shipment on sufficiently economical terms; and the express company, with its intercorporate and multitudinous relations to the small shipment can not eliminate them either. The postal system by its simplicity and singleness of relation now does eliminate them; and this circumstance means an economy equal to about half of the express

But outside of financial economies, I am happy to bring to your attention a circumstance that ought to make every Member of this body warm with pride. It is the fact that the postal system of the United States is certainly the most efficient agency of its kind throughout the world. [Applause.] It is generally conceded that in Germany governmental agencies have shown the element of efficiency, and this embraces its public utilities and other industrial organizations, The critic attributes its success in this respect to the fact that in Germany they have two classes-one accustomed to command and the other to obey-and attempt to distinguish our ability to discharge public work on this ground. Knowing this feeling to obtain, I have resorted to a comparison of the work done per employee per year in the different postals systems, and now insert a table giving the facts in the matter:

POSTAL EFFICIENCY TABLE.

Comparative table of the number of pieces of mail matter handled per employee in England, France, Germany, and the United States at different periods.

Countries.	Averag	e numbe	r of piece per empl			handled

In the cases of France and Great Britain the number of employees was diminished by one-fourth the estimated number employed in the telegraph and telephone service; in the German figures the same reduction for the telegraph and telephone employees is also made, but is raised to one-third in 1908. I have divided the number of postal employees in England, France, and Germany into the number of mail pieces handled each year, and then made a like division for the United States. The result shows for the year 1908 that the efficiency of the average employee in England was 31,117 pieces handled; in France, 38,241 pieces handled; in Germany, 25,901; and in the United States, 51,591. [Applause.]

I do not know the full explanation of the fact, but it is a fact none the less that the proficiency of the workingman in the United States far exceeds, quantitatively, that of the workman of any other country in the world; and this fact is particularly true of the American postal employees.

Mr. BERGER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to interrupt the gentleman, but is he aware of the fact that the average American bricklayer has to lay twice as many bricks, three times as many bricks, as the average German bricklayer; that he lays almost four times as many bricks as the average English bricklayer; and this rule holds good all through the line? In other words, the exploitation in our country is more acute, much more general than in other countries in the world, and it also holds good for the postal employees. Is the gentleman aware of this fact?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not know the particulars, but I know it is the characteristic tendency of our country.

Mr. BERGER. Yes; and the same thing holds good for the coal miner, and the gentleman ought to be familiar with the coal miners.

Mr. LEWIS. Whatever the views of people may be about the relative efficiency of some public functions in this counwe certainly have the most efficient postal agency to handle the small shipments, and this is a function not alien to its character, as the naturally inefficient express company is to transportation, but a function that constitutionally belongs to the postal system, and which has only been permitted to drift away from it because of the existence of an intruder in the field, the express company of America.

EXPRESS-RAILWAY CONTRACTS NECESSARY TO MOVE SMALL SHIPMENT.

Outside of the express company being a mere intruder, there is another reason why it should be eliminated. It is in order that we secure a relatively practical rate for paying compensation to the railways for the act of transportation in the move-ment of this shipment, and that reason is this: The Government is paying the railways for postal transportation, on the letter basis, a distinct kind of service, about twice as much on long distances, say, above 200 miles, for the transportation of packages as the express companies. The historical reason for this is plain. One kind of pay is fixed by statute; the other has been worked out by the express companies to meet the necessity of getting traffic to move over longer distances. The inelastic method of postal railway pay, increasing arithmetically mile by mile with the journey, itself makes impossible an efficient parcel post. We ought to legislate with a view to a national order of things, and this requires the express rate of railway pay which declines to about 3 cents a ton-mile as the journey becomes prolonged. The postal railway pay would be not less than 8 cents a ton-mile, no matter how long the But this feature of the subject is so technical that I must ask Members to read a study I have prepared on the subject, if their interest is sufficient; a study which covers all the topics involved in acquiring the express companies and merging them in the postal system, with the verification material necessary for the student. It is enough to add that without the express railway contract and its pay advantage we could not economically move the small shipment.

Now, I am coming, gentlemen, to two topics which constitute the objective points of my address, and I find I have, perhaps, not moments enough left in which to state them.

Mr. GARRETT. I am informed that the gentleman's time will expire in about 4 minutes and that he can complete his statement in about 15 minutes additional, and I ask unanimous consent that he have that much of additional time.

Mr. MANN. How much time has the gentleman remaining? The CHAIRMAN. Four minutés. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Lewis] have 15 additional minutes in which to complete his speech. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A NEW INDUSTRY-SUBURBAN GARDENING.

Mr. LEWIS. What would the results of a system of postal express be? Well, the mere articulating of the farm and countryside with the town and railways by the postal van would, it seems to me, be of very great social importance. would lead to a new industry—the suburban gardener. the trucker must devote considerable time to transporting his produce, however little, to the market, and for this purpose he must provide himself a transportation system, however small his excess produce may be. This means a horse, wagon, a barn, and their expense and labor of maintenance even during the unproductive season, to the gardener much the largest part of the year. And yet in an economic sense his work of transportation is the smallest element of his service to the public, although it requires for the gardener the maximum of expense and upkeep. service of a horse he could hire as occasion required. this extra capital and expense keeps thousands of men tired of city employment, perhaps thrown on the scrap heap at 50 years of age, out of this field of industry. Take a coal miner at about 60 years of age. He is still an athlete, but his lungs become incapacitated to breathe the vitiated mine air. He is willing to work and could well go into this gardening to support himself, buying a few acres and a cottage near the mines where land is cheap. He could raise four or five hundred dollars for this purpose, but the purchase and maintenance of a transportation system make the whole proposition impractica-It comes back again to the transportation of the shipble. It comes back again to the transportation of the sup-ment in quantities to suit the consumer. If the postal van passed his place two or three times a week, he could send such shipments to his patrons direct, at cost of service, and the economic barrier of an individual transportation system is removed. "Four acres and independence" has been a dream of the poet. It is apparent that it may become a fact through the postal van. And what a fact. Shifting the unwholesome tendency of population to the nickelodeon civilization of the cities back to the country. Great good could be done, certainly, by opening this gate of opportunity.

EFFECT ON THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

There is another objective point, and it is the great point, I earnestly submit, in the Goeke bill. By taking over the express companies and merging the service in the postal system we not only articulate the railways and towns and cities with the producing rural centers, but emancipate the small shipment, the shipment in sizes to suit the consumer, from the prohibitive express practices and enable it to move direct from the farm to the consumer through the postal van, supplemented by the railway when needed. And what would the effect of this be? As the President has stated, the high cost of living is bound up in this legislation. I insert here a table showing the price of 2 dozen eggs, a dressed fowl, 3 pounds of butter, a like amount of country sausage, a country-cured ham, and a half bushel of apples at the farm. They sold at a farm near this city at $2.85, but when they got to the consumer the cost was $5.55.

Table showing effect on high cost of living and prices of the vital necessaries of a system of transportation direct from the producer on the farm to the consumer in the towns and the cities.

Total Reduction in transportation cost if all ordered together	5. 55-5. 75	3.71	2.85	3.24	3.49	3.59

Note.—The last three columns represent the price of the shipment with the estimated cost of transportation added to the price at which the article sold in the country, as stated.

Now, with the postal van and the railway articulating the farm with the town and consumer there is absolutely no reason why a prudent housewife should not order the entire list directly from the farmer at the price at which he sold the articles, the postman collecting the price on delivery and remitting it back to the farm. The truth is that the entire problem with regard to nearly all the table necessaries has developed in consequence of the absence of direct-to-consumer transportation facilities for the shipment in quantities to suit the consumer. The above list practically covers the needs of an average family for a week, excepting sugar and bread and a few such things; and it is apparent that some 40 per cent of the consumer's table bill can be saved. Give the small shipment its transportation rights, and Members of this House will have provided the means by which the prudent and husbanding spirit of the workers of our country can give themselves a measure of relief.

We ought to do something on this subject, I will say to Members of the House. The inertia of the last 50 years in this country, the Tory's acts of omission and commission, have borne their consequences long enough. We are in a serious situation when a workingman, working full time at full pay, finds himself unable to make both ends meet at a time when wages are perhaps as high, or higher, than they have ever been before. I trust this Congress will take hold of this subject in the patriotic spirit of which it is capable on emergency occasions. It has been said that no crisis has arisen in our history so far that the statesmanship of our country was not there to meet it in an adequate way. In this crisis—for a crisis it is, let me say, a crisis that threatens the stability of our country within 10 years—I pray God that that statesmanship and patriotic spirit may not be absent upon this subject. [Prolonged applause.]

APPENDIX.

PROBABLE COST OF ACQUIRING EXPRESS COMPANIES.

An inspection of the balance sheet of the capital of the express companies shows that the items which are directly devoted to the service, and really function as express company assets, are as follows:

Real property	$14, 932, 169 7, 381, 405 138, 210 5, 836, 666 10, 877, 369
Total invested capital	39, 165, 819

The balance sheet shows other assets of $147,055,554 not devoted to the function and which are wholly separable from the express service per se, not necessary to be acquired, but which may be retained by the companies without impairment of their values.
